Bonnies in town for vital hoop clash

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Parity has indeed taken roost in the Atlantic 10 conference this year. With the exception of the two Philadelphia schools, Temple and St. Joseph's, the Atlantic 10 conference is one that is tightly packed from third to tenth place.

"The league is very balanced, with exception of the two Philadelphia schools," UMass head coach Ron Gerlufsen. "The teams need a little edge (home court). The home court is a added boost. Teams have to play very well to win on the road."

So in comes to town the St. Bonaventure Bonnies, whose last win, ironically, came on the road against Rhode Island. St. Bonaventure also holds a conference record of 5-5 and is tied for third place with West Virginia, George Washington, Duquesne.

UMass, Rhode Island and Penn State are tied for seventh with 3-7 records.

Tonight's 7:30 meeting, which can be heard on WMUA 91.1 FM, is a big, big meeting. "It's really our most important game of the year. We're going to start a stretch that has a lot of home games," the coach remarked.

So many home games that UMass plays six of their last nine games at home. "We have a most favorable schedule. We have to capitalize on it. We'll count on the crowds at the Cage and their enthusiasm to help carry us through the end of the season," Gerlufsen said.

So, the task starts against St. Bonaventure and it will not be an easy one. The Bonnies crushed UMass in New York by a 81-64 score last month after taking a 14-2 lead to open the game.

And the trick will be keeping the ball in the hands of freshman guard Carl Smith. "St. Bonaventure did a good job defensively keeping the ball away from Carl and it disrupted our offensive game," Gerlufsen said. "But we'll be prepared for that."

And the starting five will be prepared. Edwin Green, Donald Russell, John Hempel and Horace Neysmith will again be the starting lineup and will have to face the likes of senior guard Mike Sheehey, guard Norman Clarke (22 points in the first game vs UMass) and Alvin Lott (18 points).

"We have to shut down their perimeter game, "Gerlufsen, "We have to negate their outside game."

UMass, who is 7-11 overall, features two conference leaders. At one end of the spectrum, Green towers with 41 blocks while speedy Carl leads the league in assists with 130. Smith is currently ranked in the top ten in the nation.

St. Bonaventure will also have to deal with UMass' leading scorer John Hempel, 15.4 points a game. Russell has been showing signs of coming out of his season scoring slump by scoring 18 points in Massachusetts last two games against URI and Penn. State.

Bobby Braun, who came off the bench to score a career high 15 points against Rhode Island has been working hard in practice, according to Gerlufsen. "Bobby has been working very hard in practice. And the first indication we had of Russell breaking out of his slump was by how hard he was working at practice," said Gerlufsen.

So for the Minutemen, the drive to the Atlantic 10 playoffs begins tonight and the goal for UMass is to finish sixth or higher. If they don't they face a playoff to reach the Atlantic 10 quarter-finals.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS – UMass is 6-1 at home this season, 1-10 on the road. After losing six of seven, UMass has won two of their last three. TRIVIA: Name these athletes who graced the covers of Sports Illustrated, Time and Newsweek in the years from 1969-73. There are five. Answer tomorrow.

UMass nips Dartmouth snaps streak in OT win

By ELLEN RICHARD

Victory is always sweet, and it's even sweeter when a seven game losing streak has been broken in the process as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team found out in defeating Dartmouth on Tuesday, 69-65.

The Minutewomen ran off to an early lead and never looked back and were ahead 34-25 at the half. UMass, which now sports an 8-11 record, controlled the game with a disciplined offensive attack. Barbara Hebel scored 19 points for UMass before having to leave the game in overtime due to a sprained ankle. Freshman center Karen Fitzgerald scooped in 12 more points for the Minutewomen.

UMass held the Big Green down for most of the second half until Dartmouth's Sue Murray scored with five seconds remaining in the game to tie the game at 58 a piece.

The Minutewomen held on in the five minute overtime scoring three quick baskets for the 64-58 lead. After Dartmouth retaliated with five points, the Minutewomen's Jerrie Bernier nabbed an offensive rebound to put UM back in the driver's seat and the team went on to seal the victory.

"We were up for most of the game," UMass guard Wendy Ward said. "We were able to keep our composure. It is like a turning point. We played better each game (during the losing streak).

The Minutewomen try to keep on the winning track as they will return home to host the University of Maine on Saturday at Curry Hicks Cage.

Track stars shine at Princeton

By M.E. MURRAY

Members of the University of Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track teams traveled to New Jersey last weekend, participating at the Princeton University Invitational.

Both squads turned in good showings against some very tough competition from the New York and New Jersey areas.

Senior Rod Laflamme was a bright spot for the men, winning his division in the 3,000 meter with a fine time of 8:28; meanwhile, Kayla Morrison highlighted the women's dashes, making it to the semi-finals of the 55 meter-dash with a quick 7.28.

Morrison will be busy this weekend as she travels to New York City to represent UMass at the prestigious Bud Light Invitational on Fri[illegible] she'll be in Worcester with the rest of the team at the Holy Cross Invitational.

The men's distance medley relay, consisting of Ted White, Neil Osborne, Jan Novak, and Paul Stanislawzyk, led throughout their race before being edged into the third spot, less than one second behind the leader.

White and Novak again figured in the two-mile relay along with John Keelan and John Lynch. The group ran in the championship and came in eighth.

Sports Log

Just a few thoughts . . .

With Sarajevo now being the focal point of the sports world, all eyes are on the U.S. hockey team in their quest to repeat that season in 1980 which took America by storm. It all started with that tie with Sweden on the first game, then other countries beaten, one by one. Finally, victories over the Soviet Union and Finland . . . I can still hear Al Michaels almost screaming when we finally got the gold (If The Way We Were starts breaking out in your mind, you're not alone).

The reason why I'm reflecting on 1980 is because 1984 doesn't look as promising. The loss to Canada, 4-2, who still must be bitter after losing two of its players due to U.S. pressure, puts incredible pressure on the hockey team. They must win the rest of their games in order to get into the medal round. Although they are not definitely out, chances are not good that they will make Sports Illustrated's Sportsman of the Year.

Other Olympic news: a "friendly" rivalry is developing between two American figure skaters, Rosalyn Summers and Elaine Zayak. Most people are out there saying, "Who gives a #$&!", and I must admit that figure skating ranks right up there with auto racing in terms of excitement. In both sports, the most exciting moments are when somebody cracks up. . . But we should see some interesting competition between the two. Both are very good and the winner will follow Dorothy Hamill and Peggy Flemming into skating stardom—"Ice Capades with the Muppets."

Back to hockey, the pros are past the midway point with the early favorite being the Bruins, no not the Islanders or Oilers. Edmonton showed that they are a one-man team as evidenced by their folding up without Mr. Gretzky. The Bruins have handled the Islanders throughout the season and when they get back all the injured players, they'll be tough.

Likewise for the Celts. They simply are the best team in basketball. What makes them so good is their depth. Los Angeles, Portland, or Utah will probably represent the West, but that looks to be a formality. K.C. Jones always seems to put the right combinations in at the right time. . . The All-Star game was fantastic, as was the Slam Dunk and Old-Timers games. I thought Dominique Wilkins was going to take over with some of his incredible jams, but Larry Nance out did the Doctor for the title. It really was a good show.

College hoop is just overtime after overtime in one of the more exciting seasons in recent time. It's anybody's guess as to who'll win it but watch out for Louisville. They are always able to peak at the right time and Denny Crum isn't among the all-time winningest college coaches for nothing. . . The toughest conference has to be the ACC, with the worst team being North Carolina State, the defending champs. They will be well represented in the tourney.

Finally: UMass hoop is in pretty good shape. If we keep on winning at home and steal another one on the road, we'll end up with a pretty respectable record. The tough games will be St. Bonaventure tonight, and Temple and St. Joseph's later . . . Gotta like the way Carl Smith has led this club. This freshman shows a lot of poise and guts by wanting the ball for the last shot. He's also among the national leaders in assists . . . But, can he ride the luge?

No more need be said.

Faculty union gets raises in 3 year contract

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

A new contract which provides for salary increases and a discrimination grievance procedure for faculty and librarians was ratified by union members on the Amherst and Boston campuses of the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

Members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the faculty and librarians' union on the two campuses, who have worked since June without a contract, yesterday and Wednesday voted 403-32 in favor of the three-year agreement, MSP officials said.

The contract, which provides for salary increases of up to 28 percent, will cost the University about $30 million over three years, MSP officials said.

"I think this is a good solid contract, with a good solid pay package," said James Boylan, president of MSP on the Amherst campus.

The salary package provides for across-the-board increases totaling 5 percent the first year, 5 percent the second year, six percent the third year and merit raises.

Pay is retroactive to Sept. 25, 1983, but faculty and librarians will not receive bigger pay checks until May or June because of the various government channels which the salary appropriation must encounter, Boylan said.

In addition, the union now has an internal grievance procedure for filing discrimination charges.

Boylan said the long awaited grievance procedure and the salary increases would "make things work better on campus."

"Every agreement is a compromise," Boylan said. "I think that the University got something and I think we got quite a few things."

An "educational needs fund" was also established with the ratification of the contract, which will provide money for faculty research and travel, Boylan said.

The new grievance procedure and "educational needs fund" will go into operation immediately, Boylan said.

The contract was approved by the UMass Board of Trustees last week, and must now meet the approval of the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Neil Harrington, a spokesperson for the regents, said in a telephone interview yesterday, that the regents' approval of the agreement is a technicality, and expects the contract to be passed at the Board's next meeting.

After the Regents approve the contract, the Governor's Office of Employee Relations will review it, and pass it on to the Governor. The Massachusetts Legislature must then approve the salary appropriation.

The last retroactive salaries stemming from contract negotiations took more than a year after the expiration of the agreement to reach employees, Boylan said.

About 1800 MSP members were eligible to vote on both campuses for the contract which involved about 45 negotiation sessions during the year-long bargaining talks, Boylan said.

"This wasn't a big breakthrough contract," Boylan said. "I think it's a maturing contract agreement."

This is the third contract which the union and University has negotiated since 1977, Boylan said. The MSP was voted on to campus in 1976, and the latest contract negotiations were the first not to need the assistance of a mediator, he said.

SGA disagrees with activities fund proposal

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association members are upset over a budget program statement which they claim will give the administration "sole responsibility" for overseeing the Student Activities Trust Fund.

In the past, the SGA has been established within the program statement as having a "clear and consistent" role in control of trustfund money, said Chris Sullivan, Senate Speaker. Sullivan said the wording now redefines that role.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has scheduled a Monday afternoon meeting with SGA members to discuss the statement.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said the statement, in its present form, is "a slap in the face" of the student government and an attempt by the administration to take control of the fund.

"It is basically taking what was formerly dual control between the students and administration and turning sole responsibility over to administration," he said.

Sullivan said the administration, with this new statement, could potentially exercise a veto over SGA approved activities.

"They could, for example, say 'this concert is against administrative policy' and then stop the event," he said.

The program statement was drafted by Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for Student Affairs. Sullivan said he met with Madson periodically over January to formulate a budget statement which represented both student and administrative rights.

"It is basically taking what was formerly dual control between the students and turning sole responsibility over to the administration."

Eric Nitzsche
SGA Treasurer

"It was my understanding that we had come to an agreement," Sullivan said.

He said Madson showed him a "completely different draft. I think this showed disrespect for students in general," he said.

Sullivan said Madson told him he was planning to submit the statement to the Budget Office Thursday, but later decided to wait until after the Monday meeting.

Bill Collins, a Southwest area senator, said the issue was brought before the senate Wednesday, and "the entire senate body is strongly united" against the budget program statement.

"We are against the administration taking total control of SATF money," he said.

Nitzsche said he hopes Monday night's meeting will bring a positive solution to the problem, and that the administration "will recognize the role the SGA has been playing" on behalf of the students for a long time.

UMass, local stores check food for EDB content

By PETE ZAKON
Collegian Correspondent

Despite a Suffolk Superior Court ruling yesterday to lift the ban on EDB (ethyl dibromide) contaminated products, local stores will not sell those foods until the state's appeal is decided on.

University of Massachusetts Food Services and area supermarkets searched their inventories this week for foods on the state Department of Health's list of 135 foods containing more than 10 parts of the crop-spraying chemical per billion parts product.

Marie Cappadonna, director of University Food Services, reported Wednesday that her staff had checked all stock in the dining commons and Munchie's convenience stores for products containing EDB.

Cappadonna said he staff has found no food products in stock that are listed, by brand name and code, on the public health department's list.

Cappadonna said her "game plan" would be to pull immediately any products on current or future official lists of contaminated foods that may be delivered to UMass Food Services.

Cappadona also reported that to her knowledge no one has returned for refund any food product on the list to any Munchie's store on campus.

Louis' Foods, Inc. of Amherst will refund any coded product unused or partially used and determined by the state Department of Public Health to contain the pesticide EDB, courtesy booth Clerk Susan Lynch said Wednesday.

Lynch said Louis' will also refund any unused products of the same brand and description — but displaying different code numbers — as those listed as containing EDB.

Louis' Grocery Manager Dave Kaminsky said he found not a single item banned by the Massachusetts Public Health Council in his store. Lynch said she recalled one product returned.

Louis' has posted a list of products with detectable EDB in the store.

Mike MacDonald of The Amherst Price Chopper said the store had received some inquiries about EDB and has gladly given refunds.

The Price Chopper's main office in Schenectady, New York notified its Amherst supermarket about the problem of EDB-contaminated products "immediately," according to MacDonald.

US Marine transfer to be realized soon

WASHINGTON -- Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, declaring "We are not leaving Lebanon," said today a tentative plan calls for transferring 500 U.S. Marines out of Beirut by the end of the month and then assessing the situation.

Weinberger, testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said: "I want to make it clear that the transfer of Marines does not in any way serve as a giving up of our goals in Lebanon."

President Reagan announced Tuesday that the Marines, now numbering 1,500 near the Beirut International Airport, would be pulled back to ships off-shore.

Weinberger said, "It is probable the first Marines will be moved out before the end of the month."

The tentative plan, he said, is for 500 troops to be put aboard ships by the end of February and then to "see what situation developed with regard to the balance."

Weinberger thus left open the possibility several hundred Marines could remain in Beirut for an undetermined amout of time. At another point, he said: "We're not leaving Lebanon."

Congress may pass acid rain control measure

WASHINGTON — Massachusetts governor Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday Congress may pass a full-fledged acid rain control measure this year, even though the Reagan administration has called for more research instead.

Dukakis told the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee that damage from acid rain has reached emergency proportions in his state and, in the long run, it will cost less to curb the pollution that causes acid rain than to repair the damage from it.

"I think it's the best year to pass this bill," Dukakis told a group of reporters later in the day. "Interest is very high."

Dukakis said one of the keys to whether Congress will act this year is whether the National Governors' Association recommends passage of an acid rain bill.

The governors' group is meeting later this month and its executive committee is scheduled to take up the acid rain issue, Dukakis said.

"I think the Congress is very much interested in what the governors are going to do on this," Dukakis said. "I'm cautiously optimistic the governors will act on this and that will have a great impact in the Congress."

In response to a reporter's question, Dukakis said if the governors fail to act, or vote down a recommendation, the action would be a setback to the possibility of Congress approving an acid rain package.

Dukakis asked the Senate committee to consider a proposal of the Coalition of Northeastern Governors that would finance acid rain pollution control measures through a trust fund made up of a tax on electricity and fees paid by polluters.

That would take some of the financial burden off the Midwest and the Appalachian coal states, Dukakis said, and would make the plan more acceptable to those regions.

"We've put together a proposal that recognizes equity, fairness and some substantial sharing of the burden," he said.

Sen. Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., chairman of the committee, has opposed taxing electricity.

But Dukakis said he felt the only way an acid rain control bill could pass in Congress is if it contained financial help for the high-sulfur coal states, many of which have been the hardest hit in the nation's economic recession.

Superior Court judge lifts state EDB ban

BOSTON - Massachusetts' emergency ban on the sale of food tainted with the suspected cancer-causing pesticide EDB was lifted Thursday by a Superior Court judge, and the state quickly appealed.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Hiller Zobel granted the grain industry request to stop the ban, saying the state "has bound her own hands" from imposing tougher standards than the federal government.

The move suspends the state's toughest-in-the-nation ban on selling products containing 10 parts per billion or more of ethylene dibromide, or EDB, a chemical widely used as an agricultural pesticide since 1948.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has recommended allowing significantly higher EDB levels.

Charging EDB is "one of the most carcinogenic substances ever tested," Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti reacted by announcing a direct appeal to the state's highest court to overturn Zobel's decision.

Bellotti said the judge "failed to adequately weigh public health interests." He said Assistant Attorney General Carl Valvo had secured a hearing before a single justice of the state Supreme Court. The hearing is scheduled for 2:15 p.m. Friday before Justice Paul Liacos.

"You're weighing pecuniary interests--money interests--of the grain institute against the health of the people of our state, and I think when you do that there's no real contest," he said. "You have to err, if at all, on the side of caution."

Anticipating a state appeal, industry attorney Thayer Fremont-Smith said, "I'm hopeful that the Court of Appeals will agree with Judge Zobel. We think his legal reasoning is very sound and sensible.

Judge asks station for 'Big Dan' tape

FALL RIVER, Mass. - A Providence television station Thursday rejected a judge's request to see a news tape that is a central issue in a motion to dismiss charges against one of six men accused of taking part in a highly publicized gang rape.

Superior Court Judge William Young sent a letter to WLNE-TV on Thursday, asking to see a copy of a news story broadcast Tuesday on jury selection in the Big Dan's rape case.

Attorney Francis O'Boy, who represents defendant Virgilio Medeiros, claimed the news story, which included a brief interview with Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina, was "highly prejudicial," and "misleading."

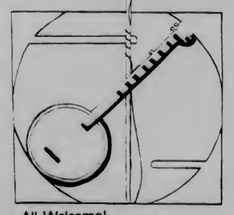
O'Boy asked the court to dismiss charges against his client because the news report could affect the ability of potential jurors to remain impartial.

Station officials Wednesday said they would likely comply with the judge's request. But on Thursday, managing editor Dave Layman said the station wants the judge to issue a subpoena before it would consider giving up the tape.

"It appears that it might become evidence in the case and our feeling is that the proper form for that is a subpoena," said Layman. "We are concerned that the process go forward in the proper manner."

The news report discussed the legal issue of "joint venture," a clause in the law that allows the prosecution of a suspect for a crime he may not have directly committed if it can be proved that his involvement aided the crime.

Woman pleads innocent to father's murder



SPRINGFIELD, Mass. - The daughter of a Bondsville dairy farmer, found shot to death in his milking barn last April, pleaded innocent Thursday to murder charges.

Pamela Domey Rinault, 30, of Thorndike, who worked with her father in the family-run dairy farm, answered "not guilty" in a loud, clear voice after a secret indictment accusing her of killing her father was opened in Superior Court.

Noting that Mrs. Rinault had two young children at home and had driven straight to the courthouse Thursday afternoon after being served a summons at her job, Judge John F. Moriarity allowed her to remain free on $25,000 personal surety to be posted by her mother Friday morning.

Professor recommends withdrawal from Nicaragua

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor recently joined 45 academics and researchers in recommending that the United States withdraw its military forces from Nicaragua and emphasize diplomacy to prevent war in the region.

Carmen Diana Deere, a UMass economics professor and expert on Nicaragua, is on the three-person executive board of the 45 member Policy Alternatives for the Caribbean and Central America (PACCA).

PACCA is a group of Central America experts from across the country who volunteered their academic skills to help chart a course of peace in Central America.

"We became concerned that if we didn't start to put our minds towards an alternative, the policy of the Reagan administration would lead us to war," Deere said.

Their findings have been compiled in a report, Changing Course: A Blueprint for Peace in Central America and the Caribbean, which will be published next month.

Changing Course suggests that a new policy concerning Central America be adopted to prevent the region from becoming a "battleground for global East-West competition."

The current policy has failed, the report states, "because it is built upon false premises. It places a Cold War context upon social revolutions long in the making."

Changing Course recommends that the United States' national security interest of keeping Soviet bases out of this hemisphere is best served by controlling "what has become an almost Pavlovian response to revolution."

"A mature understanding of our security requires that we come to terms with historical movements and forces, and not seek to counter them through military intervention," the report states.

Creating elections to cover up a regime in El Salvador that relies on death squads to deal with the opposition is not the promotion of human rights, according to the PACCA proposal.

"Democratic institutions can be undermined as much by burlesquing them as by suppressing them," it states.

Deere said one of the reasons the Kissinger Commission came up with a completely different set of recommendations is because they did not discuss the covert war in Nicaragua.

"If the information on the war in Nicaragua cannot be made public, then they can't deal with the most important issue, that of the United States financing and being directly militarily involved in a war against an independent country--a war that goes against every law and every treaty we have," Deere said.

Another reason, she said, was that the members of the Kissinger Commission, in a "whirlwind" trip through Central America, did not speak with the representatives of the majority of the population.

"They met with the military and government officials. They never met with the representatives of the peasants' organizations or of the women's organizations or the representatives of the Agriculture of Nicaragua to help them promote the role of women in the rural communities.

Today, Deere will be taking part in a panel discussion on "A definition of the world economic crisis--its political and economic roots," part of the three day conference on the world's political economy at Mount Holyoke College. It will begin at 1 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium.

Unlike the Kissinger Commission, Deere said, PACCA is made up of people who have been studying Central America for a long time and are "understanding of the kinds of problems those countries are having."

Deere, who has a doctorate in agricultural economics, has been to Nicaragua 12 times in the last three years. Because of her expertise on women in developing agrarian countries, she was asked by the Minister of Achievement for women 'not a fad'

by DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

The historical willingness of many women to challenge gender barriers and an organized political movement has led to a current atmosphere of "options and choice" for women in education and professional achievement.

Miriam Slater and Pennina Glazier, professors of History at Hampshire College, said at Smith College Thursday night that although women are still underrepresented in the professions, the trend towards women in the sciences and professional occupations is "not a fad."

"By profession we mean those occupations which are achievement based, have an ideology of service to the public and which necessarily regulate themselves," said Glazier.

According to historical research done by Glazier and Slater, with the rise of the professions in the period from 1890 to 1920 and the concurrent rise of medical and graduate schools also came new problems on how to "achieve control over the creations of new generations of experts."

While comparatively easy to find reasons to exclude many male applicants to graduate schools on the basis of class, race or religion, the exclusion of white, upper-class, protestant women presented another problem," said Glazier.

According to the research, mechanisms soon developed to exclude women from graduate school altogether, as in the case of Harvard University which has allowed women into its medical school only since 1946 and into the law school since 1953.

"They just threw applications out as soon as they were received" said Glazier.

Later when women managed to get accepted and graduate from professional school, they were still denied full professional status.

"A woman graduate needed internships, clerking apprenticeships, admission to the Bar and access to libraries, all of which were easily denied her," Slater said.

"Today's women live longer, bear fewer children and are joined by men who are beginning to be aware that equality of opportunity is not only a female problem," Glazier said.

UMass to give business information

By KATHY HART
Collegian Correspondent

Starting today, business and industry in the state can start looking to the University of Massachusetts for important information.

The Massachusetts Information Scanning Unit, a UMass program offering businesses rapid, inexpensive delivery of public information, will begin aiding industry in the state today.

MISU is a joint venture of the School of Management and the University library and is based in Goodell library. To use the service, business information seekers from large or small firms merely call and request the information they need, from market research to demographic statistics or government reports.

The MISU researcher then goes to one of the more than 220 data bases to find the information needed.

Once the information is scanned and retrieved, the unit's document delivery service will put the information in the client's hands within 48 hours. Most information tracking services take from two weeks to a month to deliver copies of requested books and article reprints, said MISU head Salvatore M. Meringolo.

"This service is going to facilitate the use of the University library resources by business...The main objective of MISU is to broaden the University's role as a public service, and expand its relationship with private business and industry," Meringolo said.

MISU also offers an information surveillance system, which can help businesses keep up-to-date on marketing, and prices. The system even monitors competitors, sending out monthly reports at a company's request.

MISU has access to information on just about any topic imaginable, says Meringolo. If the topic isn't suited to data-base researching, the MISU researcher will do the legwork necessary to get information from reference sources.

Casino night, dances planned

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

A series of new social events will hit the Campus Center this spring.

A casino night benefitting the United Way Foundation and a series of Friday evening dances at the Blue Wall have been tentatively scheduled for this semester, Mike Reilly, board of governors chair said last night at the BOG's first meeting of the new term.

The casino night, scheduled for March 3, will include a variety of gambling games such as blackjack, roulette, and craps, while drink specials will be held throughout the evening.

The event will be semi-formal, and the BOG is currently looking for celebrities to run some of the games.

Among some of the people the board is trying to get are Steve Nelson of the New England Patriots, Bill Cosby, Ruby Vine, Larry "Bud" Melman, Joe Carvel, and Tommy Van Scoy.

In the other scheduled event, Jerry Quill, treasurer of the BOG, said that on Feb. 24 the Blue Wall will be "transformed into a wizbang Studio 54 on Friday nights including disco lights and a first-rate dance floor."

Quill also said talk is underway to divide the Blue Wall in half on certain nights by means of a petition in order to produce a "less barnyard" atmosphere in the club.

"If we can get the barstools and the petition into the Blue Wall, it could create a pub-like atmosphere in there, and on nights when big rock bands aren't in, students would enjoy a cozy atmosphere," Quill said.

Besides these events, Quill said UMass students could look forward to a "veritable potpourri" of upcoming events.

Hampden use questioned

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

The Southwest Area Government (SWAG) assembly was informed last night of the decision by officials at University of Massachusetts Food Services to move its large computer equipment into the craft shop and I.D. shop in the Hampden Dining Commons.

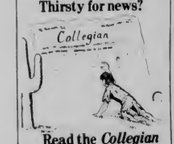
SWAG co-president Mike Bean, in an effort to brief new and returning Southwest representatives, named the Food Services decision as one of a few challenges facing SWAG this semester.

That decision to take over what Bean and co-president Dave McCarthy believe is student space was one that should not have been made without first consulting the students.

Bean said the decision has far more serious implications than most believe and indicated in his report to the assembly last night that the issue is not closed.

In other business, Bean and co-president Dave McCarthy said it is SWAG's job to put pressure on the parking officers to repave parking lots 21 and 22.

Bean described the parking situation as "absurd. There are potholes and sharp rocks, and we hope to see the parking office re-prioritize their paving plans," he said.



In addition, Bean said reserved parking or university employees in lot 21 was expanded without notifying permit holders.

"All of a sudden I see two more rows reserved and some spots are going unused. They did it without notification, and it seems unfair," he said. "Especially when you find a parking ticket on your windshield and didn't know about the restriction."

Good questions arise

To the Editor,

Congratulations to Peter Abraham for writing one of the most concise and effective pieces of news reporting, (his "News Analysis" published in Wednesday's Collegian), I have seen in this paper in my four years here at UMass.

Jackson's part of History

To the Editor,

Regarding Peter Abraham's news analysis of Feb. 8.

It is amazing to see how Abraham's criticisms seem to arise only in the face of doubt. If Mr. Abraham is deeply compelled to provide students with information about what their money is financing, I suggest he research the whole picture and not just sketch out his own biases.

Students paid thousands of dollars for repairs on the chancellor's house. Students funded the largest (monetarily speaking) little 'mini' store. Furthermore, for years a large chunk of the Student Government Association's (SGA) budget has gone to UPC, whether or not they fill their quota of 'good line-ups', as long as they keep a running deficit. Funds have also been provided for other performances when the nature of the performance was previously unknown. All recipients of such funds were not students.

The point is that students have constantly funded proceedings while being totally ignorant of allocation procedures as well as being totally removed from any decision making process.

Peter Abraham chooses to hit the limelight by making himself shine with the print of the front pages. By doing so he attacks a major event which aroused numerous people, many of whom pay their SATF quota, and do in fact have a right to choose who they want to come and speak. No reasons implied, the eloquence of an orator does not depend upon the conditions or topics of their performance.

Jesse Jackson did in fact start off Black History month with a boom. He addressed Black History and more importantly the historical factors affecting present situations. The realm of discussion did encompass cultural, political, socio-economic, and historical issues of humanity, all of which are directly related to the sentiments surrounding Black History Month. It would be violently ignorant to pretend that Jesse Jackson is not the presidential candidate that he is. Should he have come and acted as if he was not the man, who besides being an extremely competent candidate, is an important figure in Black history as it moves through the present? I believe this was Abraham's notion, to seperate one's beliefs from one's self.

Mr. Abraham should first analyze his own realities before trying to divide and condemn what is meaningful for others. Maybe self-analysis could provide some insight about the extent to which his cultural biases push him to interogate such a humane performance eliciting hope and harmony.

Reagan plays roulette again

The Reaganized Environmental Protection Agency's allowance of EDB in the food supply, soil, and water is another in a series of steps toward increased hazards to the public health. It has occurred because of backward movement in regards to the Environmental Protection Agency's original aim, to clean up our environment. What the unjust policies of the Reagan Administration have meant seldom make headlines, but the facts and the attitude of those "calling the shots" are alarming.

Thomas Pitoniak

Ethylene dibromide, in case you haven't heard, is still used as a pesticide by growers of citrus fruit and grains. (Wheat, corn, and oats are all grain products.) This is in spite of the fact that the EPA itself already "considers" EDB one of its most toxic substances under study. In response to the rising awareness of its widespread use, the EPA has hastily recommended levels that make a mockery of the old levels saying, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." I venture to say that the levels of 175 and 900 ppb are too high to indicate any serious commitment to the interests of the consumer.

William Ruckelshaus, head of the Environmental Protection Agency has, while downplaying the issue, made little mention of the specifics involved in last year's so-called ban on EDB. EDB was found to have contaminated groundwater supplies in six states. In response, the EPA ordered an end to its use on soil in citrus orchards. The first ban called for a "phase-out" of its other primary use, fumigation. But in great respect for the selfish means of the gargantuan food industry, the EPA permitted the use of this toxic chemical while the usual endless appeals took place. With Ruckelshaus' feeble refusal to offer guidelines for its use on citrus fruit, its use there as a fumigant has survived two "virtual bans." The new ban most of all affects its spraying EDB into stored grain and milling equipment to fight infestation. This practice was never halted, regardless of the knowledge of EDB's extreme toxicity.

This is not the only chemical with which the Reagan Administration has pursued a Russian Roulette policy. Two weeks after EDB's initial ban last October, the EPA decided to cancel any effort to prohibit use of the chemical Lindane (hexachlorobenzene). In 1980 a proposal to ban Lindane was put forth by the Carter Administration, because of evidence linking the substance to cancer, birth defects, and harm to aquatic life. This chemical, known to be dangerous to living things, is now more free than ever to splash forth in shampoo upon the heads of children afflicted with lice.

One of the most revealing events in the history of the Reagan EPA concerns two compounds containing dioxin, and the Dow Chemical Corporation. Two herbicides, 2,4,5-T and silvex, were cancelled late last year from any of its remaining uses; this is undoubtedly spectacular, given an EPA that has proposed only one hazardous substance regulation under Reagan (cowering arsenic). What gives this ban less in principle than it has in effect is the fact that cancellation took place only when Dow, a company that staunchly advocated their use, decided to withdraw from the hearings. At that point, Dow Chemical, not the incapacitated EPA, requested cancellation. The EPA under Reagan has yet to announce any new substances hazardous, although the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has declared 11 of the 37 chemicals the EPA has been studying for six years as carcinogenic.

The latest news about EDB is unfortunate, since the original ban on EDB should have been effected last October; a proposal to ban EDB was put before an apathetic Reagan Administration as far back as 1981. President Reagan's frequent talk of limiting government "interference" is a convenient way of excusing his Administration's national irresponsibility. The environmental policies and tolerance of industry inaction that characterize this administration have directly led to the unwarrantable endangerment of the public health.

Jonathan Edwards enjoyable

JONATHAN EDWARDS and THE JOHN COSTER BAND
Rusty Nail, Sunderland
Saturday, Feb. 4

by SHELIA CLINTON
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday was a very enjoyable evening at the Rusty Nail in Sunderland. The occasion was a concert with an old time favorite, Jonathan Edwards. The cover charge of $5.00 was very reasonable for what proved to be a full evening of top notch entertainment.

Opening the show for Jonathan Edwards was the John Coster Band. John Coster is a skilled singer and songwriter from Connecticut. After an absence of several months it was a pleasure to have them perform in the area once again. The band opened with "Old Stones," a ballad that received a lot of airplay on WRSI about a year ago. The enlarged dance floor at the Nail was put to use, but not to the extent that it was when Jonathan came on.

Jonathan Edwards is a personable entertainer. His relaxed nature seems to transform a large night club to a cozy living room. He opened with a reflective song called, "Hey Brothers and Sisters," about life inside a prison, and the audience listened appreciatively. Two other musicians accompanied him on Saturday. Kenny White on piano and Jimmy Biggins on bongoes and saxophone.

Many of the songs that Jonathan sang on Saturday were familiar, such as "Sunshine," "Don't Cry Blue" and "Athens County". However, there were just as many unfamiliar and newer songs. The range in his style is impressive. Quiet ballads, rock and roll, funny songs, and moving love songs were all performed with equal enthusiasm. "I'll Follow My Heart" was an especially lovely song. He followed that with an energetic version of "She Wants You Back Again."

Although Jonathan Edwards would best be categorized as a folk musician, he is by no means "too mellow." While Saturday's show had a "down home" feel, it was definitely a lively night. Some of his songs ask for participation from the audience, such as "Shanty" ("We're gonna lay around the shanty and put a good buzz on."). All are meant for dancing, and each triggers some emotion. The music scene has taken many turns since Edwards began playing. Rather than seeming old, his music is refreshing. Edwards uses his music as a vehicle to express how much he enjoys life. And that's not bad at all.

"Proud" comes to UMass

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

"Proud" starring Glynn Turman and Phyllis Bailey will open the ninth series of plays for the 1984 Spring season of the Third World Theater at the University of Massachusetts on Saturday February 11 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Writing by playwright C. Bernard Jackson, "Proud" deals with the moral and social issues an inspiring actor is confronted with when he witnesses a brutal police beating of a Chicano youth. He must then make a decision between his career and his conscience.

Third World Theater's production of "Proud" marks the first area appearance of the Los Angeles Inner City Cultural Center on the east coast. Co-founded by Jackson, the Cultural Center has been a pioneer in Black theater for 14 years, producing such works as "Earthquake," "Departure," by C. Bernard Jackson and "A Black Woman Speaks" by Beah Richard.

Jackson is an award-winning playwright who has written a number of works including the Obie Award winning musical, "Fly Black Bird" and "Iago," winner of three Dramalogue Awards.

Turman is an actor and a director, educated and trained in the east. In addition to appearing on television and in films, Turman has taught acting at the Cultural Center. One of his pupils was soul superstar Aretha Frankiln, who now is Mrs. Glynn Turman.

The two men started a professional relationship when Turman traveled west in the lead of "Slow Dance on the Killing Ground" at the Los Angeles Center.

Jackson once said he specifically wanted to write something for Glynn, because "I happen to think he's one of the better actors in America Today."

The two men said "Proud" was constructed "around a central concern over the problem of responsibility in today's world. The theme we're trying to deal with is commitment, on many different levels," Jackson said.

There will be a free acting workshop with Glynn Turman and Phyllis Bailey at the Green Room, Theater Building, Smith College at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Glynn Turman will star with Phyllis Baily in the soul stirring production of "Proud" on Saturday February 11 at Bowker Auditorium, 8 p.m. The play, which questions our role in the assistance of others is being presented as part of Black History Month activities at the University of Massachusetts.

For blacks, dreams are not enough

by SATYA GABRIEL
Special to Black Affairs

The season of the million dollar contests is once again upon us. I get so many of the extra long envelopes all saying that SATYA GABRIEL SHALL BE PAID ONE MILLION DOLLARS! or some variation thereof that I can no longer be sure of how many of the envelopes I get, much less who sent them.

Well, I've been entering these contests since I was about twelve which may be part of the reason so many of them have my name. But I've never won nor do I expect to.

The truth is I do hold a shadow of a doubt about winning. Despite all my efforts I remain, at least in part, an idealist. I think of it as somewhat of a cultural trait.

I grew up in a community of black farmers in rural Arkansas. Folks tended to dream a lot, even while working very long, hard hours in the Arkansas mud. Folks dreamed about the afterlife and true freedom.

Folks dreamed about living without fear of hooded monsters or hunger or old wooden shacks going up in flames like matchboxes. And dreams became as real, if not more real, than hacking away at the earth, bent over from sunup to sundown.

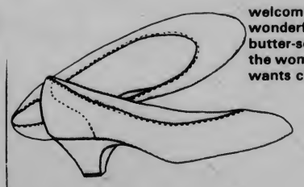
Dreaming is integral to the life of black America. It is the stuff our music and poetry is made of. It is the basis of lovemaking and dancing. It is the underlying theology of our religion. It's the way we survived two hundred years of physical and mental torture under slavery.

But there is a time to dream and there is a time to get out in the streets and make the earth shake. There is a time for idealism and a time for realism.

EDITORIAL

I grew up with my great aunt. She was one of those compassionate black women who represented a delicate balance between idealism and realism. As a child she had witnessed her parents being humiliated by whites in Calico Rock, Arkansas, and then experienced their being forced off their land, away from their farm.

She had been gang raped by white men during their long trek from northern to central Arkansas. Her realism was manifest most strongly in the old colt 45 she kept under her pillow at night.



None of us can wait for the letter to come with our million dollars. We must be willing to wake up to the reality that the quality of our lives is in our hands.

It depends on our being awake to the brutality and ready to deal with it, to change it. It depends, too, on our ability to dream dreams about a better world, a world we must always work towards and never simply wait for.

Minutemen bounce the Bonnies

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team hosted a Welcome Back party for their fans last night, rocking the Cage with a convincing 91-81 thumping of St. Bonaventure.

The Minutemen placed five players in double figures with the best offensive showing of the year. Forward Horace Neysmith paced UMass with a season-high 23 points on perfect 10 of 10 shooting from the floor in the first post-intersession game at the Cage.

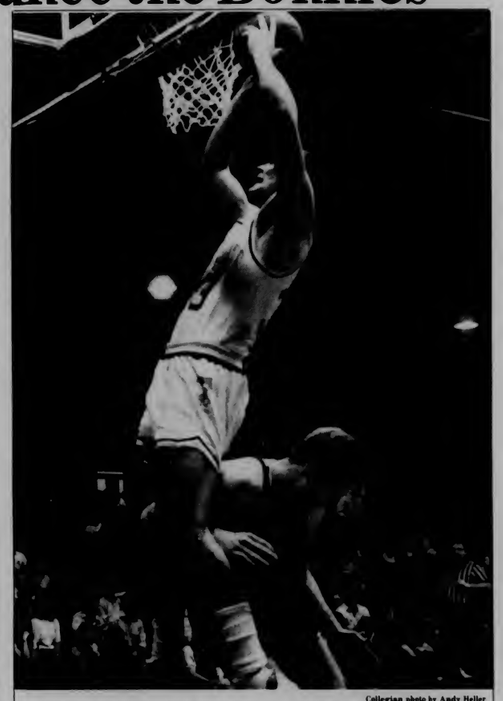
UMass, now 8-11 overall and 4-7 in the Atlantic 10, controlled both the tempo and score of this game, losing the lead but once as they avenged an earlier 81-64 loss to the Bonnies.

"It's not the best game we've played this year, but it's a real good one," said coach Ron Gerlufsen. "We showed them a few new things on defense and offensively we flowed. Playing at home helps a lot, too."

The packed house of 4,200 saw UMass jump out to an 8-2 lead as St. Bonaventure cracked under the intense pressure defense employed by the Minutemen. But the Bonnies came back on several hoops by center Barry Mungar to take a 20-18 lead.

Neysmith tied the score on a reverse layup before Donald Russell pounded the boards to drop in a layup to give UMass the lead for good, 22-20.

Rob Samuels scored for the visitors prior to unanswered hoops by Russell and Neysmith. Green then stole the ball at halfcourt on the press and with a lot of open court in front of him flew in for a look-out-below dunk that made it 32-22 and effectively killed St. Bonaventure's hopes. UMass finished the half ahead 44-37.



Neysmith and Russell (17 points) did what they pleased in the second half, scoring down low or in Russell's case with smooth outside jumpers. Green hammered a few Bonnie offerings back into the seats to add a few good scenes to his highlight film.

UMass fans held their breath at the 6:33 mark of the second half when Hempel was slammed to the floor by Mike Sheehey while attempting a layup. The big forward went down hard, suffering a mild concussion, and spent a night in the hospital for observation.

Statistically both teams were a red-hot 68 percent from the floor in the first half, with UMass 6 of 7 from the line. For the game the Minutemen were 33 of 53 (62 percent) while the visitors were 32 of 64. UMass shot well from the line at 25 of 33. Carl Smith was 9 of 9, and Green was 4 of 4.

For the scoring totals Green had 14, Bobby Braun had 13 off the pines, Carl Smith added nine assists to 13 points and the like of George Ramming and Ron Young had three each. Hempel ended with only four on terrible 2 of 11 shooting. Sheehey had 21 for the Bonnies.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Congrats go out to Donald Russell, the junior co-captain went over the 1,000 point mark for his career with 13:00 left in the first half. St. Bonaventure is now 5-6 in the league, 11-8 overall.

Special night in Cage helps UMass to victory

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

It was a night that was somehow special. You couldn't put your finger on any one particular because there were too many. There were jams and there were milestones. There was uncanny shooting and there was uncanny defense. There was the crowd and there was television. It was just special.

And when the Minutemen had walked off the floor with a 91-81 win over the same St. Bonaventure team that had put Massachusetts away 81-64 earlier in the season, everyone around was aware of the game they had witnessed.

First there was the TVS television cameras everywhere across the floor as the fans filed in. It was a presence that the players and coach would play down afterwards, but a presence that nonetheless added to the circus atmosphere of the Cage.

Coach Ron Gerlufsen would say that while the cameras were there it was the fans that created the excitement. "We've got the greatest fans in the Atlantic Ten," reflected Gerlufsen. "They're all we need." TVS play by play man Tom Mees added to that, "Massachusetts wins often at home and after being here I can see why."

Yes, the fans. They're importance cannot be downplayed in any way. When the Cage gets rockin' the impact on opponents can be devastating. And oh did they have some things to rock about last night.

How about Donald Russell going over the one thousand point mark in his career with a jumper in the lane at the thirteen minute mark of the first half. "He's worked very hard on the defense and the offense this year with the switch to swing guard," Gerlufsen would say later. "I'm really happy for Don."

There was Horace Neysmith who perhaps played his finest game as a Minuteman. Neysmith nailed 23 points, had four rebounds, two assists and three steals. He ate the Bonnies' front line alive with move after move and spin after spin along the baseline. To add that he did it on a 10-10 shooting night from the floor just made the eyes open wider. And Neysmith's shooting was only a reflection, as the Minutemen shot a blistering 62. during the night.

But it would not stop there as the offense was supplemented by a defense that held St. Bonaventures to 38.5 shooting in the second half. And there would be many more highlights. The irrepressable Carl Smith dishing off nine assists with one smooth pass after another, or the Minutemen's ease at breaking the press, the very thing that has hounded on their reputation.

And finally there was an Edwin Green curl-it-under-the-arm-and-walk-the-ceiling jam that brought the crowd to a frenzy. Carrying his man as he went, Green put the best highlight of all into the night.

All in all it was an important and impressive win for the Minutemen. But then, it was more. It was special.

U.S. Hockey team loses 4-1

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) - The U.S. Olympic ice hockey team's dreams of a second straight gold medal melted away today after a 4-1 loss to Czechoslovakia as the 1984 Winter Olympics yielded their first gold medals and a world record in speed skating.

The loss was the second straight for the Americans, who won the gold medal at the 1980 games in Lake Placid, and virtually eliminated the team from contention for any medal.

Vincent Lukatch's power-play goal at 17:47 of the black-out interrupted first period broke a 1-1 tie and the powerful team from Czechoslovakia was on its way.

And in other hockey news closer to home, Boston Bruins player Craig MacTavish faces arriagnment March 7 on a charge of motor vehicle homicide in the highway crash last month in which a Maine woman died.

Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke filed the felony charge Thursday morning against the 25-year-old pro hockey player after studying the case.

The Bruins left winger earlier had been charged in Peabody District Court with driving under the influence of alcohol and driving to endanger and pleaded innocent at arraignment Jan. 26.

"He doesn't have to surrender himself," said Karen McLaughlin, spokeswoman for the district attorney. "He's not going to flee the jurisdiction. He's a celebrity. It would be pretty hard to hide."

Minutemen attempt to reach .500 mark against Cortland

By JOE PETRIN
Collegian Correspondent

Coming off of their best performance of the season, the University of Massachusetts mens gymnastics team looks ready to meet Cortland when it visits Boyden tomorrow at 1 p.m. The Minutemen had a team total of 257.1, their highest total of the season, earlier in the week against Southern Conn. However, Coach Roy Johnson still feels that his team hasn't reached its potential.

"257 is still low for this team and we'll be trying to out do that on Saturday," said Johnson.

Johnson will make a few changes in his lineup for tomorrow's meet. Lew Wingert will see action on the pommel horse and high bars. Eric Ciccone will be competing in the floor exercises, still rings, pommel horse, and the parallel bars.

One other change that could alter the outcome this weekend is that Bert Mathieson will not be present. Mathieson has been a strong performer all season but is in Canada trying out for the Canadian National Team.

The strength of this year's team has been on the still rings. Johnson is a little surprised at his team's ability on the rings. "The high bar always used to be our strongest event but now the rings are. So we must be doing something right."

Joe Demarco and Ciccone, both from Revere, Mass., have proven their ability on the rings. According to Johnson their performance this year is a credit to them, but also to their high school coach Dave Montani. "He did a very good job and must have spent a lot of time working with them on the strength moves of the rings," said Johnson.

Saturday the Minutemen will have Corbett, Stevens, Demarco, Ciccone and Gorgone on rings. "You'll see the best team on rings that we have," said Johnson. "All of them can do a straight arm giant and many will do two straight arm giants."

If UMass can do as well as expected on the rings and maintain their level of performance on the other events it will improve its record to 5-5. Cortland is a division two school so they shouldn't pose much of a problem. Tomorrow might be the big meet where they break the all time team total of 261.5.

Students join to support voter registration plan

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — About 40 University of Massachusetts students joined 1500 colleagues at Harvard University this past weekend at a conference promoting nationwide voter registration and student activism.

Conference attendees included members of Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs), which sponsored the forum, as well as student government representatives and newspaper editors from colleges throughout the country.

One organizer called it "the largest student political meeting in the last 12 years."

Workshops on topics ranging from voter registration drive planning to student organizing, presidential candidate caucuses and guest speakers, such as consumer advocate Ralph Nader, filled the three day schedule.

UMassPIRG member Cindy Jacques was the event's national coordinator.

Throughout the conference, frequent references were made to the powerful student movement of the 1960s, and contrasts between American movements and those of students abroad.

"We live in a period of our history of unparalleled concentration of political and economic power," Nader said. He defined the 1960s as a time when "students illuminated the path — they took the higher risks," by working to end the Vietnam War.

"Now this country is in desperate need of leadership, leadership in every conceivable sector," Nader said.

"Everything about the 60s, there's more of it in the 80s," Nader said. "Because it (student activism) doesn't smash windows (now), it doesn't get in the national media. You don't have to be melodramatic, you have to be factual."

Nader spoke too about the need of all students, particularly the 13 million unregistered college age voters, to take advantage of their rights in a democratic society.

"Year after year, our country elects politicians not so much by people who vote, but by people who don't vote," he said. "As a public citizen, not as someone who is a dropout from democracy, you have to exercise your rights or you lose them. Let it not be said by some forlorn future generation that your generation refused to give up so little in order to achieve so much."

And these rights must be exercised with the knowledge they are not universal, Nader said.

"All over the world there are students on the ramparts risking their lives to overthrow despotism," to obtain such rights, Nader said. "It's time for a dramatic, determined historic turnaround in the way students perceive themselves. We are Americans too, and we're going to show you something in November that you never would have believed would happen."

While speakers emphasized the power of the student vote by citing low student registration in the Republican-dominated 1972 and 1980 elections, the conference was non-partisan.

Republicans were well represented in the college crowd, as evidenced by healthy audience response to presentations from Democratic National Committee political Director Ann Lewis and Sen. David Locke (R-Wellesley).

Lewis called for a voter turnout of 100 million in the '84 elections, an increase of 13 million over 1980, of which two thirds would vote the Democratic ticket. That increase would total eight million votes. President Ronald Reagan won by four million votes in 1980, Lewis said.

Locke too noted the "enormous importance" of student input "for the future of this land."

"You have an opportunity now in this year, 1984, to make an enormous and lasting effect on the course of this nation, and by virtue, the world," he said.

Valentine's dance supports child care

By JULIA COURTNEY

The University of Massachusetts Child Care program will collect the proceeds of tomorrow night's Valentine's Day dance, being sponsored by the Student Government Association (SGA) President's Office.

Raffle tickets, drawn at the dance are being sold today and tomorrow on the Campus Center concourse. Prizes include a hot tub for two at Utopia Spas, a free album from For the Record, and gift certificates from Sweeties candy store.

SGA co-President Tom Ahern said the dance "is important not only in raising money for Child Care, but in raising community awareness of child care needs."

Elizabeth Perkins, director of the Child Care office, said "this is the first year that there has been active interest by the SGA and it makes me feel very good."

Former SGA president Jim Murphy said in the past, the SGA may have lagged behind in their support of Child

Economists warn of rise in world debt

By CAMDEN PIERCE

SOUTH HADLEY — In the expanding, fragile world economy, the financial relations of developed nations to lesser-developed nations are the unanswered questions of the future, said scholars during a weekend conference at Mount Holyoke College.

Experts on world political economy and students from colleges throughout the East discussed international economic and political problems Saturday and Sunday, at Mount Holyoke College's sixth annual Student Conference on International Affairs.

The linkage of international trade to the debt of lesser developed countries (LDCs) is of fundamental importance to the economic well-being of the world, said Joyce B. Rabens, an international economist with the Office of Trade in the U.S. State Department.

"Any number of forseeable events could trigger a chain reaction seriously damaging the liberal economic system that has been so painstakingly constructed over the past 35 years," Rabens said.

During the past decade, LDC debt has grown rapidly to the present $810 billion, said Martin McLaughlin, a consultant to the U.S. Catholic Conference.

Management of LDC debt requires restructuring loans from short-term to long-term, and increasing financial assistance to states coping with debt crises, McLaughlin said.

International debt problems worsened in the early 1970's when interest rates on loans were below the rate of

Alternative to Kissinger report is suggested

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

Rejecting the Reagan Administration's Central American policy and calling for the formulation of an alternative approach to the region, author and educator Richard Koster last night criticized the recently-released Kissinger Commission Report on Central America, in a speech at the University of Massachusetts.

Koster, who contributed a research paper to the commission, cited the need to replace a policy based on military and economic assistance with one that seeks to solve the problems of political and social injustice endemic to the region.

"Current U.S. policy is to ignore this underlying problem (of injustice) in order to concentrate on reducing Soviet influence, but it is likely to make things worse," Koster said.

Koster spoke in the Campus Center to a group of more than fifty professors concerned with Central America. He said he disagreed with the Kissinger's report's emphasis on the necessity of keeping the Soviets out and providing military support to "client-state" governments.

"The military is not the solution in Central America, it is a very large part of the problem. We can't go back to the client-state system and support the military...in Central America, the military is at best a predatory pest, at worst a cancer. The establishment of independent states which are willing to address the aspirations of the people (is what is needed)," he said.

Koster, a professor of English at the Panama campus of Florida State University, was invited to speak by University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey on the problems of Central America as a transplanted American in the region who has extensively studied the situation in the countries. He contributed a paper to the Kissinger commission, "not too much of which was reflected in the final report," he said.

Koster called for recognizing that U.S. and Central American interests are interdependent and that the U.S. public's support for any policy is crucial to its success.

"No policy will prosper unless it is formed out of our ideals. A policy that exploits and represses can't find much support in this country," he said. "Our well-being is bound up with the welfare of others. No policy will be successful without the policy being for the benefit of the Central Americans."

The influence of Soviet and Cuban agents was discounted by Koster as inconsequential compared to the role of the region's military forces in inspiring revolution, and he also said he supported a "rapproachment" with Cuba and Nicaragua.

"All by themselves the Central Americans have been capable of injustice and repression. The rich grow more rapacious...the powerful become more repressive and corrupt...moderates disappear, turn into extremists or corpses.

"To blame all this on the Russians is delusion. It is more sensible to see them as the problem's beneficiary than the cause," Koster said.

Koster said President Ronald Reagan is running on a "platform of death" by supporting repressive dictatorships and providing military aid despite civil rights violations. The issue of Central America must be brought up in the presidential campaign, he said.

American skaters win the first medals

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) - Kitty and Peter Carruthers, brother and sister, ended the medals famine for the U.S. Olympic team Sunday, taking the silver in pairs figure skating with a nearly flawless performance.

The couple skated the 4 and one-half minute freestyle program masterfully, and were beaten out only by Soviets Elena Valova and Oleg Vasiliev, who received one 5.9, six 5.8s, two 5.7s.

The Carrutherses, both adopted when they were 3 months old, received one score of 5.9 from the Canadian judge, but a 5.5 from a Japanese judge. They also got one 5.8 and six 5.7s.

"I'm in shock. I've never been happier in my whole life," Kitty said. "I knew right before the start. I looked at Pete. It was going to be magic."

There were few detectable problems in their presentation, while the gold medalists had one detectable flaw, a slip by Valova on a double axle.

The Carrutherses edged another Soviet couple, Larissa Selezneve and Olege Makarov for second place. The two pairs had been tied for second going into the freestyle part of the competition, which counted for 80 per cent of the final score.

No American has ever won a gold medal in the pairs skating competition. The Carrutherses had said that they just wanted to skate a clean program and not worry about judging or winning, and they did just that.

Until their performance, the U.S. athletes here had nothing to be joyous about. Their troubles included the hockey debacle on ice, which is gone but not forgotten.

Even too much snow has been a problem. So far, it had been a Winter Olympics dominated by the East German and Soviet teams and nothing for the U.S. athletes.

The two Russian medals in pairs tied them with the East Germans at the end of Sunday's events. Both have a total 12 medals. East Germany has five gold, while the Soviet Union has three. Now the Americans have a medal, but still not a gold.

Arabs take steps to reinstate Egypt

WASHINGTON (AP) Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's King Hussein, moderate leaders of Arab nations without diplomatic relations, met here last night in advance of a round of discussions with President Reagan.

The private dinner meeting at a Washington hotel, not announced until Sunday, was seen as another step in the reinstatement of Egypt into the Arab fold.

Hussein was accompanied by Secretary of State George P. Shultz when he arrived at the Four Seasons Hotel. Shultz left about 30 minutes later, dismissing reporters, questions with a wave of his hand.

The dinner came on the eve of a scheduled meeting between Hussein and Reagan at the White House on Monday. Reagan and Mubarak were planning to meet Tuesday, with Hussein scheduled to join later that day in three-way discussions on the Middle East and Lebanon.

An Egyptian Embassy spokesman, insisting on anonymity, said Hussein invited Mubarak to the dinner meeting.

Asked the purpose of the meeting, he said, "I think it's very difficult to say. After, we can say what was the purpose." However, there were no statements issued following the dinner.

White House press spokesman Lary Speakes said Reagan and the Arab leaders would "discuss the obvious - the current situation, how these two leaders can be helpful in resolving the immediate situation in Lebanon and how they can be helpful in moving the president's Middle East peace initiative forward."

U.S. still supports diplomatic relations in the Middle East

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) - President Reagan's decision to remove U.S. troops from Beirut but to escalate shelling from Navy ships was a compromise to accommodate the vastly differing views of Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, a White House official says.

"The policy is a balance between the two views, but also a balance that everybody agrees to — that is, you continue to support a U.S. diplomatic position in the Middle East, at the same time according more protection to the Marines," said the official, insisting on anonymity.

Weinberger, and reportedly the Joint Chiefs of Staff, were known to believe that the 1,500 Marines in Beirut as part of a multinational force were extremely vulnerable and were serving no useful military purpose.

But, Shultz reportedly disagreed strongly with attempts within the administration to withdraw the Marines since he believed their presence was vital to supporting the shaky Lebanese government of Amin Gemayel.

Reagan's new policy, announced six days ago, in effect satisfied the concerns of both men.

POSSIBLE SUCCESSOR — MOSCOW (AP) — Konstantin U. Chernenko, the 72-year-old number two man in the politburo, is the head of the official funeral commission for former President Yuri V. Andropov, whose death was announced Friday. In the past, the head of the funeral commission has become the successor to the deceased Communist Party leader, although no announcements have been made.

Crafty criminal escapes to U.S.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - South Africa's most-wanted criminal is a brazen bank robber and master of disguise who once was a rising star on the police force.

He uses his advanced police training in armed robbery investigations and undercover work on the other side of the law, leading a gang accused of some 20 bank robberies that netted more than $400,000 in the past six months.

While Andre Stander's daring and high life on the lam have made him a household name, the officers trying to nab him are increasingly frustrated.

And at week's end, there were reports that he may already have slipped past them and into the United States.

Iraq attacks Iran in retaliation plan

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) - Iran shelled seven Iraqi cities and towns yesterday, killing 14 people and injuring 89 others, and Iraq retaliated by attacking four Iranian areas, Iraqi officials announced.

Both Iran and Iraq had warned each other of the attacks, in some cases naming the specific city or town and warning residents to evacuate — an apparent new policy, which an Iranian official said "should be accepted by world public opinion."

The Iraqi armed forces attacked the Iranian port of Bandar Khomeini and the petrochemicals complex in the city as well as "specific targets" in the cities of Abadan, Guilan Gharb and Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab, said a communique from the Iraqi military command.

Allegied shipment of missle equipment to China stopped

NEW YORK (AP) - Five men, including three Chineseborn U.S. citizens, have been arrested for allegedly trying to ship equipment that could be used in missile guidance to the People's Republic of China, U.S. Customs officials announced yesterday.

Saturday's arrests came after a three-month "sting" in which an undercover agent posing as a technology broker met with the five men on several occasions, said Arthur Stiffel, U.S. Customs special agent in charge for New Jersey.

But before the ring was infiltrated, authorities believe it successfully shipped to China about $1 million worth of "computer chip devices" that can have military uses, according to Stiffel.

He would not elaborate on possible uses of the equipment that reached China, citing security reasons. He said he had no indication any of the five were Chinese government agents, "but that aspect will be investigated."

The investigation was the first involving China, said Patrick O'Brien, an assistant Customs commissioner in New York. The arrests were part of "Operation Exodus," a two-year effort by Customs to stop high technology equipment from reaching nations where it might be used against the United States.

Amherst newcomers file for Select Board seats

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Two more candidates filed nomination papers Friday afternoon with Town Clerk Estelle Matusko to make the bid for the two open Select Board seats, the only contest in the April 10 Amherst election.

Paul C. Schroeder of 24 South Prospect St. and Charles E. Ferguson of 699 Main St., both newcomers in Amherst, join Joan Golowich and incumbent Richard Minear in a four way race in this spring's election.

Minear's select board position and the seat being vacated by board Chair Edith Wilkinson are up for election.

Minear announced he would seek another three year term last month and Golowich announced her candidacy last week.

Incumbents running unopposed in the April election are William Field for town moderator, former Selectwoman Francesca Maltese for the single open school committee seat, Rosemary Sprague for elector under the Oliver Smith Will and Thomas Lardner and Vera Joseph Peterson for trustees of the Jones Library.

Schroeder, 37, said he moved to Amherst from San Francisco a month ago and has been concerned with the quality of Amherst water. He said he has talked to numerous townspeople and town officials and has read articles in area newspapers to educate himself about the issue.

"People told me the water wasn't that great here. I feel there are so many questions about what is going into our water. I think it's the duty of town officials to answer these questions," he said.

"Basically, the town government has a responsibility to provide clean water for people whether they live here or whether they just go to school for four years," he said.

Schroeder describes himself as a "single issue" candidate and a "progressive". He acknowledged that he is not aware of all the issues but said he is interested in town affairs and a quick learner.

Schroeder said he and his wife Mazie Hough are expecting a child. He is a graduate of the University off Illinois and has a masters degree in political science from Stanford University. He said he has been a self employed builder since 1975.

Ferguson, 59, moved to Amherst from Lowell last December. He said he wants Amherst to be a nuclear free zone, and he is concerned about the amount of coal stored by University of Massachusetts at Tillson Farm. Ferguson said he has a son majoring in electrical engineering at UMass and a daughter who will be graduating from MIT with a computer science degree. Currently unemployed, he says he has turned down job offers so he can use the time to campaign for Democratic presidential hopeful Rev. Jesse Jackson. He said he chose to run for the select board "to give people a choice." Ferguson said many people told him not to run because he is new in town but said he considers being a newcomer "a virtue rather than a liability."

"I think a new person will be more objective and bring a new viewpoing and fresh ideas. I'm open. I don't have any fixed positions," Ferguson said.

"I don't have any particular issue. I see my candidacy as offering a choice. What's the sense of having an election without having a choice?" he said.

UMass professors awarded grants for research

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Seven University of Massachusetts professors have received grants totaling nearly $40,000 to fund research and public service projects.

Five professors were awarded Healey Endowment Grants, named for former UMass Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey, and two were awarded Public service Grants.

It was the first time any UMass Amherst professor has received either type of award.

"Our university has a strong faculty," said microbiology prof. Eric Maris, who received $5,000 from the Healey fund. Support for research projects, "enables us to not only effectively perform in the classroom but also enables our school to thrive at a high level," he said. Maris called the $5,000 his "seed money" to study possible cures for parasitic diseases in animals.

The money "enables professors like myself to experiment with an idea without having any of the facts beforehand," Maris said.

Gerald Cole, a professor, is using his $5,000 grant to try to find a control for schistosomiasis, a fatal liver disease transmitted by snails in tropical countries. Schistosomiasis affects more than 200 million people and animals in the world.

"The research I am doing is a calculated gamble, but then so is every research experiment," Cole said.

Associate professor of zoology Warren Burggren received $4,800 to purchase a micropressure transducer to measure the circulatory system of young amphibians.

Kari Stephan, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering, said he will be using his $3,800 grant to build a device that can be used for microwave receivers.

Associate Professor Jerold Meyer, of the psychology department receipient of the Healey grant, will purchase a high performance liquid chromatagraph with his $1,200 grant.

"With this purchase, I can study the effects of hormones and drugs on the development of neurotransmitter systems in the brain. This is the very first device to be used in our department," he said.

Two public service grants were awarded to UMass Professors for short term projects totalling $20,000.

Jane Baron, assistant professor of communication disorders will use her $10,000 for a project on hearing screening programs for Hampshire County residents.

"With this purchase, I can study the effects of hormones and drugs on the development of neurotransmitter systems in the brain. This is the very first device to be used in our department," he said.

A primary target for this project is going to be county schools," Baron said. "So many middle ear problems are very common among little children and with the initiation of this program amoung the public school system, we can quickly identify the problem and offer additional health services to these children."

Joseph Larson, a wildlife biology professor, received $10,000 for technical support of municipal conservation commissions. Larson said the university's expertise in this field can effectively respond to the needs of the commissions.

Dorm classes are successful

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Rumors that classes in Southwest and Orchard Hill Residential Colleges will be phased out by a University of Massachusetts Long Range Plan for Academic Affairs are "purely mythological," a member of the task force studying the programs said recently.

"The programs within Southwest and Orchard Hill/Central are alive and expanding," Assistant Director for Residential Education Larry Moneta said.

The residential colleges are under review by the Task Force to Study Academic Programming in the Residential Area, Moneta said. The residential colleges offer courses ranging from writing programs to topics in social awareness.

Since its establishment last October, the task force advises the School of Education and the Faculty Senate on residential programming, Moneta said.

Moneta said "some models for revision have been discussed" and the diversity of programs offered "may be consolidated."

"What has basically been decided so far is that the residential programs are very valuable in the connection of academic learning and residential living," he said.

Moneta explained that the task force wants to "expand the breadth of knowledge within the residential areas because students spend 80 percent of their time in the residential halls."

The University is planning to expand the programs to the Sylvan Residential area, Moneta said. "It's our idea to make the programs campus-wide."

Moneta said the anxiety expressed a few years ago and perhaps still today questioning the quality and purpose of the programs is also "mythological."

"A faculty review committee has been established to report on the progress of the programs," he said.

"The focus is to make a statement of rationale and purpose and to link a closer tie to the faculty senate to give the programs real academic credibility," Moneta said. "So three years from now, there won't be any questions of doubt."

As far as long range plans are concerned, "the incredible vibrant sense of curriculum in Southwest" and the other areas "will continue to expand and thrive," Moneta said.

Show to analyze world news

If you are interested in getting to the news behind the news, then the University Perspective may have your answer.

This news show, to be aired on Union Video later this semester, will offer students in-depth analysis of world and national news, with commentaries from professors in the Five-College area, who will share their expertise on international events and issues, said the show's producer, Charles Sennott.

"There is a lot of rip and read news on campus and there is a need for students to analyze international affairs in the news. University Perspective is an opportunity for students to do that," he said.

University Perspecitve will probe the presidential election and developments in the Middle East this semester, Sennott said.

Last semester, Prof. James Boylan, chair of the UMass Journalism Department analyzed the Reagan Administration's attempt to control information in the media in a four-part University Perspective series on the Grenada invasion.

The shows were broadcast weekly on Union Video and were also shown on cable television in Amherst, Sennott said.

There will be an organizational meeting at 7 p.m. Monday, Feb. 13 in the Commuter Lounge in the Student Union. All interested students are welcome, Sennott said.

inflation, said James O'Leary, a professor of Politics at Catholic University. "In that situation you are encouraged to go into debt," he said.

The debts were complicated by the 1978 OPEC oil embargo, which helped trigger world-wide recession, O'Leary said. "It had a two-pronged, double-whammy effect on the poor countries. The interest rates they payed to service the money they borrowed began to go up, and their export earnings collapsed," he said.

Calling for a more open international economy, O'Leary said multinational corporations should not be discriminated against by LDC's seeking foreign capital. Because of increased competition among multinational corporations LDC's can now strike deals in their own interest, he said.

Quiz team is taken seriously

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The College Academic Quiz team may evoke images of 1950's game shows, but for a group of University of Massachusetts students who enjoy academics outside the classroom, the competition is serious business.

Team coach Martin Fallon said about two dozen students are involved in the College Bowl team at UMass.

The team competes with schools like Harvard, Amherst College, Yale and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Despite such stiff competition, Fallon said UMass has done well in regional contests. Last year the team defeated MIT and placed fourth out of 17 colleges.

Schools that want to enter the College Bowl purchase game packages from College Bowl Inc., Fallon said. Team funding comes from Campus Center game room profits.

College Bowl Inc. began broadcasting competitions on the radio in the late 1950s and then on television in the 1960s and early 70s. After the competitions went off the air, the popularity of the quiz team dropped, Fallon said.

Each quiz team has four active members and an alternate, and teams compete in intramural and regional competition, team captain Cris Shuldiner said. Teams are asked "toss-up" and bonus questions from categories such as geography, literature, entertainment and history, he said.

Team members read quiz review books to help prepare for the contests, Shuldiner said.

The purpose of the College Bowl is "quizzing general knowledge and not that everyone can know everything," Shuldiner said.

With the addition of the two new members this year and the fact that some competitive college teams have left the College Bowl program, Shuldiner said UMass has "high hopes" for doing well this semester.

Debate team aspires to finals

By RODMAN R. SNELLING
Collegian Correspondent

Debate, probably the Western world's oldest competitive intellectual tradition, dating back to ancient Greece, thrives at the University of Massachusetts.

For the past 11 years the University Debate team has placed in the National Championship tournament. That is a feat equalled by only six other schools in this nation's history, said Star Muir, director of the Debate Union here.

After returning tomorrow from a national tournament at Chicago's Northwestern University, and with a better than 70 percent win record so far, the University's varsity tournament team is looking forward once again to the championships, to be held this year at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

"We tend to stimulate a clash of ideas by providing the campus with debates on various issues," Muir said. "On campus we do between 15 and 20 debates per year on a number of topics always trying to get across that there is more than one side to things."

"Specifically, we train students to think critically, to analyze ideas, and to research well," he said. "A foundation for effective education is a departure from stagnancy. Intellectual competition stirs up and lends new life to education."

The Debate Union each year fields teams for its two main programs: tournament debate, its inter-collegiate competitive program, and public debate in which two of the University's teams debate before classes, civic groups, and high school audiences on various propositions.

The tournament team each year debates against other schools on only one proposition, which is determined annually by the Committee on Inter-Collegiate Debate and Discussion, Muir said. This year's proposition is "Resolved: That any and all injuries resulting from the disposal of hazardous waste in the U.S.A. should be the legal responsibility of the producer of that waste."

The 25 team members come from various majors including economics, chemistry, political science, engineering and anthropology, according to Muir. Ten are with the tournament program and 15 debate publicly.

Tournament debater Beth Dobkin, a junior communications studies major on exchange from Humboldt State University in California, cites the debate program as one of her reasons for choosing the University of Massachusetts.

"The debate program," Dobkin said, "was one of the reasons I felt, as an exchange student, I could make a smooth transition to this campus. Debate is a common ground like any discipline, and the Debate Union gives one a home base."

Dobkin also believes the two types of debate offered are one of the program's strengths.

"Public debate helps one become more confident and eloquent in public address," said Dobkin. "Tournament debate, on the other hand, focuses on in-depth analysis of a single issue, so that rather than becoming more fluent, one becomes a better critical thinker and researcher. The ideal judge in tournament debate is no more than a scorekeeper, for the reason that it's more like a sport."

Perhaps the high point of last season came when first-year tournament debaters Eric Jensen and Danny Povinelli won the National Novice Debate Championship.

The debate team does not have a scholarship fund, which Muir said is a standard feature of other first-rate debating programs at Dartmouth College, the University of Pittsburgh, and Northwestern.

"These other schools that have maintained our consistency have established significant scholarships and tuition breaks for recruitment," he said.

"It's like scouting for any sport," said Dobkin. "The college teams that do the best recruiting often have the stronger programs. But more than anything else, winning requires two elements: a good coach and truly dedicated students."

Academic discrimination in Russia

By RHONDA APPLEBAUM
Collegian Staff

Universities in the Soviet Union practice academic discrimination against Jews, Russian-born physicist Uri Degen told a Student Union lecture audience Thursday night.

Degen said he was exposed to "street anti-semitism" as a child, when he was called such names as "kike". As a university student, Degen said, he learned "another level of anti-semitism."

Some professors gave "lower marks to Jews for the same answers given by non-Jewish students," he said. The professors "knew they would not be punished for discriminating against Jews." Degen also said there is discrimination against Jews in admissions to the universities.

Jewish population are allowed into the universities.

"The fact that I was discriminated against on the street and in the University made me want to live where this discrimination didn't exist," he said.

Degen chose to leave the Soviet Union in 1977 because he "couldn't stand" the lies and hipocracy of the Societ Union in general.

"I cannot describe what it is like to live in the Soviet Union to free people," he said.

Degen said he thought the only place to go was Israel, and that many other Jews in the Soviet Union don't know much about Israel because of anti-zionist propoganda.

Degen said he didn't learn he was Jewish until he was five years old. "In the Soviet Union Jewish parents usually keep their children ignorant on the question of Judaism." However, when Degen was an older his father gave him a lesson about the Jewish nation and made him feel proud of being Jewish.

"Jews are the only people in the Soviet Union who are not allowed to have their national culture," Degen said.

Jackson visit important

To the Editor,

In response to Peter Abraham's article of February 8 (School aided Jackson's History visit?) I would like to clarify a few points he brought up. The Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors was approached by John Ruddock from the "Students for Jesse" for funding to simulcast Reverend Jackson's speech in the Student Union Ballroom. After much discussion, the Board came to the decision that this event was of great cultural and social importance to the whole University and that we should, therefore, provide funding. Not only was Reverend Jackson the keynote speaker of Black History Month, but he is also making history himself by being the first black contender for the office of President of the United States of America.

The question of whether or not Reverend Jackson's speech was political is irrelevant. By providing funding for a simulcast of his speech we were not endorsing Reverend Jackson, but rather we furnished the opportunity for several hundred more students to view the event.

Finally, if Mr. Abraham or any other students feel that they do not have any say as to where their fees go, maybe they should take a bit of initiative themselves. Nomination papers for the Board of Governors are available in Room 420 of the Student Union and are due February 27th. If you feel you don't have a say, get involved and see how much of a say you really do have.

It's harder than you think

To the Editor,

Regarding Mark Rollins' recent "UMass Zone" strip, in which he playfully depicted "Hampster College" students waiting in line to declare such improbable majors as "soap operas," "massive beer consumption," et cetera: cute, but naive.

First: One Hampshire College Student's now infamous major in "frisbee" entailed more than his ability to delay a flying disc for a few minutes. Frisbee entertainment was the case study for his "major," which in essence was a major in business, economics, public relations, and sports education.

Second: to any UMass student who is under the impression that we at Hampshire are sitting around twiddling our thumbs, I must insist that the reality is quite different from the myth.

In order to fulfill the requirements for graduation, each Hampshire student must complete four Division I examinations (or research projects) of roughly fifteen to forty pages in length; a Division II concentration (or "major") requiring as much as two hundred pages of written work and as many as eight relevant courses; and a Division III independent study project (or mandatory senior thesis) usually requiring fifty to one hundred (or more) pages of work.

Faculty supervise each step in the Hampshire process: students do not decide for themselves when they are ready to proceed to the next Division.

We at Hampshire are, I think, justifiably sensitive about the way our school is portrayed in the media. Hampshire's is a demanding a liberal arts education as any in this country. To see the worth of our education cheapened or laughed at, even in good fun, is invariably disappointing.

Medical attention is needed

To the Editor,

Last week a few buddies and I took a trip up to the NOPE Athletic facility to play basketball. Disregarding the overcrowded conditions, lack of facilities, and overall gloom which permeated the atmosphere there was another turnoff which warrants serious attention. While standing in an endless line of groups of 5 waiting to play I witnessed a player injure his ankle. The resident assistant came over to offer her assistance and this is what transpired.

"What's wrong?"

"I hurt my ankle."

"Oh I don't have access to the keys for the medical room. Why don't you get some of your friends to get some snow?"

"No I'll be alright."

"Okay."

The guy then continued to play after about 10 minutes.

A second incident involved a player who had received an elbow to the nose and proceeded to bleed all over the court. Some more helpful assistance.

"Wow that looks pretty bad."

"No, I think that it is just a nose bleed."

"Well if it's serious I think that I might be able to get a security guard to drive you down to the infirmary."

"No that's alright."

Five minutes later, after a friend had gotten some snow and the bleeding had stopped, the aide finally returned with a bag of ice and said, "I finally got into the medical room."

It is common knowledge that injuries and athletics go hand in hand. In pick up games like this where amateurs are trying to have fun or past players of exceptional ability try to recapture their glory, injuries are more likely to occur.

The players simply aren't in fine tuned form and their conditioning is lacking. Medical assistance should be at least on par with that of the Minutemen's. I hope that the display which I witnessed wasn't. I wonder how an injured Edwin Green would react if the trainer said, "Why don't you get your friend John Hempel to get some snow for you?" Excuse the ridiculous comparison but the point is that if the school is going to provide courts to play on then they have to provide a better form of medical protection than the abundant Massachusetts snow supply.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

THERE HE GOES AGAIN.

When friends grow up and apart

She secretly wanted the best for the girl. And she knew that the other wanted the best for her too. The two were very different. Yet it wasn't the differences that separated them. They were separated by something they both couldn't control. Their parents didn't get along. The squabbling hurt their friendship, because they were used by their parents as weapons. It was as if the parents were saying, "My daughter is better than yours.

Michele Dolan

How ridiculous parents could be. The girls knew that neither was "better" than the other. The two were just different. They didn't care about the fights. They just wanted to be friends. But their names always entered into it.

They had been little together. They had played in the backyard. They had sold lemonade at a table set up near the street. They had carried dolls around and played 'house.' They had ridden bicycles. They had gone to the beach and collected shells. They had treated their dogs and cats like people.

Then one moved. During junior high and high school, they were separated by distance as well as by the changes that go with growing up. They talked on the phone and visited over weekends. They got on the train on Friday, and off on Sunday. They each had made their own friends in school, but the friendship they shared with each other was special.

When they did things together it was always fun. They laughed at things other people wouldn't understand. To them anything could be funny. The two made their own fun. They knew each other well, and could depend on each other.

Their friendship seemed indestructable. Their personalities were opposite. One had become an athelete, the other had started using drugs. That didn't matter. There was an understanding, a feeling of support which kept their friendship strong.

The separation was made of the parents' fighting. The tensions between families grew. The mothers competed socially. The fathers competed in business. The senseless competition never ended. The parents hardly ever visited. If the daughters did, it wasn't fun anymore. The parent's didn't welcome the 'other' into their home. They treated her as an intruder.

Months went by. They saw each other only on holidays. Now they hardly had anything to talk about. They were still good friends. There was trust and support. But the fun times were missing. They had been rudely yanked away by the competition of the parents.

Their conversation had turned to music, to clothes, to the people they knew. The special world that their friendship had created slowly disappeared. The times that had been shared were sometimes recalled with a fit of laughter. But it became like grasping for something that had evolved away. The two tried desperately to save it. But things just weren't the same. And then the situation became uncomfortable.

Finally, one went away to college. Neither wrote. Parents couldn't be depended on to know how the other was doing. The friendship seemed to be over. They still visited on the holidays, or for a barbecue during August, but the conversation had come around to nothing. It was difficult for the girls to be together. They had been such good friends. Their friendship had withstood the strain of distance and personality change. Now they were two separate people, no longer friends. They treated it as a natural thing; growing up.

But they both knew what had really caused their friendship to end.

Just now, they were becoming women. They were both away at school. They had each other's address and phone number. They would get together, they knew. And they would start over. The end of their friendship hadn't been natural. They both wanted to keep being friends. They had cared about each other silently all through high school, when they didn't see each other much. Now it was time to call, to get together. It was time to be friends again.

Tough choice in Senate race

When Paul Tsongas announced last January that he would not seek re-election to the United States Senate, both the Democratic Party and the citizens of Massachusetts lost someone we'll never be able to replace. Tsongas has the quality of low-keyed effectiveness coupled with the sense of conscience he shares with his more flamboyant senior colleague, Ted Kennedy. He is also a spokesman for what has become known as "neoliberalism."

Geoffrey A. Feller

Tsongas and others within the Democratic Party seek to liberalize liberalism, to move away from liberal presumptions and prejudices formulated during the New Deal era. Tsongas sees throwing money at problems as being a poor solution. Among the alternatives he has advocated has been for government to direct private sector investment into needed areas. This has worked well in Tsongas' hometown of Lowell, where federal funds matched money put in by businesses to renovating the old mill city.

In the Senate, Tsongas has a liberal voting record and has taken leadership in the fight against the Reagan foreign policy. This has been particularly true in third world affairs, where Tsongas, as a former Peace Corp volunteer, has had first-hand experience.

It took no less than cancer to end his career as a senator. Had he chosen to run, Tsongas almost certainly would have won. Instead of running, Tsongas chose to be with his family in a way impossible had he chosen to stay in public life.

Now we must send a new person to the Senate to take his place. Just as Tsongas replaced the able and respected Ed Brooke, so must we find a candidate worthy of replacing Tsongas. There are currently six serious contenders in the offering.

Ed Markey, the first to announce, has the senator's committment to the nuclear freeze. The representative from Malden does seem to be the leading candidate at the moment, and using his advocacy of the freeze as a campaign centerpiece shouldn't hurt in a state where 74 percent of the voters favored it in 1982. But Markey's approach has a strident edge to it that would probably limit his effectiveness as a senator.

Markey's colleague in the House, Jim Shannon, has the support of Tip O'Niell in his bid to replace Tsongas. This should help him as much as Markey's arrogance does in contrast to Shannon's personality. Whether Shannon makes a strong candidate statewide remains to be seen, but he seems worthy of the job.

Lieutenant Governor John Kerry should make a strong candidate in both the primary and the November election. He won a crowded primary for the office he now holds in 1982 and thus will have the benefit of that experience this September. Kerry is an able man and as the former head of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, would be a good senator for the crucial Central America issue.

Second-string candidates David Bartley and Secretary of State Michael Connolly could each emerge in a crowded primary field. For now, they appear to be long-shots and will have to work hard to be accepted by the voters. Bartley's special problems are his relative conservatism among the candidates and his residency here in western Massachusetts. He also has the animosity of Gov. Dukakis as a former associate of Ed King's.

Any of the Democrats now running could beat likely Republican nominee Ray Shamie. Shamie was a novelty when he ran against Ted Kennedy in 1982, but he will lose some of his luster now that he's better known. When it comes to experience, Shamie is a sure loser, as all of the Democrats running have held public office while he has not.

Not even the prospect of a multi-candidate Democratic primary would necessarily help the GOP. Paul Tsongas himself won a five-way contest in 1978 and went on to unseat two-term incumbent Ed Brooke. Even after the bitter and divisive gubernatorial primaries of 1978 and 1982, the Republicans lost the subsequent general elections.

In any event, no matter who is nominated in the primaries, there is no making up for the loss of Paul Tsongas in the Senate. The best we can hope for is someone who is respectable, honest and liberal. We might be lucky and do better than that, but our state deserves no less. If we vote intelligently in September and November, Paul Tsongas' retirement will not be in vain.

UMass Zone lacks humor

Equal time for candidates

To the Editor,

Reverend Jesse Jackson is a sincere individual with an important message. His campaign is sure to revolutionize the American political process and also register thousands of Americans who never before felt represented by the process. For this and his compassionate vision, we should all be grateful to him.

His trip to our campus was an important event of tremendous value. I am not disturbed that student funds were used to help finance his appearance despite the fact that I feel one of the other candidates is the best person for the presidency. This campus needs to become more politically aware and active.

When my candidate, and that of many others, Senator Gary Hart comes to this campus in the next few weeks, I am sure that in all fairness the S.G.A., B.O.G. and Vice Chancellor's Office will give us the same assistance.

A need for good comics

To the Editor,

I would like to comment on the Feb. 8 letter to the Editor by Peter DePuy.

As a longtime student at this university I consider myself academically minded and cannot refrain from speaking out when people support tasteless comic strips.

To begin with, the letter concerning the infamous UMass Zone could not have been further from the actual truth. Charlie Brown is not famous for saying "UGH", as was previously stated. Rather, he is famous for saying "Order some golf shoes, there are lizards knee-deep in blood next to us." Whatever happened to integrity in cartoons, anyway? And where did "Quentin" go? What is "Superbad" really about? What kind of fish is "Scrod"? Do those people in the ads for UMass sportswear really look that chic in real life? I think they're inflatable plastic dummies.

Trailers by Andy Gordon

The polls closed last week for nominations for the 1984 Academy Awards and those nominations should be announced soon. Movies were pretty much hurting this year so what will get put up for Oscars is hard to tell. Other awards may offer a clue. The Director's Guild nominees for their annual award were announced last week. They are Philip Kaufman [The Right Stuff], Bruce Beresford [Tender Mercies], Ingmar Bergman [Fanny and Alexander], James Brooks [Terms of Endearment] and Lawrence Kasdan [The Big Chill]. The implications of this are large. The winner of this award almost always parallels the Best Director Oscar winner, which in turn usually parallels Best Picture. Surprisingly, bids did not turn up for Mike Nichols [Silkwood], Barbra Streisand [Yentl] or Bob Fosse [Star 80]. The Golden Globe awards were given out last week and, thankfully, they don't correspond to the Oscars quite as consistently. Terms of Endearment was the big winner this year and if you haven't read it already, this annoying little tearjerker didn't make my top five list. It's got lead pacing and is amazingly slow to get to it's point. If I wanted to be bored shitless I'd have signed up for microbiology again.

Some preliminary Oscar predictions: The Best Actor category is not as hopping as in past years. Robert DeNiro in The King of Comedy and Eric Roberts in Star 80 should get bids for what are similar characterizations; but Roberts' intensity should get it for him. Al Pacino's ruthless Cuban refugee from Scarface and Robert Duvall's understated Tender Mercies performance should also be candidates. For Best Actress, Meryl Streep's portrayal of Karen Silkwook should win it hands down, but Shirley Maclaine and Debra Winger's irritating Terms roles will probably be in contention. I wouldn't mind seeing Mariel Hemingway's Dorothy Stratton portrayal get a bid. The Best Supporting Actor category is packed with talent. I'll predict right now that Jack Nicholson wins it; and to a certain extent he deserves it; but I'd rather see it go to Burt Lancaster for Local Hero or William Hurt or Jeff Goldblum for The Big Chill or even Eddie Murphy or Dan Akroyd for Trading Places. For Best Supporting Actress there's Mary Kay Place in The Big Chill, Amy Irving in Yentl, Anne Benehan in The Fez and Tess Harper in Tender Mercies, but I wouldn't at all be surprised to see Mel Gibson's Little Friend in The Year of Living Dangerously, Linda Hunt, pick up the award. Best Song always goes to the tune which raked in the most cash. Flashdance's "What a Feeling" will take it. For Best Director? All I know is John Landis probably won't get it and Twilight Zone: The Movie will probably get passed over for Best Special Effects. Maybe they'll start a new category for Best Accidental Decapitation.

Such triviality. But what, one must ask, does this have to do with Daryl Hannah? I thihinink it should be mandatory to give Daryl Hannah a small part in every new film produced. The strikingly beautiful Hannah made an impressive film debut in '82 as the android replicant Pris in Blade Runner and followed suit with Summer Lovers. Now she has major parts in two new major pictures. In Reckless, playing out at the dead mall, she's a good girl from the good side of the tracks mixing it up with a bad boy from the bad side of the tracks. In the upcoming comedy Splash, she plays the main character, a mermaid. Viewers may recognize her as the woman who walks out on Jackson Browne in the "Tender is the Night" video or as the schoolgirl star of a slew of adolescent trauma Afterschool Specials; but everyone will know her soon enough--she's destined for big-time. A ringer for Til Tuesday's Aimee Mann, Hannah learned to scuba dive for Splash's extensive underwater sequences, in which she wore a full tail costume which took six hours each day to apply.

Walt Disney Pictures has a new vice president. Earle LeMasters, fresh from CBS as a program developer, joins the team and will "play a dynamic role in the expansion of Disney Pictures." Congratulations can be sent care of the company, 500 South Buena Vista St. Burbank, California. 91521.

Speaking of Disney Pictures, the company just got announced production of Oz, the further adventures of Dorothy and the rock group Toto. 9-year-old Fairuza Balk of Vancouver beat out hundreds of other candidates for the coveted lead role. Gary Kurtz will produce and acclaimed sound editor Walter Murch [Apocalypse Now, the Godfather films] will direct. Filming starts next Wednesday.

Daryl Hannah: beautiful woman, great actress.

Local Best Bets: The Grey Fox is at the Pleasant St. Theatre. Richard Farnsworth is supposed to be great. The Academy of Music has Hitchcock's Rear Window; but it's also coming to the nearby Amherst Cinema, with The Lady Vanishes no less. Amherst Cinema currently has The Return of Martin Guerre, playing with Nicholas Meyer's Time after Time. The Malls have Silkwood, Gorky Park (Paul Belval didn't like it so it's probably pretty good), Reckless and the new Dudley Moore vehicle (we'll give him one more chance). The Calvin has The Big Chill — a buck and a half; you can't go wrong.

TRAILERS Trivia: Dean Ranzo, Jane Buchbinder and my housemates Jim, Jules and Dave were just some of the people who knew that Ginger the hooker in Vice Squad was played by MTV's Nina Blackwood. This week's question: Judd Hirsch plays a teacher in the upcoming comedy Teachers (I'll talk more about it when I remember where I put the press release), in what film did he make his motion picture debut? The first correct answer will rec[illegible] unautographed 8x10 glossy photog[illegible] Daryl Hannah biting a crab. Good[illegible]

Proud, a musical play by C. Bernard Jackson, was a strong opening production for the ninth season of the Third World Theater series. Despite a late start and the shabby confines of Bowker Auditorium, the Inner City Cultural Center's production soared, and roused the nearly full house to cheers.

The play stars Glynn Turman as Anthony Proud Man, an aspiring black actor, and Phyllis Bailey as Estelle Henderson, a nightclub singer and Proud's ex-girlfriend. These two multi-talented performers filled the stage with music and laughter while examining questions of police brutality, unemployment, aging, and the insidious oppression of the 80's.

Turman's Proud is a cocky, likable young man driving a limo and waiting for his big break into show biz. Through the "Motivational Exercises" prescribed taped acting lessons, Proud exam[illegible] personae of a family of cockroac[illegible] Colonel Saunders type fast-food [illegible] and, chillingly, of an aging milit[illegible] who spouts warped partioti[illegible] paranoia.

Turman and Bailey were both tremendous. In between scenes, Bailey treated the audience to powerful renditions of Proud's songs. The musicians, under the direction of Horace Clarence Boyer, were competent and entertaining.

Later this semester, the Third World Theater series will present Paint Your Face on a Drowning in the River and Gullah. If these shows are of the same quality as Proud, they should not be missed.

Men swimmers lose to UNH, face Amherst at Boyden

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

After suffering a disappointing 58-55 loss at the University of New Hampshire on Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team will attempt to rebound against Amherst College tonight at Boyden pool at 7 p.m.

The loss puts the Minutemen at 5-4 with one meet remaining and extinguishes coach Russ Yarworth's hopes of attaining a career best 7-3 record. Of the meet Yarworth said, "We just weren't up mentally. It's disappointing about not being able to go 7-3. We should have won this one."

There were some highlights in the loss. UMass' strong 400 medley relay team of Mark Surette, Mike Hoover, Chris Clarke, and Chris Porter won to start the meet on a good note. Porter won the 200 freestrle, Hoover won the 200 individual medley, and Phil Surette won the 200 breaststroke. The 400 freestyle relay team of Jeff Piaget, John Piazza, Paul McNeil, and Porter also took first. In the diving competition, John Macurdy placed first in the three meter event.

Yarworth attributed his team's poor performance to the fact that his swimmers are now in the first part of their "taper" for the New England championships.

"They sort of have a down period. Their bodies get a different feeling in the water and it takes some time for them to get used to it. This usually happens to us at this point in the season," Yarworth said.

On tonight's match-up against Amherst, Yarworth said, "The meet looks real close. Amherst usually swims very well at this time of year."

Yarworth sees the sprint events and the diving competitions as key areas for a UMass victory. "Sprints have been a big problem for us all season long. We just don't have a guy who can dominate in the short events," Yarworth said.

Amherst is led by Gary Anderson and Lee Smith. Anderson is an excellent all-around swimmer according to Yarworth. Smith is a fine sprinter and Yarworth anticipates his race against UMass' Porter in the 100 freestyle as being "an excellent one."

This will be the final meet for the team before the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships and the New England championships. "We've got a chance to finish with a winning record. I hope this one goes our way," Yarworth said.

Men gymnasts win

By JOE PETRIN
Collegian Correspondent

With a solid all around performance, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team defeated Cortland St. Saturday 253.85-243.65. UMass was superior on the pommel horse 41.10-33.75, and won the parallel bar event 40.30-38.20, en route to their victory.

The Minutemen were without top all around performer Reri Mathieson, but fortunately Eric Cicerone was there to take up the slack. Tri-captain Willy Stevens gave credit where credit was due.

Tri-captain Willy Stevens performs his routine on the still rings.

"We had a great performance today from Eric Cicerone. He usually just does the rings but today he went on five events. He did a fantastic job and he was the star for us."

Cicerone saw more action Saturday in order to fill the void left by Mathieson. He worked hard in practice, got help from his teammates and it paid off.

"Coach Johnson helped me put things together. He really helped me out and encouraged me. The team was behind me all the way and they gave me confidence," said Cicerone.

Mark Guevillon did a full difficulty set on the pommel horse which included a shirlock dismount. He scored an 8.8 on the event, his highest ever in competition.

Tony Sbarra had a solid highbar routine in scoring a 9.15. Stevens competed in every event and received a 9.2 on the highbars and a 9.35 for his hand spring front tucked vault.

Other standout performances for the Minutemen were by Jim Corbett in the floor exercise and on the vault (9.10), Ken Dougherty on the pommel horse (9.10), Joe Demarco on the still rings (9.05), and Phil Gorgone with his 9.25 vault.

High man for the meet was Cortland's Ron Lievendag with a total of 52.15. The highest individual score was also recorded by Cortland as Derrick Cornelious scored a 9.70 on his high flying vault.

Coach Roy Johnson was expecting a little more from his squad but for the most part he was satisfied.

"I thought that we would score at least 254, but we weren't far off. We could've done better on the highbar. We usually score higher on that event than we did today," said Johnson. He also went on to point out the strength of his team. "We scored a 254 today without our top all around performer. I think that shows that we have depth and a good future if we can do that without our top man."

The gymnastics record low stands at 8-8. They are gearing up for the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League championships, March 16-17. Their next meet is Feb. 18, against M.I.T., in Boyden at 7:00 p.m.

Black Bears edge Minutewomen

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Court Report gave only one warning in their forecast of the 1983-1984 University of Massachusetts women's basketball team. 'The Minutewomen remain a young club whose only problem may be lack of experience.'

Lack of experience and lack of a 'killer' instinct led UMass to their twelfth defeat of the season. The University of Maine Black Bears were the recipients of the UMass giveaway, 72-71.

The Minutewomen had countless opportunities to take control of the contest but were unable to get any offense going. The score was tied eight times during the second half but neither team pulled away. In the waning seconds UMass still had opportunities to leave the Cage with a victory.

Rebecca Kucks had the first opportunity to put UMass ahead when she pulled down a tough offensive rebound but came down with one foot out of bounds, thus losing possession. The Black Bears came down the court up by one and were shut down by UMass, but then disaster struck UMass again. In the battle under the boards for the rebound, Karen Damminger just lost control of the ball and it flew out of bounds. UMass was forced to foul the Black Bears on the ensuing throw in. Maine's Tammy Gardiner hit both foul shots, putting Maine up by three. With only five seconds left Wendy Ward hit a 20-footer but it was too little, too late and the buzzer sounded with the score frozen at 72-71.

Aside from their inexperience, UMass was also hampered by some excellent free-throw shooting of the Black Bears. Maine hit 22 of 27 free throws, compared to 11 of 14 for UMass.

"We can't send a team that shoots that well to the line," lamented a disappointed UMass Coach Barbara Stevens.

The first half of the game was a 'see-saw' battle. Both teams seemed happy to trade baskets. Within that 20 minutes, UMass held leads ranging from two to five points. The end of the first half gave some indication of what might be in store for the second half. Maine closed the five point bulge in the last three minutes and left the floor at the half tied at 38.

Simply stated, the women just weren't sharp offensively or defensively, but there were some bright spots. Once again the team had four players in double figures, led by Karen Fitzgerald with 15 points. The team shot an impressive 85 percent from the charity stripe.

UMass now sports an 8-12 record. The women will be travelling to Chestnut Hill tomorrow night where they will be facing Boston College in the first meeting between these two teams this season.

Wrestlers finish season by losing two more

The UMass wrestling team ended their dismal 1-16 season with back to back losses to Brown and Princeton this past weekend. The Princeton Tigers felled the Minutemen 47-6 before the Brown Bruins took advantageof UMass' upper weight weakness to gain a come from behind victory, 28-17.

UMass forfeited the 118 pound spot in both matches. The Minutemen scored their only points against Princeton at the 126 and 167 brackets. Freshman Chris Lee managed a 4-4 tie and Captain Scott McQuaide got back on track by outpointing his oppenent 7-2.

It was all Princeton after that as Minutemen Phillipe Durant, Brian Shaughnessy, and Vin McEntee suffered pins at the 134, 177, and 190 brackets respectively.

UMass freshman Paul Hardy dropped a 14-1 decision at the 150 pound weight class before 158 pounder Mike Bossi was outpointed 6-2 to put the Minutemen down 29-3. UMass forfeited the 142 and heavyweight spots to make the final 47-6.

The Minutemen kept it closer against Brown, however the end result was the same. Chris Lee and Mike Hanlon both lost three point decisions at the 126 and 134 spots respectively to give the Bruins a 12-0 lead.

UMass began to turn things around on their Ivy League oppenent as Wes Beckwith won a three point decision at the 142 pound weight class. Mike Bossi went on to pin his oppenent at the 150 spot and Paul Hardy took a three pointer at 158 to tie the score at 12.

Senior Scott McQuaide demolished his adversary 30-13 to give the Minutemen a short lived five point lead before UMass' victory hopes caved in.

The Bruins won five point decisions over Brian Shaughnessy and Tony Gaeta at the 177 and heavyweight spots respectively. They sandwiched a pin over Minuteman Vin McEntee at 190 pounds in between these victories to give Brown a 28-17 win.

To say this season was bad sould be an extreme understatement, however one must remember that this team is made up of mostly freshmen.

"Give them credit," said Coach Rick Freitas, "These guys are primarily high school hot shots who aren't used to this kind of competition. They come here and start wrestling guys who've been grappling at this level for three or four years."

"It's tough for these freshmen who are coming right out of high school and starting against much more experienced division one wrestlers," said Captain Scott McQuaide. "Most of these guys should be second or third stringers this year for the learning experience. When I was a freshman, I couldn't touch the starter. I was a backup and afforded the time to learn before my first match. These guys aren't getting that chance. It's really too bad," added McQuaide.

"They're a hard nosed bunch of kids who could have quit at any time during the season but didn't," said Freitas.

The New England Championships will be held at Boyden Gym the weekend of the 25th and 26th. Some of the best wrestlers in the East will compete in this tourney.

Neysmith would add one more jam, going over everybody on a missed free-throw, to get the score to 74-59, before fouling out with six minutes left.

With Russell, who finished with 18 points in 22 minutes, already fouled out, (Hempel and Smith would finish with four each for the foul plagued Minutemen, who were whistled for nine offensive calls) things got sticky for the first time. Behind Terry Graves 10 points (23 total), the Nittany Lions whittled the lead to five with 1:03 left. Massachusetts only managed to hit 9-16 free throws during that stretch but did cut time off the clock, and time ran out for Penn. St.

Pickett resigns as football coach

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Citing personal reasons, University of Massachusetts head football coach Bob Pickett resigned Saturday after six years as Minuteman coach and four Yankee Conference crowns.

Pickett said he has accepted a job in the office of the Dean of Physical Education.

"Coaching takes a lot of time away from family and I've reached a point where I'd like some of that back, "Pickett said. "Twenty-five years is a long time coaching football. I think I've outlived the longevity of football coaches and I think this is the best time to do it."

The University has made no move to name a successor as of yet. Dr. David Bischoff, dean of the physical education department said.

Pickett, 50, has been coaching on the high school and college level since his graduation from Maine in 1959.

When asked if losing had contributed to his resignation, Pickett said, "It's not pleasant to lose." He did admit that losing had "something to do with it." UMass posted records of 5-6 and 3-8 the last two seasons.

"It was a hard decision to leave the game," Pickett said. "Our recruiting is over and this is a good time to leave.

"It was nothing on the spur of the moment," he added.

Pickett, who compiled a 36-28 record as UMass head coach, doesn't know what he will be doing in the Dean's office. But, Bischoff said it would be "something important."

Pickett was named head coach in 1978 and in his first year. he led UMass to a 9-4 record and berth in the Division I-AA title game. Florida A&M defeated UMass 35-28 in the Pioneer Bowl but the Minutemen still won the Lambert Trophy that year as the best I-AA team in the East.

After graduating from Maine, Pickett was a high school coach in New Hampshire until 1966. He was named New Hampshire high school coach of the year in 1962 and 1964.

Pickett joined the Maine coaching staff in 1966 and stayed there until 1971 when he was named defensive coordinator at Massachusetts.

Former UMass head football coach Bob Pickett, at a game earlier this season, resigned on Saturday.

Players react to resignation

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Players on the University of Massachusetts football team were shocked to learn of coach Bob Pickett's resignation Saturday according to several of the players.

"Well, like everybody else, we were shocked and surprised," sophomore Jim Simeone said. "Nobody expected it."

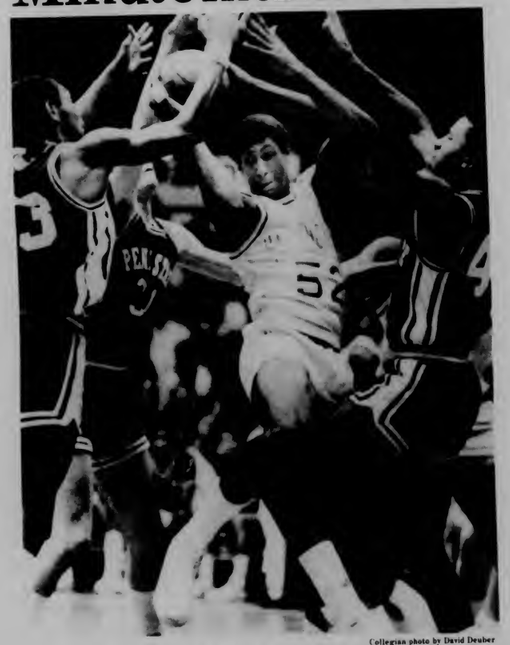
Pickett called the players to a 4 p.m. meeting at the stadium on Saturday. "He wanted to let the ballplayers know first," John Crowley, a sophomore defensive back said.

"I think that they were very surprised," Pickett said at the 6 p.m. press conference Saturday night. "It was emotional...because you get to love people in the locker room."

"It was a pretty emotional moment," Bob Simeone, a junior wide receiver said. "He is just a great guy. I'm sad to see him go."

"I thought it was a sad situation," Sal Tartaglione, a sophomore lineman said.

A few players broke down and there was some hugging and handshaking. And there was respect for their now former coach who the players had worked so hard with during the season and in the off-season.



"We call it a family," Crowley said.

As of now, the players don't know what will be happening in the future. "We know as much as you do," Bob Simeone said. "We'll just have to wait and see what happens."

"No one knows what is going to happen," Tartaglione said.

The only thing that is certain is that coach Pickett will not be behind the UMass bench next fall much to the dismay of the members of the Massachusetts football squad.

Minutemen hold off Penn State, 88-81

UMass senior co-captain Edwin Green finds himself surrounded by Nittany Lions as he pulls down a rebound.

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

Outside, a thick night fog had blanketed the campus grounds. If the same conditions had persisted inside the Curry Hicks Cage it may not have affected the Minutemen anyway, as the skywalkers were out in force for Massachusetts' 88-81 dispatching of Penn State Saturday evening.

John Hempel led the way to the Minutemen's fourth win in their past five games, (now 5-7 and moving up in the Atlantic 10, 9-11 overall). He had a game high 27 points while showing no ill effects from his mild concussion suffered in the scary fall he took Thursday night against St. Bonaventure. Hempel canned 9-18 from the floor and a perfect 9-9 at the line to equal his highest point total of the season. But while Hempel was hot, the element that really lit the Cage up was the dunk show Massachusetts provided for the capacity crowd. There were five in all, and every one was bonafide rim-wrecker.

The leader here was Horace Neysmith who not only had two rafter slams of his own but again dominated the baseline with another perfect shooting night from the floor. The junior hit 6-6 and has now buried his last 16 field goals and ran his season shooting percentage to a smooth 64 percent.

"It's a confidence factor," grinned Neysmith afterwards. "And I'm not going to let it stop from building. It's just gonna build and build and build."

The dunk fiesta began seven minutes into the game. Edwin Green did the honors with a duplication of his one hand curl Thursday night. On the previous play, Carl Smith had stolen the ball at midcourt and the crowd began to roar as Green broke away looking for the set-up. However, Smith's pass was one step too far and Green had to settle for a layup. This time though, Green stripped the ball and went in all alone, to give the Minutemen a 16-11 lead.

Neysmith was next two minutes later when he took a pretty alleyoop pass from Jackie Sheehan for a two-handed slam that would have made Dominique Wilkins proud. It was not the only nice pass Sheehan would make as the sophomore transfer student handed out eight assists in 22 minutes, his longest stint this year.

"Our front line is bigger than Penn State's, " reflected Sheehan later. "They can score, there's no doubt about that. I know my role is to get the ball down low."

The Minutemen went to the lokcer room with a 13 point halftime lead, 48-35, which saw three Minutemen starters, Hempel, Green, and Donald Russell, already in double figures. They built the margin to 17 at 58-41, three minutes into the second half.

In that time the crowd was up twice more for two other slams, one with authority and one that was sweet. First, Green took a Neysmith feed for a stick from the left side to make it 52-39, and then it was time for a surprise.

Carl Smith picked his man's pocket at half court as Russell broke away alone. Smith, the 5'11" freshman used to setting his team mates up, saw Russell but also saw his own lane wide open, and as Russell stepped aside, he went straight in for the one-handed slam that brought the house down.

Valentine's Day : A time for love

Artress White

Kim Hardock

Mike Whalen

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students usually have a lot to think about, from how they are going to pass their next E core to what they are going to do Saturday night. But today, most students will have only one thing on their mind, love.

Today is Valentine's Day, a day when people tell each other, "I love you." For some it is a time to be with a loved one, for others it is time to call or send a card to a distant friend or relative.

Valentine's Day has been celebrated as a romantic holiday since the 16th century when, according to The Book of Days, men sent women anonymous notes declaring their love.

People have different views of Valentine's Dav. ranging from joy that there is a holiday for love to distaste for the greeting card industry's commercialization of the day.

"I think it's a holiday created to point out the importance of romantic relationship or friendship in an otherwise harsh society," said Vic Paquette, a UMass College of Arts and Sciences major from Norwood.

According to The Book of Days, it was believed in the 1400s that the first person someone saw on Valentine's Day would be his or her true love.

"It's a day for sharing love with family, friends, being with people you love," said Kim Hardock, a psychology major from Andover.

Andrew Bartlett, a zoology major from Hadley, said the holiday is one of the most important days of the year because "it makes people think about loving each other, and that's the most important thing about life.

There are two things closely associated with Valentines Day, Cupid and greeting cards. Some students said the day was not important to them because of the latter.

"I think it's pretty much a greeting card holiday, that's why I refuse to buy from the greeting card industry," said Julia Sturges, a botany major from Vinyard Haven, Mass.

Yesterday, hoards of people gathered at the University Store in hopes of getting that special card for that special someone.

The crowds "will be worse today," said John Kuusisto, merchandise manager for the store. "It's a card holiday, no doubt, people do buy other things but basically just greeting cards."

Michael Goddard, a communication studies major from Littlon, said it is a day for romantics, himself included.

"As a hopeless romantic and someone who is always wearing his heart out on his sleeve, I think it's great to set aside a day to honor that crazy nut cupid," Goddard said.

Cupid was not originally associated with Valentines Day, which is named for the Catholic saint, Valentine who was martyred on Feb. 14 in 269 A.D. according to The Book of Saints.

Valentine's Day has evolved into much more than a day to celebrate the death of a saint, it has become a day to be with, long to be with, loved ones.

For Mike Whalen, a chemistry major from Westwood, this Valentine's Day will not be easy.

"It's kinda tough because my girlfriend lives far away." he said.

Valentine's Day is not only a day to tell someone you love them, it is also a day which "Means you have to wear red," said Artress White, a journalism major from Wilbraham.

It is also a day when "you think about a person in your life like your mother or someone you want to love," said Kevin Looby, a history major from Natick.

Martha Desimone, a nutrition major from East Longmeadow, said it is a day to "spread a little love."

When tomorrow comes, UMass students will be faced with many of the same problems, from whether or not to brave the Hatch food, to how to convince Whitmore to ignore the fact that Monday was the deadline for add/drop.

But for today, those problems are put on the shelf as students, professors and others spread a little love, especially to that special Valentine.

Hadley may drop PVTA

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The Hadley Board of Selectmen will try to reach a compromise with officials of the Hampshire and Mountain Farms malls on sharing the cost of the Pioneer Valley Transit bus service in that town at a meeting this Friday.

Selectman Donald Pipczynski said yesterday that the board will discuss "dollars and cents" and try to reach a written agreement with the merchants of the malls on Route 9 to help pay for the bus service which costs Hadley taxpayers approximately $14,500 a year.

"We will be looking for a happy medium," he said.

Selectman Harry Barstow, at a meeting with the board and PVTA officials, said the merchants want the buses to stop at the mall entrances if they share the cost of the service.

PVTA buses make six stops including stops at the malls, along the six mile stretch of Route 9 which goes through Hadley, shuttling some 4,000 students daily. Hadley's assessment is $114,000, but the town is reimbursed by the Five College System which receives state and federal grants.

Last year amid discontent with the bus service among Hadley residents, a Town Meeting ammendment to withdraw from the transit system was passed but was found to be not legally binding, Pipczynski said.

If an agreement is not made this Friday, Pipczynski said the board would have to decide whether to put a referendum to withdraw from the transit service on the ballot in the town's election next month. He said the board has until Feb. 27 to make a decision.

"As it stands, Hadley will stay with the PVTA, at least this year," Barstow said.

Rape suspect sought by police

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

A 17 year-old Connecticut resident reported to Amherst police that she had been raped Friday night after she was abducted in her car and forced to drive from Connecticut to Amherst.

Police said yesterday that the victim claimed she had been parked near her home in Connecticut around 9 p.m. Friday night when a white male, about 30 years old with brown hair, a moustache, and medium build entered her vehicle and demanded she drive to Amherst, where he allegedly raped her.

She reported the attack to the police after they responded to a disturbance call at the East Pleasant Apartments about 12:30 a.m. Saturday. The woman was treated at Cooley-Dickinson hospital and released.

The victim's car was found in Amherst at 4:30 a.m. Saturday and impounded by police. The incident is under investigation and there are no suspects so far, police said.

Police responded to a disturbance at Brittany Manor Sunday night and reported that two roommates had had an argument. One had a wound on his upper forearm and was treated and released from Cooley-Dickinson Hospital. Both were advised by police to seek complaints in district court.

Police arrested a 41 year-old Amherst resident Saturday at 1:17 a.m. on North Pleasant St. and charged him with disorderly conduct and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. The arrest was the result of an altercation which occured Friday night at his Rolling Ridge Road home. The man allegedly struck a friend with a chair.

An Amherst fireman reported Friday night that two firefighting helmets valued at $35 each, were stolen from a truck at the Allen St. Station.

A pizza delivery man reported his car stolen from a North Pleasant St. residence Sunday morning. Police recovered the car on the University of Massachusetts campus about 2 p.m. Sunday. The car radio was missing.

A woman reported her pocketbook stolen from Poor Richards Saturday night. It contained $12 and valuable personal papers.

Fraternity apologizes for ad

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A recent fraternity rush newspaper advertisement has prompted the University of Massachusetts director of Greek Affairs to send a letter of apology to offended housing staff members.

The advertisement for a rush at the Delta Chi fraternity, which ran in last Tuesday's edition of the Collegian, advised prospective pledges that "It's 1984, and Big Brother (your R.A.) is watching you! Get out while you can!"

Michael L. Schardein, director of Greek Affairs, sent a letter yesterday to all resident assistants, chapter presidents of UMass fraternities and sororities, the Interfraternity Council, the Panhellenic (Sorority) Council and the Delta Chi National Headquarters.

"I must apologize for the Delta Chi fraternity rush advertising that appeared in the Tuesday, February 7 issue of the Collegian," Schardein wrote in the letter. "The residence hall program at the University of Massachusetts is one of the finest in America and we at the University feel that the quality of this program is the result of having an outstanding core of residence assistants.

"...We in Greek Affairs are disturbed that anyone lacks the sensitivity and awareness needed to attack another part of campus and especially the resident assistant program.

"...The Greeks don't understand why people haven't supported them, yet to those outside the Greek area it has always been clear...I can assure you of our response and our full agreement with your disgust with Delta Chi or any unaware group, we are truly sorry this occured and we hope you accept our apology."

Schardein said yesterday that he is a strong supporter of the residence hall system and felt the letter was needed to apologize for the action of Delta Chi.

"I knew they (the housing staff) were angry and I realize that the ad was unfair. It's something we all have to learn — not to hurt people in this manner."

Schardein said he expects "no action" will be taken against the frat.

"We have a co-operation with the headquarters of all frats at UMass. We tell them when we do something and vice-versa. They are aware of what happened."

Members of the Field-Grayson and Webster-Dickinson dormitory staffs wrote a letter to the Collegian complaining about the ad, but it now appears that the matter is resolved.

"I think it was handled well," said Field-Grayson Resident Director Ted Mone. "The letter was a nice gesture by the Greek people."

Chris Comeau, president of Delta Chi, which also sent a letter of apology to the Editorial Page editor of the Collegian, said that his frat "is sorry we offended anyone."

"The rush ad was meant to be a takeoff of the book '1984' and the reaction has hurt us a little bit. We stepped on a few toes I guess," he said.

"But I had a talk with Mike (Schardein) and things are back to normal. It will not happen again," Comeau said.

Plans call for Marine pullout by mid-March

WASHINTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has set in motion plans to withdraw the U.S. Marines from Lebanon before mid-March, officials said yesterday.

"The White House has made a decision to get the Marines out of Beirut and on the amphibious ships offshore within 30 days from last Saturday," said an administration official who spoke only on condition he remain anonymous.

"The clock started then," added this official, who said the decision was made after Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger delivered the Pentagon's proposal for withdrawing the Marines to the White House last Friday.

Such a timetable would bring the 1,200-1,300 Marines serving in the multi-national force from their positions at the Beirut International Airport to the ships by March 12.

Officials said last week a relatively small number of U.S. military personnel, perhaps 200 or so, would remain to guard the U.S. embassy, train the Lebanese army and handle communications and other tasks.

Earlier yesterday, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan was moving toward a withdrawal of the Marines to the ships within 30 days and that "we will do so if it is consistent with the political and military situation."

American skier wins gold

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — Debbie Armstrong, in only her second year on the U.S. ski team, became the first American gold medalist at the 1984 Winter Games yesterday, leading a 1-2 U.S. sweep of the giant slalom.

The gold medal was the first for an American woman in the giant slalom since Andrea Mead-Lawrence won the event at the 1952 Games in Oslo, Norway.

After a slow start, the U.S. team was on its way with a vengeance. The pairs team of Kitty and Peter Carruthers put the Americans on the chart with a silver in the figure skating competition on Sunday.

Yesterday Armstrong, of Seattle, and Christin Cooper of Sun Valley, Idaho, took the top two spots in the giant slalom in commanding fashion. Armstrong, second to Cooper after the morning's first run, turned in a time of 1 minute, 12.01 seconds over the second run to win in 2:20.98.

Cooper had a time of 2:21.38 — 1:08.87 on the first run and 1:12.51 on the second run.

Perrine Pelen of France won the bronze medal in 2:21.40, nearly a half second behind the 20-year-old Armstrong. Pelen had also won a bronze in the event at the Lake Placid Games in 1980.

Tamara McKinney of Squaw Valley, Calif., eighth after one run, had 1:11.72, the fastest time over the second course, to move into fourth, missing a 1-2-3 U.S. sweep by .43 seconds.

Also yesterday, three-time world champion Scott Hamilton of Denver took a commanding lead after the compulsory figures of the men s figure skating.

Then, with the strong U.S. women's ski team hoping to further take up the slack, Cooper and Armstrong stood 1-2 after the first run of the giant slalom. They were only one-tenth of a second apart and nearly three-quarters of a second ahead of Blanca Fernandez-Ochoa of Spain.

It was a lock. All they had to do was stay on their skis.

Armstrong turned in a near perfect second run. Cooper had a little trouble at the top of the hill, and that probably cost her the gold.

The gold medal was the first in Alpine skiing for the United States since Barbara Cochran won the slalom at Sapporo, Japan, in 1972.

Bush to stress cooperation at Soviet talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's spokesman called yesterday on the new Soviet leader, Konstantin U. Chernenko, to work with the United States toward "greater mutual understanding and constructive cooperation."

Hours after Chernenko was chosen to succeed Yuri Andropov as head of the Soviet Communist Party, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said any meeting between the new Soviet leader and Reagan would have to be "well prepared" and would depend on a "reasonable promise for success in results," the criteria that had been applied in the past to such a conference.

Speakes told reporters yesterday:

"We invite the new leaders of the Soviet Union to work with us in establishing a basis for greater mutual understanding and constructive cooperation.

"This would apply to Mr. Chernenko and others who serve in institutional positions of authority in the Soviet Union."

Speakes said Vice President George Bush, on his way to Moscow for Andropov's funderal, would "stress our commitment to peace and, in particular, to the search for mutually acceptable agreements" during his discussions in the Soviet capital.

Kidney patients get help

BOSTON — A machine that crushes kidney stones by sending underwater shock waves through patients could allow 150,000 Americans to avoid surgery each year, doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital said yesterday.

The device, developed in Munich, West Germany, has a 99 percent success rate, according to Dr. Stephen Dretler, an MGH urologist in charge of the project.

Patients undergoing the treatment are sedated and immersed in a water bath while shock waves pound the kidney stone over and over until it crumbles into pieces small enough to be flushed out with urine.

"This is an enormous breakthrough. This is a quantum leap in treatment," Dretler said at a news conference.

The Food and Drug Administration has given approval for six U.S. hospitals to begin using the lithotripter, or "stone crusher," on an experimental basis. The devices now are being assembled at Massachusetts General and at Methodist Hospital in Indianapolis.

After a few hundred trials, the FDA will decide whether to allow the machines to be sold elsewhere in the United States, Dretler said. Dave Duarte, a spokesman for the FDA, said it is up to the manufacturer to decide when to submit data on the machine for final approval.

About 5 million people each year suffer from kidney stones, which usually are formed from calcium salts in the urine and cause great pain. Most stones are small and pass through the system on their own, but about 200,000 people need surgery annually, according to Martin Bander, spokesman for the hospital.

Dretler said the shock wave treatment would be useful for about three-quarters of those now requiring surgery.

State seeks EDB ban

BOSTON — The potential threat to public health outweighs the cost to business in Massachusetts' emergency controls on food tainted with the pesticide EDB, a lawyer told the state Supreme Court yesterday.

Assistant Attorney General Carl Valvo asked the justices to reimpose the state's toughest-in-the-nation state limits on the suspected cancer-causing chemical. He said a lower court judge acted improperly last Thursday in granting an injunction and removing the ban at the request of the grain industry.

Students crowd Whitmore to beat deadlines

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Deadline for add/drop forms, the voter registration drive, and the highest University enrollment to date all contributed to the large volume of students who crowded Whitmore Administration Building yesterday.

"It has not slowed down yet," Registrar Ralph Jones said of the masses of students handing in forms. Jones said he had expected it would be busier this semester because of the high enrollment factor, and tables were set up outside of the office to handle the procedure more efficiently.

Jones said his office will continue to accept the forms even though the deadline has passed. "We will take them in the morning, but after that students will have to meet with their academic dean to complete changes," he said.

Traditionally, the last day for change acceptances "is always the worst as far as crowds are concerned," Jones said. Last year the Registrar's Office accepted an estimated 3,500 adds and drops. That many, combined with students registering to vote, made for a "complicated situation," he said.

Joel Weissman, a commuter area senator who helped organize the registration drive, said they had originally planned to occupy the large desk at the entrance of the building, but after anticipating problems with "crowd control" they moved the project downstairs.

"We had a successful day, but more students probably would have registered if we were upstairs," Weissman said.

Jones attributed the high student enrollment to fewer withdrawals.

"Students are staying here," he said.

One reason for this decreased withdrawal rate is action the admissions office has been exercising concerning undeclared majors. Fewer students, Jones said, are being given "alternate acceptance" status, where applicants to a closed major are put in a general category.

"This is where you lose many students after a year or two, they become frustrated and leave," he said.

Registration drive concludes today

Voter registration tables will be set up from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. today on the Campus Center concourse. This is the last opportunity for students to register to vote in the March 13 Democratic presidential primary.

Today will be the final day of "UMass Big Vote '84," a voter registration drive organized by five student groups. Registration on campus last week yielded almost 2,000 new voters, according to the Amherst town clerk.

Estelle Matusko said a total of 626 people registered last Monday in the Campus Center, and 362 more signed up Tuesday in Berkshire Dining Commons. Wednesday, 288 people registered at Worcester Dining Commons; Thursday, 410 people registered in Hampshire Dining Commons. At Franklin Dining Commons Friday, 230 new voter registrants were recorded, a total of 1,916 for the week.

In accordance with state law, out-of-state students may vote in Massachusetts using their campus addresses as their place of residence, Matusko said. Voters must be registered Democrats or Independents to vote in the upcoming primary.

Disabled persons can receive election ballots at home and mark them in the presence of a notary public. Voters who are permanently disabled must have a doctor's certificate filed with the town clerk to have a ballot mailed to their home address. Notarization is not necessary in this case.

Duffy addressing conference in D.C.

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy will discuss the role of U.S. export control policy in international trade with a group of top policymakers from government, industry and academia today in Washington, D.C.

The discussion is being sponsored by the National Academy of Sciences and Engineering in order to examine the foreign policy effects of controlling U.S. information and equipment exports, an area Duffy said he dealt with as assistant secretary of state to the Carter Administration.

"While assistant secretary of state, I...(worked on) issues of export control for the People's Republic of China prior to (U.S.) recognition of China," Duffy said.

The reason academics are getting involved in the discussion is because the control of information affects them.

"The involvement has to do with the relation of the national concern for security with the freedom of (University) research," Duffy said.

UMass career fair held all day today

By KATHY HART
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Cooperative Education Office will hold a fair with a panel discussion beginning at 10:30 a.m. in the Campus Center tomorrow to help students learn about this alternate source of career development on campus, according to Joan Stoia, office coordinator.

Stoia said the co-op office opened last year to help students gain paid field experience to complement their studies. A spinoff of the office Internships, which helped it obtain a grant to get started, the co-op program is unique in that students work for salary, not credit, Stoia said.

The panel will discuss the benefits of co-op education, and will feature Russ Johnson, manager of the U.S. College Relations for Digital Equipment Corporation. He will be joined by Amy Argento, of University Placement Services, and three returning co-op students.

Hour long information sessions will be held all afternoon. These sessions will be conducted by 17 employers who will present displays, video-tapes, and talk about what its like to work for them.

The fair is funded by the dean's office of the School of Management and the College of Natural Resources.

"The Co-op Office is in touch with influential people; employers with a lot of faith in UMass students," said Stoia. "We have a broad listing of jobs, and can offer positions to interested students."

The Co-op Office is located in 110 Thompson, and interested students can drop by anytime to sign up for an information session. The office opens a file of a student's interests, and when a job comes in matching those interests, the office notifies the student.

Stoia hopes the fair will generate interest in the co-op program. She sees the Co-op Office as a "learning experience toward a better career choice."

Women gain power in election process

More women registering to vote

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

An expanded electorate and an estimated voter turnout of more than six million women could conceivably bring a Democratic Party victory in the 1984 election, according to Ann Lewis, Polital Director of the Democratic National Committee (DNC).

Lewis told a group of 30 college women attending last weekend's National Student Voter Registration Conference at Harvard University, that the women's vote can "no longer be understated because more and more women are registering to vote.

"Across the country women are forming coalition campaigns, representing all the people, not just white, male policy makers," she said.

In 1980, women were 8 percent less likely to vote for Ronald Reagan than men were, and in a study of voter attitudes in 1982, women favored Democrats by 16 points. A recent poll conducted by ABC News and the Washington Post predicted that Reagan would defeat Mondale among men 55-41, but he would lose to Mondale among women voters, 51-43, a 12 point margin.

Missy Bryant, Coordinator of Women's Vote '84 and a member of the DNC, said young women and minority women are more likely to vote in the next election because there are 9 million more voting age women than men, and women are going to the polls at the same rate as men for the first time in history.

"Our goal is to organize women's voter registration drive task forces in every state," she said. "So far, 22 states have already organized and are registering women, and implementing women's vote projects."

Lewis said the women's vote differs from men's on issues concerning war, comparable worth, foreign policy, arms control, social spending, and reproductive freedoms.

"Women think people should get what they need," she said; "and men think people should get what they deserve."

Since 1981, Bryant said, over 2.5 million women and over 2.5 million children have fallen below the poverty level, a socio-economic development referred to as the "feminization of poverty."

"Single mothers who work full time and raise a family are most affected and threatened by current administration policies," Bryant said.

Political gender gap still exists

By MELISSA K. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Party bosses and political candidates once considered the women's vote unimportant because women tended to rely on men for guidance when voting.

That view has changed however, according to Political Science Professor Jean Elshtain, "The 1980 Presidential election was the first since female suffrage to show significantly different voting patterns between men and women." Elshtain said.

In an article Elshtain said in the Feb. 1984 edition of The Progressive, "Women's votes in 1980 largely followed party lines and showed little change from 1976 when Jimmy Carter received 45 percent and Ronald Reagan 47 percent. But men's voting showed a significant shift to Reagan in 1980 and it was this change in male voting patterns that highlighted a gender gap."

The gender gap is on issues Elshtain said "have historically been regarded as traditional female values - peace and social welfare."

According to Kathleen Francovic, director of surveys for CBS News, "Regardless of age, education, or socio-economic status, a gender gap persits on issues involving force, war, and aggression."

"Peace has always been important as a woman's issue and there is a powerful tradition that assumes an affinity between women and nonviolence," Elshtain said.

According to a New York Times Gallup Poll, conducted last August, Reagan's performance rating declined by five full percentage points in July. The drop, said the Times, "was caused almost entirely by a loss of confidence of women, as compared with 51 percent of men, approved of the way Reagan was handling his job."

"It seems that women's stronger identification with peace and social compassion has been brought to the fore by Ronald Reagan's candidacy and Presidency," Elshtain said.

This is because "many more woman fear the liklihood of nuclear war and mistrust Ronald Reagan's ability to keep the peace" she said.

Elshtain said she envisions a "a gender gap evolving into a gender politics that forges new and creative coalitions uniting women - and men - previously divided by race, class, or their positions on ERA and abortion.

Shopper shuttle may harm stores

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Selectboard voiced concern last night over a request for the use of town funds to subsidize the "shopper shuttle" if the route is incorporated into the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) system next semester.

A memo written by James Lindstrom, Amherst Director of Administration and Planning, said the service might adversely affect town interests since the shuttle transports "potential customers of downtown merchants to University Drive and Hadley stores."

However the major opposition to the shuttle is that subsidies which are now available for the Bay Road and Cushman extension bus routes might be diverted into funding the new route.

"I'm surprised it's being initiated without any kind of consultation with the town or consideration by the PVTA," Selectboard Chair Edith Wilkinson said.

$500 taken from the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) was used to pay the operating costs of the service, Student Government Association Co-President Tom Ahern said.

"This has nothing to do with the town because we pay through student fees," he said.

Ahern said the SGA expects $200 from the remainder of the operating costs of the shuttle through May 17. Lindstrom's memo cited a figure of $3,000 for operating the service while Ahern said the shuttle cost $1,700 to run.

If the service is utilized and there is a demand for it to continue next semester, the SGA would "go through the normal channels" and request funding from the PVTA, Ahern said.

Disturbances reported in dorms

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police responded to a report of suspicious persons in the Chadbourne dormitory area at 3:19 a.m. Saturday. One of the males was observed urinating into a parked van and a second male began shouting profanities at the police officers, according to the report. The first subject was found to be intoxicated, and was placed under protective custody, police said, and the second subject was issued a trespass warrant.

Police were dispatched to Cance dormitory lobby shortly before midnight Saturday in response to an alleged fight. Upon arrival, police found two suspects trying to get upstairs and placed them under protective custody after finding the two to be intoxicated.

Police arrested a 22-year-old Amherst resident shortly after 2 a.m. Sunday and charged him with possession of cocaine.

The subject was observed sitting on the ground on the north side of Cance dormitory and was believed to be using the controlled substance, police said. Value of the substance was not estimated.

In other police action:

An 18-year-old Springfield resident was arrested at 11:46 p.m. Saturday and charged with being a disorderly person, according to police. The man was involved in a fight with several members of student security in the middle of Fearing St. extension, police said, and was screaming obscenities.

Police received a report of a one-car motor vehicle accident at 2:49 a.m. Sunday. The subject, driving westbound on Massachusetts Avenue, slid while negotiating a turn and struck a concrete light pole, according to the report. Damage is estimated at $500 to the motor vehicle and $500 to the light pole, police said. The subject was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for treatment of minor injuries, police said.

Oxford program offers credits and travel

The University of Massachusetts "Oxford Summer Seminar" is an opportunity for students to earn credit and travel abroad.

The six-week program, started 19 years ago by UMass Professor of English Earnest Hoffer allows students from varied majors to earn from three to five credits at Trinity College, Oxford.

Undergraduates from Universities across the country take part in the summer program, that offers courses ranging from art history to international business with optional excursions to "Shakespeare at Stratford" or Paris.

The program includes room and board, three meals per day and the course curriculum chosen by the student. Any undergraduate student with a cumulative average of 3.0 or higher may apply. There will be a meeting on Feb. 21 in Bartlett 301 at 7:30 p.m. for those interested. For more information call 545-1914.

Threepenny a cheap review

To the Editor,

I have, for a long time, been disgusted with the poor quality of Arts reviews in the Collegian. People who seem to know nothing about classical music have been assigned to write reviews of such groups as the Paillard Chamber Orchestra and the Tokyo String Quartet. I, being a music student who is interested in the performing arts in general, always look forward to reading reviews of artists I have seen or plays I am curious about. It distresses me greatly to read these reviews and to find only unnecessary catty commentary, unjustified criticism, and an obvious lack of knowledge on the subject.

Michael Cerrato's review of The Threepenny Opera was the last straw. I do not believe he has any knowledge of Brecht and Weill other than the fact that they wrote the opera. He couldn't possibly have even done any research on the two before or after he attended the performance. I certainly did not find the production flawless, but (especially for a non-professional college production) it had excellent consistency, energy, power, and a very good understanding of the play.

Mr. Cerrato was "worried," he said, "because...I didn't like any of the characters." He needn't have worried. One is not supposed to like Brecht's characters. That is one of the main points of the play. His characters (even seemingly innocent Polly Peachum) are not good, kind, likeable people.

The review was so vague — it was hard to understand what the reviewer meant by several lines. For example, "A word here about the music: BAD." He also felt that he had heard all the music before. Is Mr. Cerrato referring to the composer, Weill? Is he at all familiar with the contemporary German vocal and shoe music? Where has he heard music to compare with Weill's? He mentioned that he was annoyed with the repetition in the music. There is more to composing music than writing whatever sounds pretty. Kurt Weill was trying to create an effect. The Threepenny Opera is supposed to shock, scare, and make the audience feel nervous. Weill was translating these emotions into musical language.

I'm sorry, Mr. Cerrato, but Weill and Brecht simply are not Gilbert and Sullivan, nor were they trying to be. So, finally, to the Collegian staff — for the benefit of the paper, its readers, audiences, and performers, try to get more qualified reviewers, and to Mr. Cerrato (in his own words) "If you're not going to do it right..."

Silkwood and nuclear nightmares

While shedding no new light on the mysterious death of Karen Silkwood, the movie Silkwood has thrown the Silkwood case once again into the limelight. Although I found the plot of the film to be somewhat understated and open-ended. The Kerr-McGee Corp. was sufficiently threatened by it to make the following statement: Silkwood is a "highly fictionalized Hollywood dramatization scarcely connected to the facts."

While there may be some truth in that, the truth is in the opposite direction from the company point of view: Kerr-McGee is clearly disavowing any responsibility for the death of Karen Silkwood. One wonders why they would make such a denial, when one considers the film, the all too subtle ways in which their role in the contamination and death of Karen Silkwood was depicted in the film, and, of more serious concern, the incidents and events at the Cimarron nuclear plant which were not addressed in the film, such as the large amounts of missing plutonium.

Karen Silkwood definitely knew about the missing plutonium and the terrifying implications of its absence. If espionage was involved in the stolen plutonium, it might also have contributed to her death. And yet this is hardly mentioned in the movie. While its makers state that Silkwood is based on fact, they presented their facts in such a way that the movie departs from fact.

But perhaps we should not look to art for justice, but to the courts. It is interesting to note that within weeks of Silkwood's release, the U.S. Supreme Court, on January 12, reinstated a $10 billion award for punitive damages granted to the Silkwood children. Is it merely a coincidence, or could the court action occuring at the same time as the film say something about the power of art?

In any event, the court's action will alter the course of nuclear regulatory policy. By a 5 to 4 vote, the Supreme Court upheld an earlier court decision in Oklahoma which had been overturned by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Appellate had ruled against the earlier award on the grounds that federal regulations of radiation hazards excluded legal action at the state level. The Supreme Court reinstatement creates a precedent for nuclear workers to seek punitive damages from the nuclear industry for contamination due to negligence as well as personal damages for medical costs and also pain and suffering following exposure.

The ruling reaffirms the growing role by which states can regulate nuclear policy. Until now, states have been more or less at the mercy of the federal government concerning both private nuclear development and Energy Department projects (mostly military). In fact, sixteen states co-signed the briefs presented by the Silkwood attorneys.

When I recently asked one of them what he thought about the ruling, Atty. Danny Sheehan answered cautiously, "We have to wait and see what happens with the Kerr-McGee appeal and that may take some time." Meanwhile, there are a number of suits and actions being taken which the ruling may immediately affect, most notably concerning the defense department, such as atomic test veterans of the Marshall Islands and landowners adjacent to Rocky Flats nuclear plant where the plutonium trigger mechanisms are made for nuclear weapons.

The Supreme Court has yet to decide on radiation and protection standards for the entire industry nation-wide. Should the court establish such standards in addition to the precedents it has already set with the Silkwood case, then they will serve as an even greater legacy to Karen Silkwood than Silkwood. See it and find out why.

Sign-ups aren't over yet

To the Editor,

The voter Registration drive on campus, organized by the coalition "UMass Big Vote '84", has registered 2,122 students to vote as of Friday. This number of students registering has far surpassed other drives on campus and, with yesterday and today, should register close to 3,000 students. The goal was 2,500.

Much has been made about the process of voter registration in Massachusetts. It is true that the laws governing voter registration in Massachusetts are more restrictive than a majority of the other states in this country. In 29 states, post card registration is used and provides the easiest method for people to register. They need only sign the card in the presence of another adult and mail it in. This allows for door to door canvasses to be used to register voters. Post card registration for Massachusetts is a goal of legislation sponsored and supported by groups across this state, and of student groups on this campus.

Despite the shortcomings of the voter registration laws in this state, and despite the importance of them being changed, we should not let it overshadow the important, neccessary and dedicated work done by the town clerk and assistant registrars in making this drive on campus a reality and a success. UMass Big Vote '84 would like to publicly thank the Amherst Town Clerk Estelle Matuskco and the assistant registrars Rose Quinton, Barbara McGarrah, Beverly Webb, Emily Belt, Betty Halsted, Richard Johnson and Ellen Eagan for having the dedication, faith, and flexibility to come to the campus and register students to vote.

If you haven't registered, do so. If you live on campus or in the dorms, you can register in Amherst today in the Campus Center from 11am to 4pm. It makes sense to register in Amherst not only because of the local issues but because you'll most likely be in Amherst in March for the primaries and for the General election in November.

As a final note, registering students to vote has, as I can see, been a positive experience for the registrars as well as students. They have been impressed by the enthusiasm shown by the students to become involved. This is the kind of positive results that will lead to not only more voter registration on campus but also more respect in the town and state for students as a very real voting force. It is also something we should be proud of.

Anyone heard of Chisolm?

To the Editor.

Whether or not Rev. Jesse Jackson's speaking engagement was properly or improperly funded by the University cannot obscure a fact I'm shocked has escaped everyone's notice: He is not the first black candidate to run for President of the United States. Anyone ever heard of Shirley Chisolm?

Sister cities in the Soviet

Poor Williamstown, Massachusetts: it just happened to find itself paired with a town in the Soviet Union which is located near one (or even more) of the KGB's growing industries: slave labor/concentration camps.

Williamstown, home of Williams College, was paired by Ground Zero, a pro-nuclear freeze organization based in Portland, Oregon, with Romodanovo. Ground Zero started this urban matchmaking project (which has thus far paired over 800 cities and towns in the U.S. and U.S.S.R.) because it will supposedly make "the first strike a knock on the door."

Steven P. Barrett

Well now. For someone in the Soviet Union, "a knock on the door" can have an entirely different meaning than for an American. We don't have anything like the dreaded KGB (Gestapo of the U.S.S.R.) or Gulag to worry about.

The leader for the Williamstown Ground Zero chapter, Lauren Stevens, told Sandra Constantine, a correspondent for the Springfield Morning Union recently, that his group objcted to Romodanovo because of its proximity to forced labor camps (housing religious and political prisoners). He also expressed disappointment because of an apparent lack of tourist facilities (hotels, restaurants, etc.)

Ground Zero really picked a bona-fide loser for a matching "sister-city" for Williamstown. But Stevens provided a neat rationale for this goof-up; volunteers who don't "have the ability to check out things as well as they might want to." In fairness to Mr. Stevens, however, this goof-up in pairing occurred at the Oregon headquarters of Ground Zero.

Well, no wonder. Ground Zero must be more interested in the struggle for any kind of peace to bother with such aggravating nuisances like concentration camps and slave labor prisons. Why let a few instances of Soviet violations of human rights and the Helsinki Agreements to interfere with the cause of "peace?"

The overall impression I received from reading about this episode in cross-cultural exchanges, was that these people in Williamstown were more upset because Romodanovo "may not have sufficient hotels and restaurants to accomodate foreign visitors." Tsk, tsk, what an enormous shame, indeed.

Perhaps if they really wanted to see what the Soviet Union really stands for, (especially in the eyes and minds of many Russians) Ground Zero could always ask the local commissars who run these camps and prisons to spare an extra 50 bunks or so.

This matchup of a genteel, well-to-do, and sheltered town like Williamstown with an inappropriate "sister-city" in the Soviet Union isn't the only one to occur lately. Amherst was matched with Tuymazy, a meat packing and flourmilling center. Hardly a place you'd expect to find the academic wine and cheese set to visit — even in their own back yard; well maybe for "research of the working classes."

Perhaps some observations from David Satter, a Wall St. Journal correspondent who specializes in Soviet matters, might help. In his column, "Kremlin Tortures a Psychiatrist," (Wall St. Journal 12/29/83) Satter had the following to say about what I've discussed above:

"Western participation in exchanges of 'trade unionists' or 'parliamentarians,' joint space ventures, disarmament conferences involving individual Americans and 'private' Soviet citizens, the creation of 'twinned cities' are all grants of legitimacy to the system of organized lying that is generated by the Soviet ideology."

In other words, the Soviets are still more than willing to extend their open hospitality for all "useful idiots" (Lenin's apt description) to come and see for themselves the wonderfully good side of the Soviet Union.

Assuredly, Ground Zero has probably made other "mistakes" in their urban matchmaking service. Since this outfit is so busy that it can't perform the necessary research, I strongly suggest that its Portland staff and its local members write to the "Committee to Stop Chemical Atrocities" for information. In addition to keeping track of Soviet astrocities like the "Yellow Rain" massacres in Afghanistan and Cambodia; this committee, which is based in Washington, D.C., takes a keen interest in the ongoing abuse of human rights in the Soviet Union — namely the slave labor and other concentration camps spread throughout this demonstrably documented empire of evil.

According to a recent publication issued by this committee, there are, (and these are conservative estimates only) three million political, religious and other kinds of prisoners who are being used for slave labor. Some of these other prisoners are an estimated 10,000 Vietnamese men who were sent to the Soviet Union by their new masters in Hanoi for "repayment" of costs incurred by the Soviets during the long Indochina War.

This is what Ground Zero should be more squeamish about — not inadequate hotel accommodations. By the way, my ideal location for a "sister city" is Gorky — that forbidden city where the famed and brave scholar, Andrei Sakharov is "internally exiled" for dissident activities. Anybody care to second the idea?

MasterCard

First National believes that students like you have unlimited potential. But even more than that, we believe in you right now. That's why we want you to know about the special relaxed requirements that enable college students to get a MasterCard.

This is the easiest, fastest, and most certain way for students to get a MasterCard. And we prove it by protecting you with an Unconditional Money Back Guarantee. The MasterCard that you can receive is the same one that is honored by 3 million merchants worldwide — and you'll have a credit line of at least $300.

ENJOY THE CONVENIENCE, SECURITY, AND PRESTIGE OF A MASTERCARD.

But why do you need a MasterCard now. Here are just a few of the reasons why.

ESTABLISH YOUR CREDIT HISTORY. The special relaxed requirements make this the easiest, fastest, and most certain way for you to establish your credit history. In addition, a MasterCard is the perfect credit reference to get credit with merchants and department stores for T.V.'s, furniture, clothes, sporting goods, major appliances, and auto loans. So you are now able to build an excellent credit rating starting from scratch.

SHOPPING AND TRAVEL CONVENIENCE. With a MasterCard, you have charge privileges at more than 3 million places around the world. So you can travel, dine, or shop for things like a new stereo without carrying cash or having to worry about getting your check cashed where they don't know you. Or you can order mail-order gifts . . . reserve a hotel or motel room . . . send flowers . . . even reserve tickets to concerts, sporting events, and shows of all types.

HELP IN AN EMERGENCY. Charge gas, car repairs, and servicing . . . at home or while traveling. For medical bills, MasterCard is accepted by physicians, dentists, optometrist hospitals, pharmacies and veterinarians.

CHECK CASHING CONVENIENCE. A MasterCard is the perfect I.D. to help you get your check cashed where they won't know you. Or get a Cash Advance at more than 100,000 Banking Institutions around the world.

CHOOSE YOUR OWN PAYMENT PLAN. You can pay the full amount of your bill at the end of the month, or if you prefer, you can extend your payments over 36 months on a revolving charge plan. Either way, you have the flexibility that only a credit card can offer.

IT'S EASY TO GET STARTED

This is but a sample of what is available to you when you carry a MasterCard. There is much, much more, and it's completely described in our Credit Card Service Guide you will receive — and it's all yours for just $30. And you take NO RISK, you're protected by First National's Unconditional Guarantee: if you should fail to get a MasterCard after following the simple step-by-step instructions, you will receive a full refund.

THERE'S NO BETTER TIME THAN RIGHT NOW TO APPLY.

So if you'd like to take advantage of these special relaxed requirements to get a MasterCard – take a moment right now to fill out the coupon and mail it to First National along with your payment. This could prove to be the most rewarding investment you will make this year . . . and for many years to come!

Special Note: Because of constantly changing credit conditions and bank policies, we are unable to know how long this special program will continue to be in effect. Therefore, we urge you not to delay. To ensure that you get your MasterCard, please reply promptly.

MAIL NO-RISK COUPON TODAY

First National Bancard, P.O. Box 5128, San Jose, Ca. 95150-5128

Yes! I want to take advantage of the special relaxed requirements that enable students to qualify for a MasterCard. The MasterCard offered in this special program is the same one that is honored by 3 million businesses around the world, and is good for Shopping, Dining, Traveling, and Cash Advances. I am enclosing $30 with the understanding that I am also protected by First National's Unconditional Guarantee: if I fail to get a MasterCard after following the simple step-by-step instructions outlined in the Credit Card Service Guide, I will receive a prompt and full refund.

Minutemen look for third straight at Marist

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team travels to Poughkeepsie, N.Y. today with a lot of questions on their minds.

Will they look past this game to an eagerly-anticipated clash at home against St. Joseph's Thursday night?

Is the curse of road losses over or will the trip to upstate N.Y. produce another nightmare?

And finally when will Horace Neysmith miss?

Marist, an ECAC metro team, with a record 12-8, is not an automatic W. The Red Foxes went down at the Cage last season 51-49, due to their own ineptitude from the foul line. Notre Dame, despite playing at home, defeated Marist by only four points this season.

"We expect a tough game from them," said UMass Coach Ron Gerlufsen. "Marist is a running team with good guards and good athletes on the bench. We have to be careful we don't get into a sloppy turnover-filled contest with them."

As for looking ahead to playing Thursday Gerlufsen is worried. "We have a big Atlantic 10 game coming up against St. Joseph's. But if we want to finish at .500 for the year, Marist is a must win."

The Minutemen, winners of their last two, and four of their last five, are now 9-11 overall and 5-7 in the conference. Penn State fell 88-81 Saturday night in a good offensive effort for UMass.

"We've been playing well on offense, passing well and shooting well," said Gerlufsen, "But the defense has been what's creating the offense."

As for Horace Neysmith, the big junior forward is co-Atlantic 10-player-of-the-week with Rutgers' John Battle. Neysmith shot a perfect 16 of 16 in two games for a total of 36 points. He leads the conference in field goal percentage at .641. The last time a Minuteman won the coveted player-of-the-week was back in 1978 when Alex Eldrige took the honor.

"Horace has been playing well. He's going to the hoop with confidence, and he knows his role better. As for Donald Russell, he's playing great on defense and not forcing his shots on offense. Hopefully John Hempel will keep up his scoring (27 against Penn State) and Edwin (Green) and Carl (Smith) will continue to play well," noted Gerlufsen.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: The game can be heard on WTTT. UMass' nine wins equal last year's total with six games to play. Smith is leading the league in assists with 146; the A-10 season record is Eldrige's with 171. Green leads the conference in blocks with 47 while shooting at a recordbreaking pace of .851 at the line. Hempel leads four players averaging in double figures with 15.4 points a game, Green is at 14.4, Neysmith at 13.5 and Russell 11.4. The team is shooting a fine .712 from the line. Good news: crowd-pleasing Darryl Carter, who will be eligible next season, has been sitting on the UMass bench.

Robin Low sets a UMass record in the floor exercises...

Women gymnasts easily defeat Springfield

By KEVIN DELUCA

Led by the fine all-around performances of Robin Low and Jennifer Pancoast, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team trounced Springfield College and in the process broke the 170 point barrier, 170.25-164.75, this past Saturday at Springfield.

The meet was highlighted by the record-breaking performance of Low in the floor exercises. Low was the last UMass competitor of the meet and her electrifying floor routine put the finishing touches on the Minutewomen's best meet of the year. She earned a score of 9.55, good enough to break the old record in the floor exercises of 9.5, held by Jill Heggie, and good enough to give Low first place in the all-around with a 34.5. Teammate Pancoast was a close second with a 34.2.

"The only problems Robin had were on her first run. Her dancing was perfect," said UMass Coach Ken Anderson.

The meet started off very well for UMass as they had the top three scores in the vault. Lisa Griffin received a 9.15 for a full twist on — handspring off, Low an 8.9 for a pike tsukahara, and Pancoast an 8.85 for a handspring with a full twist. After the vault, UMass was leading, 44-41.45.

In the uneven parallel bars, several UMass gymnasts fell but the Minutewomen still came away with the two top scores. Pancoast and Tricia Harrity, both of whom performed hecht full twists on their dismounts, finished first and second with scores of 8.8 and 8.65, respectively. Nancy Fulton and Ginger Stern of Springfield College tied for third at 8.55. Halfway through the meet, the Minutewomen lead was 85.60-82.25.

On the balance beam, usually one of UMass' strongest events, the Minutewomen had all sorts of problems and accumulated a team score of only 40.35. The Indians had more problems, though, and scored a 39.90, leaving UMass with a 125.95-122.15 lead.

UMass freshman Elizabeth Janney won the beam with a nearly flawless routine performed to the background music of "Joy to the World." Her score was 8.6. Teammate and captain Barbara Lord took second with an 8.5.

"Elizabeth did what she is capable of doing, she finally put it together," said Anderson.

UMass started the meet the way they ended it by once again taking the top three spots, this time in the floor exercises. Pancoast tied Springfield's Stern for third with an 8.7. Griffin followed Pancoast and gave a crowd-pleasing routine worth a 9.2. Then Low followed Griffin with her spectacular record-breaking 9.55. The floor total of 44.30 gave UMass their highest score of the year, 170.25.

"It was the team's highest score of the year but we are capable of much more," Anderson stated.

Against highly touted New Hampshire this Saturday at Boyden, The Minutewomen will need much more if they are going to win.

Uzzo swims to a record, Minutewomen topple UNH

By TOM SCOLLINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team held it's last home meet of the season in Boyden this past weekend against the University of New Hampshire. The healthier Wildcats came out on top 91-48.

It was the last meet in Boyden for six of the women swimmers. Ann-Marie Boness, Caroline Freitas, Lynn Williams, Rosemary Kelsall, Maura Sweeney, and Jean Bushee were all presented with flowers by the team.

Many of the events found the Minutewomen with only one or two entries and they had no entry in the 400 yd. Individual Medley. Coach Valerie Turtle was reluctant to have the women swim who had been sick earlier in the week. In many events UNH was able to pick up all the points by virtue of filling all the spots.

Freshman Allison Uzzo was the star of the meet, setting a Boyden pool and a new school record in the 1650 yd. freestyle. The 1650 is a long strenuous race (33 laps) in which one of the UNH swimmers needed help getting out of the pool. Uzzo's time of 18:12.20 was almost a full minute off the pool record of 19:11.14, and over 13 seconds better than the school record of 18:25.86. "She is one of the strong competitors in that event," observed Turtle, "definitely in the top eight in New England."

Coach Turtle was impressed with the drops in time of many of the women. "Against a tough team like UNH, you try to beat the clock more than you try to beat the team," said Turtle. She was impressed with many of the swimmers including Boness who dropped her times in the 100 yd. breaststroke, 50 yd. freestyle, and 200 yd. IM. Sweeney dropped her times in the 100 and 200 yd. butterfly, Kelsall dropped in the 100 and 200 yd. breaststroke and Cindy Battye did the same in the 200 yd. backstroke.

"I was really pleased with the 200 yd. freestyle relay team,' said Turtle. Sue Freitas, Lori McCluskey, Nancy Stephens, and Elizabeth Feinberg had their best effort of the season taking more than a second off their previous best.

The Minutewomen finish off their regular season tonight against a weaker Mount Holyoke squad at 7 p.m. at Mount Holyoke. UMass is now 4-7 and expect to finish at 5-7 after tonight. "I'd like to have people feeling good and strong, make it a good last meet and a good primer for the New England's," said Turtle. The New England's are scheduled February 24-26.

Women skiers regain first

By SUE LEVY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women skiers raced to two first place finishes this past weekend at Loon Mountain, New Hampshire, which enabled UMass to regain the lead in the overall league standings.

In Saturday's slalom, UMass stunned the league by placing six of their eight racers in the top ten out of a field of 45 women. UMass surpassed the second place team, Brown University by an overwhelming 30.16 second margin.

Pacing the team was sohpomore Alice Gigliotti with the top combined time of 117.55. Teammate Sue White followed close behind in second place (118.09). Senior Bobbi Voll (4th) and freshman Lisa Tomek (5th) came off the hill with solid runs to secure the victory for UMass. Also skiing well were Sue Levy (9th) and Ellen Arcieri (10th).

In the giant slalom, the Minutewomen captured a first place victory again. Amy Glackin from Boston College won the race with a combined time of 148.71. UM's Alice

With one more race left in their regular season, the University of Massachusetts Men's Ski Team holds first place in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference.

The Minutemen were at Loon Mountain in New Hampshire this past weekend where they took a first place in the giant-slalom and a second in the slalom.

On Saturday, UMass' Dan Conway captured first place in the slalom race from a field of seventy competitors. Conway put two great runs together for the fastest combined time of the day at 106.06 seconds. Bear Hovey from UConn was second with a 106.86, and Morgan Hole from Plymouth State College was third at 107.12.

Jon Segal also had another fine weekend of racing for UMass. Segal finished fourth in the slalom and second in the giant-slalom. Teammate Bob Faigel was sixth in the slalom, and the third UMass man to finish in the top ten. Rounding out the team score were Andy Clarke and Kris Vanerzee. Clarke was 14th and Vanderzee 17th.

In the team standings, PSC's total time of 546.31 seconds (best 5 of 8 racers) gave them first place in the slalom. UMass had a 550.02, good enough for second, and Boston College was third at 581.13. Other teams competing in the tournament were: Amherst College (4th), Brown University (5th), UConn (6th), Army (7th) and Trinity (8th).

In Sunday's giant slalom, under sunny skies and spring conditions, the men skied well as a team to recapture first place from a tough Plymouth State College. PSC was second for the day and Boston College took their usual third.

Segal's second place finish was the highlight of the UMass victory. Segal was just four tenths of a second off the winning

State tuition increase sighted for fall semester

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) - Students at Massachusetts public colleges and universities face an overall 12 to 15 percent hike in tuition this fall as part of an effort to revamp the state's tuition policy, Higher Education Chancellor John Duff said yesterday.

Duff, testifying before the Legislature's budget committee, refused to supply any details on the exact amount of the projected increase at individual campuses.

But under repeated prodding from the lawmakers, he said tuition would go up about $12 million to $14 million in 1984-85, compared to the $94.3 million in tuition and fees raised this year.

The testimony came before a joint meeting of the House and Senate Ways and Means Committees. The hearing, which centered on the public education and higher education budgets, was held at Massasoit Community College as part of an effort to get lawmakers out of the Statehouse and into the field.

Duff was reluctant to discuss any specific tuition figures. He repeatedly said the state Board of Regents of Higher Education was working on an overall tuition policy that would peg Massachusetts' levels to comparable states.

The study will be adopted at the March meeting of the regents and higher tuition levels will be approved at the April meeting, he said.

"I expect, without using any exact figures, a raise in tuition revenue of about $12 million to $14 million," Duff said.

"The administration indicates in its balance sheet for the $8.14 billion state budget for 1984-85 that it includes a tuition increase of about $15 million to $16 million," said Creedon, D-Brockton.

"If you're going up $68 million in higher education spending, I hope you'd get $16 million more in user fees. It's important to balance the act," he said.

Duff again stressed he hoped to develop an overall tuition policy "before we vote for an increase."

A boost in the number of students paying tuition also could supply some of the additional tuition money, officials said.

The Dukakis administration has proposed spending $484.5 million on higher education in fiscal 1985. The money includes $10 million more in scholarship aid and $4.2 million to allow colleges to develop programs to aid teaching in primary and secondary schools.

The annual state budget hearings, which began this week, continue Wednesday at Cushing Hospital in Framingham where legislators will examine the Dukakis administration's proposals for mental health spending.

SGA and Administration come to budgetary terms

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

A compromise was reached yesterday, between the University of Massachusetts administration and student government leaders concerning the new budget program statement, after a dispute between the two groups emerged last week over budgetary responsibility.

A statement which was originally due to be submitted last Thursday to the University Budget Office by Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for Student affairs, didn't reach the office until Monday.

The statement that was finally submitted, "fundamentally changed the role" the Student Government Association (SGA) would play where Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) money is concerned, said Chris Sullivan, SGA senate speaker.

Sullivan said that the document the students and administrative representatives had jointly developed was changed at the last minute, "showing a lack of respect for students," he said.

The program statement is a framework document, which defines, and delegates along with other policies, the rights and responsibilities of both administrative and student agencies, where SATF money is concerned.

Erich Nitzsche, SGA treasurer said "students have the right to choose their own destiny" in the area of fund expenditure and control, "while at the same time we recognize we have to be overseen" by the administration. Submission of a program statement without student input would have taken away "the leadership aspects of the SGA and the student body," he said.

Sullivan said meetings with Madson yesterday and Monday resulted in a program statement consistent with one previously established by the Trustees one more positively representative of student control rights.

Several SGA members said the statement in its previous form reflected a step towards tighter administrative control of student money.

"There were a lot of compromises made," on the part of the SGA, Sullivan said, "and I hope the Administration recognizes the tone of these negotiations and is respectful of student rights".

Neither Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey or Vice Chancellor Madson were available for comment yesterday.

Agriculture Convention begins

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

"Comminications in Agriculture" is the theme for this year's Professional Agriculture Convention (P.A.C), being held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Auditorium.

The convention, sponsored by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, is open to the public and is free of charge. Stockbridge students will present displays, industrial exhibits, a job mart and a number of different seminars.

The displays will be set up by each of the majors within Stockbridge such as live stock, turf and forestry management and fruits and vegetables. The industrial exhibits will be set up by local area businesses such as Agway and local nurseries and cemeteries.

The seminars include such topics as irrigation systems, tree packaging trends in nurseries, and liquid fertilization.

The job mart could be beneficial to many Stockbridge students as different business representatives will seek recruits for both internships and permanent job positions.

Not only is the P.A.C. an important opportunity for Stockbridge students but it also familiarizes the general public and other UMass students with agriculture and how important it is, Charlie Touchette, president of the Stockbridge Student Senate said.

The students involved in this year's annual convention "have worked very hard since September putting all their non-study time aside for the convention work, and they will continue to work for months afterwards in preparation for next year's convention," Touchette said.

Sen. hopeful Markey speaks

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

U.S. Rep. Edward Markey (D-Mass), a candidate for the U.S. Senate, will speak Thursday at the University of Massachusetts on the nuclear freeze movement, equal rights, education and protection for the elderly.

Markey recently announced his candidacy for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Paul Tsongas. His speech will begin at 7:30 p.m. in Room 904, Campus Center, his press secretary, Gigi Gansler said yesterday.

Markey is a representative from the 7th Congressional District and was a co-sponsor of the House nuclear freeze resolutions that was passed by the House last spring.

Gansler said the congressman is on a campaign trip through western Massachusetts and was asked by the UMass Peacemakers, sponsor of the event, to speak on campus. Markey has been a U.S. Congressman for seven years and served as a Massachusetts state representative from 1972 to 1976.

Gansler said Markey is an "outspoken critic" of President Reagan's foreign policies in Central America and is the co-sponsor of legislation which would require the President to notify Congress of any U.S. troop involvement in Central America.

"He believes 1984 is a critical year for the domestic and foreign policies he supports," Gansler said. "He feels he has the leadership qualities and experience to address those issues."

Markey has received a 100 percent rating for his voting record in Congress, according to Gansler, from groups such as Common Cause, Ralph Nader's group, Public Interest, the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers.

"He's running because he feels the issues that will be coming up in the Senate will raise important questions and he feels he has the background to answer those questions," Gansler said.

Gansler said Markey will speak from 30 to 45 minutes and will answer questions after. She said the congressman will also make appearances in Pittsfield and Williamsburg, Thursday, and Northampton and Springfield, Friday, although the schedule is tentative.

Markey also serves on the House Energy and Commerce Committee, Chairman of the Oversight and Investigations Sub-Committee of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and serves on several other sub-committees concerning environmental energy, and consumer issues, she said.

Kremlin wall takes Andropov; Chernenko sees world leaders

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet Union buried Yuri Andropov at the Kremlin wall yesterday in a ritual Red Square state funeral. The Communist Party's new leader, Konstantin Chernenko, delivered the eulogy and then conducted his first meetings with world leaders.

Chernenko spent 30 minutes with Vice President George Bush, who represented President Reagan at the funeral. Bush said Chernenko agreed there was a need for the two superpowers to "place our relationship upon a more constructive path."

Chernenko, 72, who has not had wide foreign policy experience, also met with Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and other leaders in Moscow for the funeral.

Chernenko called Andropov "an ardent champion of peace" in a eulogy delivered from the reviewing stand atop the mausoleum of V.I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state.

Andropov was buried among other heroes of the Soviet Union with a ringing salute of gunfire. His widow sobbed at the graveside. Factory whistles sounded throughout the Soviet Union to mark his burial.

Chernenko led the ceremony, which included music and speeches.

Andropov headed the KGB, the Soviet secret police and intelligence agency, for 15 years before becoming Communist Party leader in November 1982 after the death of Leonid Brezhnev. He later assumed the presidency, a post Brezhnev also held.

Andropov died Thursday at 69. Chernenko was named Communist Party leader, the top position in the Soviet Union, on Monday.

Dignitaries from more than 100 countries came to Moscow to pay their respects and meet the new Soviet leader.

Torvill and Dean skate to gold in ice dancing

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) - Like pearls, Britain's Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean strung together nine perfect 6.0s for artistic impression Tuesday night and easily won the gold medal in ice dancing at the Winter Olympics. Two Soviet couples won the silver and bronze.

Americans Judy Blumburg and Michael Seibert slipped from third to fourth place, a disappointment for the couple from Wilmington, Del., who had their hopes set on following the world champions from Britain to the medals stand.

The show, though, was simply T&D, as Torvill and Dean are fondly known by their fans.

With Princess Anne of England watching at rinkside, they skated as one, not two. They were smooth. Their program, to Ravel's Bolero, had special flavor and flair. Their line of scores had never been seen before in the Olympics.

"I can't believe it," Torvill said. "I can't even remember it. Everything seemed to click into place. We were very pleased with our performance."

Natalya Bestemianova and Andrei Bukin won the silver medal, while Marina Klimova and Sergei Ponomarenko took the bronze.

"We're very surprised and disappointed we ended up fourth," Seibert said. "I felt like we really performed well."

After a day of success Monday, Tuesday again was without a medal for the United States. In addition to Blumberg and Seibert, the Americans narrowly missed a medal in speed skating and were shutout in the men's giant slalom.

That Alpine event, however, produced the most emotional moment of the Games so far, when a Yugoslav skier won his country's first-ever Winter Olympic medal.

There was emotional support, too, for the U.S. team. President Reagan called from Washington to congratulate Debbie Armstrong and Christan Cooper, who finsished 1-2 in the women's giant slalom Monday.

In men's figure skating, America's Scott Hamilton kicked open the door to his shot at a gold medal a little further Tuesday, finishing second in the short program.

Hamilton had finished first in the compulsories, and now only the freestyle competition, which accounts for 50 percent of the score, remains - and Hamilton is normally at his strongest there.

Grievance policy will be approved

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

In a letter to be sent to University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, the Graduate Student Senate will express its approval of the official graduate student grievance procedure which has been in practice since 1977, but has just recently gained the Chancellor's official endorsement.

Duffey also plans to ask for endorsements from UMass Board of Trustees and President David C. Knapp, according to Graduate Senate Executive Officer Greg Graham, who has been investigating the grievance procedure.

"I think the grievance procedure is a good one and we should spprove it and request the president to sign it," Graham said, adding that the letter may also include recommendations for refining the procedure.

Two issues the letter may address are the length of time involved in the first stages of the procedure, which can reach ten weeks,and the exact definition of a grievance which, according to Graham,may be "too narrow and vague."

In the text of the procedure, a grievance is defined as a complaint by a currently enrolled graduate student against a member of the University faculty or staff. Graham suggested that the definition be clarified as to whether grievances may be filed by groups of students and if teaching assistants, associates and research assistants may file also.

The procedure starts when a grievance is filed by a student within 60 days of the alleged offense or before the semester ends. The grievance may then be mediated between the petitioner, the respondent (offender), and the head of the academic department.

If the grievance cannot be settled informally, it is then sent to the Graduate School Dean, who appoints a three member committee comprised of one person chosen by each litigant and another person chosen jointly. After hearings, the committee sends a report to the Dean who then renders a decision.

"The strong points of the procedure are the time for informal reconciliation, the right to legal representation through the procedure and the composition of the committee," Graham said.

Another possible objection which Graham said he would like to see addressed is that grievances not be filed in protest of University or graduate school policy, but abuses in the implementation of those policies. This objection was opposed by some senators.

Coal miner's daughter starts film set

By JENNIFER SKOGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

The Women's Film Festival will feature Coal Miner's Daughter as the first of its five-part series of American and international films beginning tomorrow night.

The film, which will be shown free of charge at 7 and 9 p.m. in room 163, Campus Center, stars Sissy Spacek, portraying country music singer, Loretta Lynn and her struggle to survive her marriage while keeping her career on the road.

According to Barbara Steiner, assistant coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project (WLP), sponsor of the series, the five films were chosen because of their international flavor and their important cultural and social message.

"Bringing these films to campus is an attempt to expose all students to quality, artistic feature films, and to simultaneously share an important message by and about women," she said.

Each film portrays women's struggle for equality, along with many themes and experiences which have influenced their lives.

Because the series was successful last semester, Steiner said the WLP is hoping to draw an even larger crowd of viewers this semester with a selection of films that represent significant examples of women's artistic achievment.

Liisa Trocki, coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project, said she hopes to expand the program for future festivals in order to encourage women artists, photographers, and directors to continue to improve the quality of the series.

Dale Melcher, staff assistant in the Women's Studies Department, said the series contains "great samples of films portraying the lives of women" and said she was extremely pleased with the selection of movies.

Another film, Blow for Blow, depicts a textile factory strike and the subsequent takeover by its women workers.

The Women's Film Festival is co-sponsored by the Commuter Area Government, the Graduate Student Senate, Hillel, the Labor Center, the Student Government Association, Student Activities Office and the Women's Studies Department.

Local police pursue alledged rapist

Amherst Police said yesterday they were following strong leads in pursuit of suspects in an alleged rape last weekend, though no suspects have yet been named.

Last Friday night a 17 year-old Connecticut resident reported to Amherst Police that she had been raped after she was abducted in her car and forced to drive from Connecticut to Amherst.

Police said Monday that the victim said she had been parked near her home in Connecticut around 9 p.m. Friday when a white male, about 30 years old with brown hair, a moustache and medium build entered her car and demanded she drive to Amherst where he raped her.

The victim's car was found in Amherst at 4:30 a.m. Saturday and impounded by police. She reported the attack to the police after they responded to a disturbance call at the East Pleasant Apartments about 12:30 a.m. Saturday. The woman was treated at Cooley-Dickinson hospital and released.

A Florida student activist and author of a book on the history of student movements will speak at the University of Massachusetts tonight on how the Reagan Administration's policies have affected youth in America.

Bill Loiry, author of "The Impact of Youth: A History of Children and Youth with Recommendations for the Future", will speak from 5-7 p.m. in Room 911, Campus Center.

Fran Pheeny, chairperson of the Public Policy Committee of the Student Government Association, sponsor for the event, said Loiry will "talk about his book and get feedback on the student government and the student movement at UMass.

"He's one of the few people who has taken students seriously and believes that students can make an imapct on society," she said. "He's very interested in current student movements, particularly UMass, because UMass has one of the strongest student governments in the U.S. and has some of the best facilities and activities."

Contraception is available

By MELISSA GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first of a three part series on contraceptives.

Approximately 14.2 million American women use some form of prescriptive birth control, which includes the Pill, the diaphragm, and the intrauterine device (I.U.D.), according to Pam Gonyer, coordinator of Contraceptive Education at the UMass Health Center.

The Pill, which first appeared on the American market in 1960, is a synthetic combination of estrogen and progesterone, two hormones that inhibit the release of eggs from the ovaries.

The Pill is one of the most highly effective methods when used daily, and it has a failure rate of two percent, said Gonyer. Pill prescriptions at the Health Center last for two months.

"Women need to come back to the center for an extended prescription and a follow-up visit, which can be arranged with a practitioner," she said.

Although recent contraceptive research reports some positive health benefits for users of the Pill, it can cause mood changes, acne, breast swelling, or weight gain for some, but not all, women.

Another widely used prescriptive contraceptive is the diaphragm, a soft dome shaped device, that covers the opening of the cervix and provides a barrier between the egg and the sperm, Gonyer said.

The diaphragm must be used with cream or jelly in order to be effective, and with consistent use, it has a 13 percent failure rate, she said.

"The diaphragm is similar to the condom and spermacytile foam in that there are no side effects, except perhaps a minor allergic reaction to the jelly," Gonyer said.

Diaphragms vary in size and must be fitted by a clinician and checked during a follow-up visit within one month of the initial visit.

The I.U.D., which comes in many shapes and sizes, is inserted directly into the uterus where it inhibits the implantation of a fertilized cell.

The I.U.D. is highly effective, with a failure rate of only four percent, however, users can develop a higher risk of pelvic inflammatory disease, which causes the I.U.D. to be expelled or removed, said Gonyer.

Crisis group needs members

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Men Against Violence Against Women (MAVAW), an all male collective that offers short term crisis counseling and educational outreach programs, is looking for new members and men who wish to become counselors.

"As men in society, we are taught and trained that violence against women is acceptable behavior. We have to try and change that," said David Greis, coordinator of the group.

The MAVAW counseling service operates on a short term basis, usually five or six sessions, for men, referred to as "significant others," who are close to women survivors of sexual violence.

Greis said that because men are trained to think that asking for help is a "sign of weakness," and because men are socialized to be strong, controlled and unemotional, most men don't ask for help but try to work it out themselves.

"There are a lot of men out there who we could help," he said, "but they're not going to call. Many of them will tough it out by themselves."

In the past, counselors working with husbands, fathers, lovers, or other men close to women who have been sexually assaulted, found that many men had the feeling "their property had been violated."

"When a woman is raped, there is a feeling, which may be socialized, that women are men's property and someone has trespassed upon their property," Greis said.

Invariably, the initial reaction from men is that it's the woman's fault and she shouldn't have been there, he said.

"She should have known better, they say. But men go out in the street and don't have to know better. Men walk alone at night and don't have to know better. Men can hitch-hike and not have to know better," Greis said.

In order for a MAVAW member to become a counselor, he must attend at least four, four hour long training sessions, which are directed by Greis and Kathy Alexander, Counselor Advocate at the Everywoman's Center.

For more information, call or stop by the EWC, located in Wilder Hall. Counselor applications will be available today through this Friday.

by Katie Watters
Images of Poland

These photographs were taken in January 1984 in the cities of Gdansk and Warsaw, Poland. Clockwise from the top left:

1) This is the skyline of the residential section of Gdansk where most workers live. The machines from the shipyard loom in the background. They dominate the skyline of most of Gdansk.

2) This monument was built in 1980 as part of an agreement that the government made with Solidarity. It was built in commemoration to workers from the shipyards who were killed by police in the 1970 strikes. The anchors at the top of the three crosses are symbols of hope and also of "Poland fighting." The slogan was labeled in the 1860's during the insurrection against the Russians. It has been used since then in times of turmoil in Polish history.

3) The bottom of this monument is sculptures of workers and quotes by Czeslaw Milosc, a Polish poet.

4) This grave is in the oldest graveyard in Warsaw. A 19-year-old student is buried there. About a year ago, he and a friend were walking through Warsaw. They were stopped by a policeman for a routine check for documents. He was taken to the police station, beaten up by the police, and he died in the hospital as a result of his wounds.

5) An artist's studio in Warsaw. This artist lives in Warsaw and has had formal schooling in painting. He paints primarily in acrylic on canvas and has had paintings in an international exhibition in Paris. Since the Solidarity Movement began and the economic crisis has heightened, he has continued to paint although art supplies are almost impossible to find. Art supply stores, like stores there, are empty most days.

Black Affairs

Students needed to secure future

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The lack of student involvement in Third World organizations and its consequences were emphasized in a meeting of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and other Minorities (CCEBMS) last Monday at Mahar Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

Speaking to an audience of mostly first year students and sophomores were Jane Austin, assistant director of Placement Service; Robert Teixtera, a member of the Third World Caucus of the Student Government Association (SGA), Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American studies, and a member of the Western Massachusetts Chapter of Jesse for President, Rick Townes, assistant director of academic services and community outreach of CCEBMS and Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs.

The history of black people, Thelwell said was a "long history of struggle." He said struggles were waged to get programs for Third World people on campus because young people during the late 50s and early 60s were willing to do so.

"I am concerned," said Austin who added she hoped more juniors and seniors would take advantage of the opportunities offered at the university.

"You need to take advantage of (these) opportunities. There are many no matter what your major is," she said.

Austin encouraged students to establish a network on campus, and to "understand we want to help you, you must understand we care," she said.

"The oppression you suffer is your own fault," Thelwell said.

Townes said there are over 20 recognized student organizations on campus, and their destiny lays in the hands of students, but "they won't be here for us tomorrow unless people take advantage," he said. "They'll be part of our historical memory."

Texteira said there is a crisis of students involvement in representing the Third World community in the SGA. Out of the 15 seats the Caucus holds in the SGA, he said only 8 of them are filled.

"Involve yourself in the formulation of history," Thompson said. "Engage yourself in knowledge, wisdom and understanding," he said. "Sometimes they (the caucus) are up until 4 o'clock in the morning fighting to pass a proposal for you," he said.

"The office of Third World Affairs is your vehicle for core curriculum activities on campus. Don't destroy the future by being concerned about the past," he said.

Thelwell said he hasn't felt so optimistic since the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s and emphasized the need to generate more excitement, which "depends on what we do here."

"We have a lot to offer here," Thompson said, "what we don't have is you," he said.

Thompson said students can find an abundance of experience by joining the various Third World student organizations on campus. The following is a list of Third World student organizations on campus.

Afrik-Am Society, Ahora, Asian American Student Association, Black Mass Communications Project, Chinese Student Club, Drum Magazine, Duke Ellington Committee, India Association, Malcom X Center, Martin Luther King Center, Nummo News, Black Affairs Office of Third World Affairs, Organization of Arab Students, Third World Student Caucus (S.G.A.), Third World Theater Series, Union of Iranian Students, American Indian Students Association, Cape Verdian Students Association, and African Students Association.

Information about anyone of these organizations can be obtained by contacting the Office of Third World Affairs at 545-2517.

"Proud" teaches, entertains

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Correspondent

Phyllis Bailey and Glynn Turman had the audience engulfed in laughter Saturday night at Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts in their performance in "PROUD", a musical production written and directed by C. Bernard Jackson.

PROUD was the opening production of the Third World Theatre Series.

The play set in present East Los Angeles had Turman as Anthony Proud Mann, a black actor waiting for his "big break" while working nights for a limousine service and Bailey as Estelle Henderson, a nightclub singer and Proud's ex-girlfriend.

The Inner City Cultural Center's production revolved around Proud's conscience when he witnessed the brutal murder of a Chicano youth by neighborhood police.

A full house listened intently to the sultry soulful sound of Phyllis Bailey as she belted out the opening number to the performance.

Turman, or rather Proud, recalls the first gift he ever received from his parents - his name. "I tried to accept it in the spirit in which it was intended," he said.

It was a name that he did not live up to until the final few moments of the play.

Turman kept the audience laughing when he transformed into Magalaster, a Jamaican cockroach who becomes Proud's roommate and companion.

Magalaster commended Proud on finally being able to make a firm unselfish decision.

The play, however, had its dramatic highpoints, as when Proud confesses to having witnessed the murder and his refusal to play a stereotypical role, though it meant giving up $2,500 a week.

Bailey moved the audience when she sang two songs symbolic of both decisions.

The first was a sentimental ballad that Henderson (Bailey) wrote herself. "They're trying to kill us," she said in response to the Chicano youth death. "The life you be is the life you save," she sang, "...the life you own may be the life you save."

She gazed out into the audience as another song questioned, "Do we run with the lion or do we graze with the sheep?...do we stand tall and proud or do we stand bent at the knees?"

The competent musicians who accompanied Bailey under the direction of Horace Clarence Boyer, were John Curry on bass and Bruce Andrew on piano.

If PROUD is any indication of the caliber of performances that is to be expected this semester, then we are in for a very enjoyable and entertaining season.

Student media damages image

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

I was once under the impression the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, "New England's largest college newspaper" considered itself to be socially aware, but after a cartoon that screamed "racism" appeared on the editorial/opinion page last Friday, my belief was proven otherwise.

Without studying the entire content of the cartoon, the Collegian denied to acknowledge many important facts when it printed the cartoon.

First, the African continent is underdeveloped because the "developed" western hemisphere robs it of its rich, natural resources.

Editorial

Secondly, the dark clouds over the undernourished skeletons are but products of the "industrialization" and testing of dangerous nuclear and chemical products which are also threatening the Western world.

The figures, shown in the cartoon dragging themselves into a vast, barren land and into a world of emptiness, is the ignorant impression the American public has of Africans.

The African continent has enough resources to sustain itself, but because it is continiously preyed upon by the United States and other European and Asian countries, it has not had the chance to develop itself.

The print and other avenues of the media are said to reflect the culture it identifies. The American media indeed projects the racist and ignorant American culture with its unrepresented means of communication degrading all Third World people and the Collegian follows faithfully in that tradition.

The main objective of the Black Affairs page in the Collegian is to erase the bias and racist representation the Third World suffers and the outcast of news and information it is denied. And it will continue to do so until it manages, someday, to eliminate the type of attitudes which prompted it to print such a blatantly racist cartoon.

Students, staff rap about conference

By MARILYN G. BOU
Collegian Correspondent

The National Conference on Voter Registration held this past weekend at Harvard University in Cambridge was a success in many areas. Over 1500 students, three times the expected amount showed this nation how students once again want to take an active part in determining their destiny.

One organizer referred to the turn-out "a strong and positive sign that students are actively participating in present day politics."

The conference consisted of a large variety of workshops which ranged from the media's role in politics to organizing voter registration on campus. The appearance of guest speakers was an added highlight to the conference.

Ralph Nader, a consumer advocate said "we have to redefine patriotism in this country. We must divert its meaning from a military standpoint to one of grassroots." He also stated "students must take responsibility for the privileges they are fortunate enough to have."

The conference reached its climax early Sunday morning with a speech by the Democratic Rev. Jesse Jackson. Jackson who traveled from Iowa throughout the night, created enough excitement to produce five standing ovations.

Jackson emphasized students must be actively involved in the politics of this country, for it is up to them to make things what they ought to be. He added "we must develop minds, we must think not fight, in order to to this no person should be denied a college education because of lack of money."

Discussing the importance of voting Jackson said, "It is our responsibility to vote." Jackson referring to the difficulty many a person has in registering said, "It should be as easy to vote as it is to pay taxes in this country."

The conference was attended by a few members of this University. Eugene Bull, Senator in the Student Area Government said, "the conference was a good and productive one." He also said he encourages students to become involved in student activities and organizations.

He said he feels in doing this, students could "impact substantially, the political system in this country." Bull said he felt the conference could have been more productive if it had offered a better opportunity for students to have more one on one contact. He said more diverse points of view could have resulted from this.

Ms. Rosa Perriera, a junior Sociology major said, "the conference was an experience which she will not soon forget." She considered it a privilege to attend such an event.

Ms. Perriera also said, "more students should take advantage of this sort of opportunity which is available to all."

Sherwood Thompson, director of Third World Affairs, said "opportunities such as the conference offer an educational experience that can be obtained in no other way." Thompson supports the idea of all students, minorities in particular to become actively involved in core-curriculum activities.

When asked if he felt Third World students are apathetic about getting involved he said, "the students are not apathetic but they are uninspired, unmotivated, have poor images of themselves, they lack knowledge of the past, but are also being encouraged to get involved by faculty and professional staff of the university."

By becoming involved in university core-curriculum activities, Thompson said students can become involved in all aspects of university life.

The privileges minority students have on campus were obtained by historical struggles of campus community and special coalition groups which engaged in sit-ins, marches, and other forms of political protest to fight for their admission into predominantly white institutions, he said.

The Third World people as a whole across America and across the world are suffering at an alarming rate, Thompson said. "This (the suffering) should be the direct interests of Third World students to the degree that these students while at the University should be involved in some sort of social and political movement which will contribute to the elimination of these problems."

He also said he feels students "must contribute their talents, knowledge, and energies to serving the communities and the people so that they may find relief in their human sufferings."

Bruins not only contenders

To the Editor,

Just a few thoughts on Tony Betros' article Feb. 9. Sure Tony, the Bruins are a good hockey team, but to say they have to be the favorite to win the Stanley Cup is a gross misjudgement. It's amazing how you can so easily count out the New York Islanders and Edmonton Oilers. The Oilers possess the league's best record and the Islanders have won the Stanley Cup the last four years (the only modern sports dynasty). I enjoy rooting for the home team as much as the next guy, but being from Boston does not automatically constitute a championship club.

Humor not found in comics

To the Editor,

Who decides what comics go in the Collegian? Were the current strips the only ones submitted? Not only are the student strips not funny, they are just plain dumb. Does anyone remember Nuke the Whale? Now that was funny. Bloom County is funny. The D.C. menu is funny. The rest is pretty pathetic.

The instructor will provide a map of the most dangerous places on campus and a field to West Hartford's luxurious Agora Ballroom.

Drug Use- Taught by Doctor Geary, this class will aid Engineering majors and overworked Collegian editorial writers who abuse drugs by letting them sit unused in dusty underwear drawers. There will be classes dealing with such critical subjects as exceeding the recommended dosage, getting to know the Quaalude and ten ways to get high in the classroom. The course fee is $1,500 and payable in small bills only. Extreme lightweights are discouraged.

Introduction to Computer Ignorance- For Coins and Math majors who have lost the better half of their personality in front of a VDT. The course will begin with forgetting advanced and difficult programing and progress until the student can't remember his access code. This class is required for people that wish to work in the University administration.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Students pay for SGA fines

For some reason we always thought that the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) is money that we, the students, pay each semester to fund various student activities. We also thought that the Coordinating Committee of the Student Government Association (SGA) was supposed to operate during vacation periods to oversee the disbursement of funds with great prudence.

However, after reading the minutes of the Coordinating Committee for January, 1984, we found out, much to my chagrin, that neither of the above is true. What we are alluding to is the use of SATF money, allocated by this Coordinating Committee to pay parking fines. These fines were issued by the City of Boston to SGA operated vehicles, and to cars operated by members of the Student Senate Public Policy Committee.

We are not talking vague facts, as those who write to condemn the SGA are often accused of. We have actual written proof from the official Student Senate minutes approved on February 1, 1984.

Motion 84CC19-Move-to grant Senate Operations $115.00 from the Stabilization Account to pay for four (4) parking tickets incurred by the Senate Autopool 1978-79.

Motion 84CC20-Move-to grant Senate Operations $70.00 from Stabilization Account to pay for five (5) parking tickets incurred by Public Policy while using rented cars to lobby in Boston.

Michael Altneu
and
Donna Dooley

Both of these motions were passed.

We may be wrong, but aren't parking fines given for violations of traffic law? Do certain past and present students feel that working for the SGA gives them the right to break the law? Obviously certain members of the Senate feel that such rights exist. The Coordinating Committee supports this contention by spending our student activities money to pay for its parking fines. Furthermore, a majority of Student Senators also approved of these motions by voting to approve the minutes.

Some very important questions must be answered. Why was all this done during January? Perhaps so that no one concerned would notice? How come the guilty parties are not paying for the fines they brought upon themselves in the first place? Also, why is it that fines incurred in 1978-79 are being brought to life now?

The answers to these questions are probably being held by the present SGA hierarchy (a.k.a the Coordinating Committee). While we do not have before us all their names, we do know who made the motions to approve spending our money for illegal actions. We also know who the two individuals are that seconded the motions. Eric Nitzche, our SGA Treasurer, authored both motions, and the seconds were provided by Tom Ahern, our illustrious SGA Co-President, and Paul Gosselin, Chair (at the time) of the Public Policy Committee. Perhaps these fine and righteous individuals might hold some rationale for thier actions. We are sure that many people would love to listen to them.

Student Activities Trust Fund money was created by the University Trustees to support student activities. The integrity of this fund must not be blemished by those who use it to subsidize illegal activities.

Donna Dooley is the Orchard Hill Area Government Treasurer.

The "wrong" voice of feminism

I find myself in the Campus Center face to face with a poster informing me that the institution of "Gentlemen's Night" at The Gazebo in Northampton is to be be abhored; that the proprietor advocates "violence against women" through its portrayal of women as sexual objects...blah, blah, blah.

The Gazebo is a retail shop which sells antique clothing and handmade lingerie. Usually occurring before a holiday, "Gentlemen's Night" exists solely for the purpose of providing men with a place to buy lingerie for their special lady, without the awkwardness and embarassment such excursions usually provide.

Diane Lane

The poster makes me angry -- I cannot help but wonder to whom such militant feminist rhetoric purports to speak. The problem with such rhetoric, besides the dangerous fact that it completely misses the point, reading dastardly consequences into situations where none exists, is that it does not address the experiences of the average woman and so runs the risk of losing her attention forever.

As writers, journalists, and supposed doers-of-good, we have a limited public attention span to deal with. It is my belief that the real obligation is to direct ourselves to the concerns of the public, providing them with ways to grow and learn while allowing them to continue to live in their world.

Espousers of the "white male" theory of what's wrong with the world serve only to stir up bitterness and resentment without offering concrete solutions to the 28 year old mother of two who just happens to be married to a white male who could very well have writtten the book.

The women I know strive half-heartedly to get their husbands to wash a dish, or make a bed. She has tremendous difficulty asserting herself enough to insist that he stay home with their children while she goes out for a night with her friends. She doesn't feel she has the right to ask for anything, nor has she achieved the most basic sense of self-esteem or respect. And if she is extremely fortunate, her husband will remember to give her a card on Valentine's Day, much less an intimate gift like lingerie.

It is not enough to aim the sights of your reform at the levels of just a few, nor is it responsible to use the media to discuss a sensitive topic in such a way which guarantees the disgust of 99 percent of your audience. In fact, you have not reached one man and have left the majority of your female audience bewildered and feeling slightly abandoned.

Stated in simplistic terms, the aims of feminism are to allow women an equal place in the professional world, personal lives of dignity and respect and relationships with significant others in which sharing and helping is a two-way street. The venting of a semi-hysterical tirade of questionable relevance to feminist principles neatly destroys any support or empathy from enlightened males which the movement may have obtained, as well as confirming suspicions for the man on the street that feminism is "just a bunch of garbage." In what way have you helped the woman in his life, or the daughters he may raise?

It is true that a man who doesn't view a woman he loves with respect, or see the problems in her life as equally his, may never be a boon to feminist principles as a whole. And the process of moving that opinionated mountain we call man towards a life which will be richer for all involved is, of necessity, slow.

But first, we have to allow the feminist movement to talk to the women it wants to reach, in a voice they can hear and in a language they can understand.

Frat apologizes for ad

To the Editor,

As co-authors of the fraternity rush ad that invoked Thursday's letter to the editor from the resident assistants in Webster, Dickenson, Field and Grayson that called Delta Chi's ad "ignorant and insensitive", we feel the need to reply.

Our ad was not meant to be an attack on the residental assistants (R.A.'s) of UMass and at no time did we consider it to be insulting or degrading to the R.A.'s at UMass. Our intent was to capitalize on a current fad, George Orwell's 1984, and write an ad that would not only be different from other rush ads, but more visible to the reader. We thought the content of the ad would be obvious enough to dismiss any thought of seriously associating R.A.'s with the character of Big Brother. Unfortunately, we were wrong.

We do not think that students' attitudes towards their R.A.'s will be influenced by our ad. Of the thirty people who attended our rush on Tuesday night, none said that the ad had been a factor in their decision to come to the house.

We frankly don't know how most R.A.'s are perceived by students at UMass, but we believe that much depends on the individual R.A. and the students on his/her floor. We know that the R.A. at Orchard Hill was not only a helpful and resourceful person to the people on the floor, but a good friend as well. If our ad seriously influenced people to associate responsible R.A.'s like her and many others with a monolithic and all-consuming character like Big Brother, then it is for that reason that we are genuinely sorry.

Big Brother is watching

To the Editor,

Part of the dishonesty policy we have discussed in faculty meetings includes the suggestion that we tell intro-courses about the BIG BROTHER screening of turned-in assignments. I have processed about eight students this last week who happened to notice that their final grade was one grade lower than what they expected. This is the usual result of having one assignment grade reduced to goose-egg zero...for 121 last semester it was a little worse since the tough PROG7 carried a lot of extra credit with it and that is lost if the base assignment is big-brothered.

Today a straight-A student came by wondering why his 121 grade was AB. Sure enough, Big Brother had put his PROG7 and extra credit to nil and this guy had no idea who the other student was. He took name and student number and called the other fellow who immediately confessed. Hardcopy had been taken from a quick printer and the A-student had barely noticed it was gone. Interestingly, their final grades for the PROG7s were 90 for the original student and 70 for the thief--usually Big-Brother grades are within 5 points of each other due to grader variation. The A-student said the hardcopy which did not show up at the printer was not even his final version and he went on to make improvements from that point. When the thief came by to confess and release the other student's grade, he said he had tried to alter the program to get by Big Brother. He had succeeded in lowering the graded value of the program without escaping the seven-place accuracy of our guardian of honesty.

Well, spread this sad tale around. I may have twenty more students in here if they notice thier grade is lower than they expected and if they want to tell me why.

Bill of Rights guaranteed

Browsing through the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on February 7, it was expecially upsetting to me as it should be to the students, faculty, and staff of this University, to read the letter by Mr. Richard Vigeant.

One of the basic rights of our society, as set forth by the U.S. Constitution's Bill of Rights, is the right to express yourself freely through both speech and writing. Mr. Vigeant seemed to forget these freedoms in his demand that the UMASS ZONE be taken out of print.

Mr. Hollins' "social awareness" seems to be enjoyed by many people on this campus. I hope I do not come across as being against "blacks, women, gays, physical plant workers, and DC workers"-because I am not. I am simply trying to explain to Mr. Vigeant that the answer is not to ban publication of ideas he does not agree with.

He should explain the facts, as he sees them, in order to convince the public that his views are accurate. Let the public decide what they would like and what they would not like to read. For one person to apply his/her concepts to a whole society is unjustifiable.

Jordan A. Rosner

Don't follow profs lead

To the Editor,

How encouraging it is to see what confidence the Massachusetts Society of Professors has inspired in the faculty of the University of Massachusetts during its eight years of (expensive) stewardship of their affairs. Last week the faculty voted to ratify a new contract by an overwhelming margin, 403-32. (Colegian, Feb. 10) of course, this represented only about 25 percent of the faculty, since 1800 were eligible to vote. This is even less than the percentage of voters who went to the polls in the presidential election of 1980.

It is likely that most of those who did vote had not read the contract since the union was unable to distribute copies to departmental representatives before the ratification vote. But who cares about details when you have confidence in a collective Godfather who assures you of a 16 percent salary increase over the next three years simply for surviving, regardless of merit?

Much of this union's strength has been derived from the inactivity of a large portion of the faculty, including many of those who actually belong to MSP-MTA-NEA. Similarly, Ronald Reagan gained power by the non-participation of half the eligible electorate. I hope that University of Massachusetts students will not follow the example set by their professors but will, instead, register and vote in 1984.

"One of the year's most important books on education"*

Parent, taxpayer, teacher, public official – the state of America's public school system is your concern. What has gone wrong with democracy's great experiment, and what can we do to put it right?

Turn to this landmark book for positive, practical answers. Hailed as the thought-provoking "Goodlad report" by educators and interested citizens across the country, it provides a bold agenda for educational reform in the '80s.

In this provocative work, the result of an unprecedented eight-year study, you'll find controversial proposals that demand your consideration: new ways to encourage better teachers, the end of the tracking system, graduation at 16, and more.

THE ROCKY MIDNIGHT EXPERIENCE
UMass Music Theater Guild
Directed by Gregg Spisak

By DON NAREY
Collegian Staff

The man in the fishnets is back!

Dr. Frank N. Furter, queen of the midnight cult, is confidently recreated by Brad West in the Music Theater Guild's production of the Rocky Midnight Experience. The cast is vibrant and professional with energetic choreography, colorful costumes, effective lighting, and a lively five piece band they give an electrifying presentation. The show includes fine vocal performances by Christine Wong as Magenta and Mary Jennings as Columbia. Director, producer Gregg Spisak plays a chilling Riff Raff and Barbra Buddings sets aside her neck creating an aloof and pompous narrator.

Tammi Dahbura makes an energetic and convincing Janet Weiss. Starry-eyed and apparently innocent she stays remarkably close to the original character. Her soaring voice easily tackles "Toucha, Toucha Touch Me" as Janet is transformed from an innocent school girl into a lustful "creature of the night".

The choreography makes the best use of the space available, with the first three characters entering from various parts of the audience and urging the crowd to take part. After Magenta, Columbia and Riff Raff charge forward retrieving participants to dance the Time Warp, everyone's well primed for the evenings most memorable performance.

Brad West makes a thundering entrance as Frank N. Furter. Stomping and strutting, he captivates the audience with his booming voice and audacious choreography. He delivers a fiery rendition of "Sweet Transvestite", while John Taylor, as the bumbling Brad Majors, tries to explain his unfortunate situation. Frank N. Furter shows no sympathy, concern or shame. As if edged on by a knowing audience, he invites Brad and Janet to stay an unforgetable night.

For the remainder of the play, the entire audience is made part of action lead by West. In his tantalizing and corrupt role he swiftly takes command of the show, with the kind of stage presence that makes this "midnight experience" a rare one.

The performance will be repeated on Feb. 16 at Smith College (8 p.m. and 11 p.m.), Feb. 22 at the Bluewall (10 p.m.) and Feb. 25 at the Barracks, Worchester Dining Commons (7 p.m. and 10 p.m.) Call for more information.

UMass escapes Marist with big win

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. -- Edwin Greer and Donald Russell hit key free throws in the final 30 seconds to lift the University of Massachusetts to a 59-58 non-league victory over Marist last night.

The Minutemen, now 10-11 on the season, had a 55-49 lead with 1:43 remaining but the pesky Red Foxes fought back to come within one, 55-54 with 40 seconds left.

A big rebound off a Mark Shanley free throw miss by Bobby Braun set up Green, who was fouled with 30 seconds to go. The 6-7 center made both to make it 57-54.

The Minutemen now can point to a pivotal clash with St. Joseph's Thursday night in the Cage. The Atlantic-10 game can put UMass at .500 for the year and more importantly help Ron Gerlufsen's team advance in the league standings.

UMass trailed by a 28-27 score at halftime as the run-and-gun Foxes had ten points from guard Bruce Johnson (a game-high 18 on the night). The Minutemen squandered away an early 8-4 lead with several turnovers in the opening 20 minutes, but good shooting by forwards John Hempel and Horace Neysmith (eight each) kept UMass in the contest.

The second half saw the Minutemen tie the game at 30 with a hoop by Hempel and eventually retake the lead 35-34 on Carl Smith's first point of the night, a free throw with 12:56 left.

Solid second half shooting from the line (14 of 17) proved to be the difference for UMass along with patience in the final minutes.

Marist battled back as the Minutemen were unable to break full court pressure and turned the ball over twice at key times down the stretch, but UMass converted six of the final attempts from the line to put the game away.

Hempel was high scorer for UMass with 17 points, Neysmith, who missed his second shot to break a 17 of 17 streak, ended up with 12, Green had nine, Russell eight, Smith seven, all in the second half, and Braun had six. Eggnik had 12 behind Johnson for Marist. UMass was 15 of 22 from the line.

MINUTEMEN MUTTERINGS: University of Rhode Island head coach Claude English was dumped by the Rams yesterday. U.R.I. announced they will not rehire English for next year. Former UMass great Al Skinner is an assistant coach at Marist. UMass is now 2-0 against Marist, they won another close one, 51-49, last year. Thursday's game at the Cage can be heard on WMUA-FM at 8:00 p.m. The ten victories for the Minutemen are the most for the team since the 1977-78 unit that went 15-12. UMass is now 2-10 on the road and a sparkling 8-1 at home. St. Joe's beat UMass 67-66 at the Palestra in double-overtime over the intersession. Thursday night's game should be a war.

1980 miracle unrepeatable for hockey team in Sarajevo

By MICHELE DOLAN
Collegian Staff

Most of us are sick of hearing about the "miracle on ice" of 1980. God knows, we are sick of seeing the clip of Mike Eruzione's game winning goal against the Russians. It is perhaps the best known sports story in all of America.

As ABC's Al Michaels put it, it is arguably the greatest sports story in America.

This time it is different.

The US hockey team has been eliminated from the medal round. And the media has been merciless and abusive.

Commentary

Who said anybody had to win anything?

At first, it seemed unfair to compare the 1984 U.S. ice hockey team to those immortal men of 1980. Finally, it became wearing, even cruel.

This time, Team USA lost two out of three of their first games. They lost 4-2 against Canada, 4-1 against the Czechs, and emerged from the game against Norway with a 3-3 tie. They clubbed Austria 7-3. There will be no medals now.

They must play another routine game to finish the tournament, and go home empty handed.

Al Michaels asked US Coach Lou Vairo what happened. Vairo said he didn't want to make excuses, but that he'd been trying to "pinpoint" the feeling in the locker room before the tournament. He said he thinks it was fear.

Fear? Fear of losing.

"Some of the guys are afraid to go home," said Vairo. "After we lost to Canada in the first game, I felt like I let my country down or something," he told Michaels.

Michaels asked Eruzione, his commentating side-kick, the same question. Eruzione said, "If I had to say one thing, I'd say Vairo didn't prepare them emotionally."

As if the 1980 team were Supermen. We all know they struggled every moment of every game, and Eruzione knows it too.

Eruzione attributed the success of the 1980 team to the "love that we had for each other."

"They had the talent, but they didn't have the emotion," he said of Vairo's team.

It wasn't fair for anyone, especially Eruzione, to criticize an effort by a bunch of guys he's never sat on the bus with, never sat on the bench with.

The clip of Eruzione in 1980 was a little out of place in 1984. And so were his comments.

Reid tabbed temp. coach

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Jim Reid has been named the interim head football coach at the University of Massachusetts while a national search is undertaken to find a permanent replacement, the Dean of physical education's office said Tuesday.

Reid was an associate head coach and defensive coordinator under former head coach Bob Pickett, who resigned on Saturday.

George Urch is the chairman of the University Athletic Commission that will conduct the nationwide search that will try to find a head coach as soon as they can.

Dr. David Bischoff said Tuesday that he fully expects Reid to apply for the job.

Reid has the support of the players. The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported Monday that a petition from the players asking for the appointment of Reid was circulated. But Reid did not want it presented.

The Gazette also said that Reid said he would welcome a coaching opportunity if presented and that Reid had the backing of the other coaches and they told Bischoff that Sunday.

Reid was unavailable for comment last night.

A native of Medford, Mass., Reid has been involved in the UMass football program for 11 years. Like Pickett, Reid also graduated from the University of Maine. Reid was a three year starter and a co-captain of the Black Bears his senior year.

He received the New England Sportswriter's Senior Achievement award in 1972 and Reid graduated in 1973. He received his masters in Sports Administration in 1976 from UMass.

Porter leads in romp over Amherst

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Led by senior captain Chris Porter's two record setting swims, an aggressive University of Massachusetts men's swimming team demolished Amherst College by a score of 69-44 Monday night at Boyden Pool.

Porter swam a 1:43:23 in the 200 freestyle to better the old UMass record of 1:46:07. In the 100 freestyle his time of 47:69 was only good enough for second place in the race. However, it narrowly surpassed the top school time of 47:71.

The records took Porter by surprise. "I didn't think I was going that quickly when I was swimming. But when I stopped and saw Coach Russ Yarworth jumping up and down I knew something was going on," he said.

"It's a nice way to end the (dual meet) season; a nice note to go out on. Now I can concentrate on New Englands," Porter added, referring to the New England Swimming Championships he and fifteen other Minutemen will be competing in March 1-3.

Yarworth shared Porter's feelings, but was just as happy watching not only Porter, but the entire team perform well. He was especially pleased since the victory followed a disappointing loss to the University of New Hampshire.

"I'm just more psyched at the way they all swam. A lot of the guys were questioning themselves before the meet. After the poor Saturday against UNH, we sort of yelled at them, and they responded. They came out aggressive and they swam," Yarworth said.

The meet began as most do for UMass (now 6-4) with the 400 medley relay team winning the first event of the evening. In the 1000 freestyle, Paul McNeil finished second.

In the 200 freestyle, the record setting Porter was followed by Mark Surette in second place. Mike Hoover took second in the 50 freestyle. Phil Surette placed second in the 200 individual medley.

In the one meter diving event Pat Mullen captured first while John Macurdy finished in third. Kit Mathews placed second in the 200 butterfly. In the 100 freestyle Jeff Piaget finished third behind Porter. The 200 backstroke saw UMass taking a one-two sweep. McNeil won the 500 freestyle.

In the one meter optional diving competition John Findlay and John Macurdy placed first and second respectively as UMass won the diving competition.

In the 200 breaststroke Phill Surette and Mike Hoover finished one and two for UMass. Finally the 400 freestyle relay team of Surette, Piazza, Piaget, and Porter finished second.

On the meet Yarworth said, 'It's a good way to end the dual meet season. It proves that we've been doing the right things in practice. A lot of the younger kids swam well even though they didn't get noticed."

Now, Yarworth is looking towards the New England Championships held in Maine. "We're the kind of team that gears towards the New Englands. We'll be doing some speed work and resting to get ready to have a great meet," he said.

Sixteen of the twenty-two varsity Minutemen will make the trip north. So far Yarworth has fourteen qualifiers and needs to choose two more. It is tough choice according to Yarworth, "I wish I could take them all. They've worked hard for me this year."

NOTE: UMass will not be competing in the Atlantic 10 championships as was reported earlier. The event dates were moved too close to the New England Championships and Yarworth withdrew this team.

Easterns for track

By M.E. MURRAY

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team finished fourth Saturday at the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Association Championships, capturing first place in two events and placing very well overall.

The campus of Southern Connecticut State College in New Haven was the site of the annual "Easterns" and it was a battle for third as Lowell University and the host school ran off with the top two spots.

UMass finished just four points shy of third-place Maine as some fine individual and team efforts yielded a bunch on impressive times.

The distance medley relay team of John Lynch, Neal Dickson, John Keelan, and Rod LaFlamme cruised to an easy win as they blew away the nearest team by a full ten seconds.

Ted White also claimed a top spot as he took a victory in the 1,000 with a quick time of 2:14.

The two-mile relay team took second place, the mile-relay squad finished in third, Brian Osborne grabbed third in the 440, Tom Carleo was sixth in the mile, Todd Johnson fifth in the 60-yard high-hurdles, and Kevin Novak took fourth in the 880.

Redemption centers are now open again

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Students can stop cluttering up their dorm rooms with empty returnable bottles and cans, now that redemption centers at the University of Massachusetts campus have opened for business.

"We operate with the help from the Student Senate and the co-op," said Mindy Ordway, the project's coordinator. The redemption centers are provided for students cost free, she said. The Student Senate sponsors them, although the centers are supposed to be self-sufficient, Ordway said.

The centers were opened last May in response to Collegian editorials written by some students. Ordway said one of the problems is that when a group of students will take a trip to buy beer or soda, they rarely organize a trip to redeem their cans.

"We had quite a profit and had an excellent response from the students," Ordway said.

This semester the redemption centers will be opened from 4:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. "The outpouring of students (last semester) was tremendous, which is why we increased hours," Ordway said. The centers, which will be opened an extra hour this semester, are run by students on work study. On Monday the center will be located in the Hampden Dining Commons in the Southwest residential area. On Tuesday it will be in Mary Lyons dorm in the Northeast residential area, and on Wednesday it will be in Webster dorm in the Orchard Hill residential area. On Thursday the center will be in the Franklin Dining Commons, and on Friday it will be located in the Brown recreational room in the Sylvan residential area.

The Redemption Center will also be open from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. on Fridays in the Student Union Building, across from the Mini Store.

The redemption centers accept no bar bottles or the cardboard cartons they come in because those bottles are washed and reused, rather than crushed. They also refuse plastic containers, LeBatts, Falstaff, Heffenreffer, and Heinekin beer containers, Price Chopper and Stop and Shop cans, White Rock and Weight Watchers containers because distributors won't pick them up.

Campus Connection also folds

Amherst paper folds due to lack of funds

(AP) The staff of the Amherst Record has put together this week's edition of the 140-year-old newspaper, but it will never be printed.

Publisher David A. Schansberg called his employees together Tuesday afternoon to tell them there wasn't enough money to keep publishing the free weekly, which was the oldest continuously operating business venture in Amherst.

"In a way, I'm glad it's over," Schansberg said later. "We've been going on week-to-week for the past several weeks.

"For three weeks we've known that each issue could potentially be our last. We've been living and working under that kind of pressure."

Schansberg came to Amherst from Claremont, N.H., after buying the newspaper in April from Allbritton Communications, a newspaper and television station operator based in Washington, D.C. Staffers said yesterday they had hoped Allbritton would bail the paper out.

"I thought I would find them here this morning to assume control of the paper," Schansberg said yesterday. "I thought they would come in, and try to resell it to somebody else."

The paper had a circulation of 14,000, Schansberg said.

"It's profoundly sad," said editor Nancy Conway Martin. "The community is losing another editorial voice, and that voice was building. Three years ago, we had to struggle just to get news releases. I've put a lot of my life in this paper, and I truly like it."

Martin said she considered the staff's decision to complete this week's paper an act of "true devotion to the town" even though the edition will not be printed.

"The staff has been extraordinary. The art, ad, production and editorial people have all worked under extremely difficult circumstances. During a very unstable time, they stuck together . . . Even after we found out it was all over, the art room chose to finish the ads," she said.

Schansberg said he simply ran out of money, and declined to discuss financial details.

"During the late summer and early fall, several things happened that created the necessity for more investment capital than I had anticipated or could raise," he told the Daily Hampshire Gazette of Northampton.

Most important, he said, was the fact that three large chain stores - K-Mart, Stop & Shop, and Price Chopper - pulled their advertising supplements out of the Amherst Record within a one-month period.

Road show coming to UMass tonight

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Earth First! an environmental group formed by individuals concerned about preserving the wilderness and the environment will present its East Coast road show at 7 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

The group was established for the purpose of polishing lobbying skills on environmental issues, said Shana Frank, a graduate student in the School of Education and organizer of the Earth First! show.

Frank said the group consists of people who once belonged to other environmental groups, like the Sierra Club, but found too many obstacles in their lobbying efforts. They had to compromise with the government often and they felt that in dealing with the wilderness there was not room for compromise, she said.

"E.F. uses a different style of lobbying than that used by other groups," Frank said. "E.F. goes by region in determining what areas need to be preserved. They want to educate congressmen about wilderness and environmental issues so they can help and understand reasons for lobbying."

Ahern says he will not run for SGA office again

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) co-president, Tom Ahern said he will not seek re-election to his position during last night's meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Co-president Charlene Allen has not announced her candidacy and Ahern said "it is doubtful" she will seek re-election.

Ahern, a junior education major, said he would like to concentrate more on academics. "It's time for me to take a back seat and get out of the limelight," he said.

Although he does not plan to hold a position with the SGA next year, Ahern said he will remain actively involved with specific student issues and committees he is interested in.

"I will probably be working with the judicial branch of the SGA," he said. Ahern said he is beginning to explore legal issues involving students rights and due process.

Ahern said the job of president "takes up more time than one would expect," and some of the goals he set last year "have been reached and others have not."

Some of the accomplishments include creating additional bus routes, improving the lighting at Orchard hill, working with the development of constitution and establishing a student board to the Amherst town government which strives to achieve better rent control, he said.

"Another goal was to get a permanant Attorney General, which came later than I thought," he said.

Ahern said he fell short on student outreach, a program he talked about during his campaign last year, and lowering the prices of books at the Textbook Annex.

"There was a lot of interest in both those issues," he said, but the people needed to follow up and actively work on those concerns were not there. "I did not attack those (issues) well enough," he said.

Overall Ahern said many "positive things came out of the year." He said he was pleased with student support at many successful rallys against tuition increases, legislation to raise the drinking age and the presence of United Technology on campus.

"It was definitely a love/hate job," he said. Ahern said, though, the internal politicking caused unexpected job stress.

There is often what he describes as "antagonistic attitudes," between SGA members and other student government groups. Some times people forget about working together, he said, "and you feel like yelling 'let's stop contradicting ourselves.'"

Ahern also said he and co-president Charlene Allen were often criticized for not publishing all the positive things which come out of their office enough, and not responding to editorials. "It's hard because saying 'well I did this' is patting yourself on the back," he said. Where the editorials are concerned, Ahern said the attention given to inaccurate information often magnifies problems out of proportion so he chose not to respond.

Gunmen assassinate the U.S. director of Sinai patrol force

ROME (AP) - Two gunmen yesterday shot and killed Leamon R. Hunt, the American director of a multinational force that patrols the Sinai. An anonymous caller said a group called the Fighting Communist Party was responsible for the attack.

Dr. Claudio Bevilacqua said by telephone from San Giovanni Hospital of Hunt: "He is dead. He has no heart beat. The bullet caused multiple fractures in the head. He has been clinically dead since 8:15 p.m., 2:15 EST."

Dr. Evasio Fava, director of intensive care at the hospital, said Hunt died minutes after he was transferred to San Giovanni Hospital from Sant' Eugenio Hospital.

Maria Elena Caciotti, a spokesperson at the Multinational Force and Observers headquarters here, confirmed earlier that Hunt, the force's civilian director-general, had been shot. "But we do not have any other details," she said.

The Italian news agency ANSA quoted police as saying he was shot in the head by three men who fled in a Fiat sedan. The U.S. Embassy confirmed the ANSA account.

In an anonymous telephone call to a Milan radio station, a man with a Roman accent said, "This is the Fighting Communist Party. We must claim the attempt on Gen. Hunt, the guarantor of the Camp David agreements. The imperialist forces must leave Lebanon. Italy must leave NATO. No to the installation of missiles in Comiso."

The attack came a few hours later. Vice President George Bush left Rome and discussed the situation in Lebanon with Italian officials.

The multinational force monitors the Israeli-Egyptian accord that returned the Sinai to Egypt. Hunt, 57, a retired career diplomat, has been its director since the fall of 1982. He was a native of Mill Creek, Okla.

A separate multinational force, including American, Italian, French and British troops, is in the Beirut area of Lebanon. The anonymous caller apparently was also referring to this force, as well as to NATO plans to install nuclear missiles at Comiso, Italy, as part of the deployment of 572 new medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

Tunnel collapses near nuclear test site

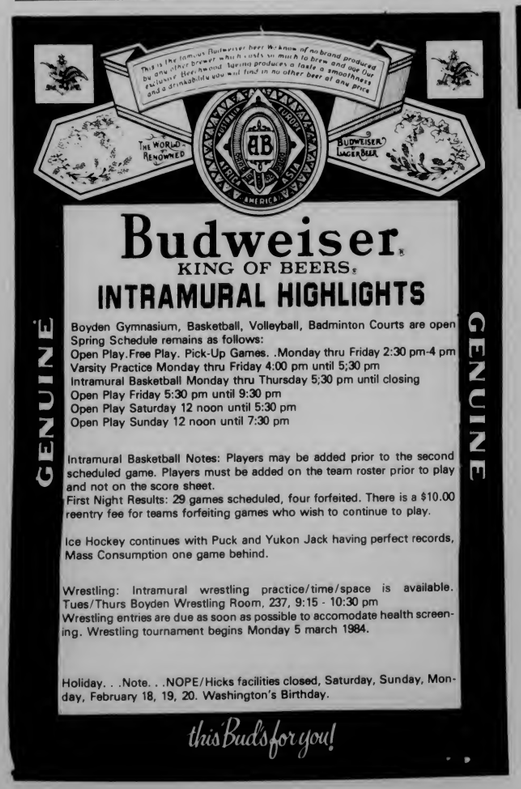
LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) - A tunnel collapsed yesterday at the Nevada Test Site three hours after a nuclear test, injuring at least 12 scientists and engineers - two critically, officials said.

The injured were in trailers on the surface checking instruments that recorded the blast when the ground fell "a dozen or so feet," said U.S. Department of Energy spokesman Jim Boyer.

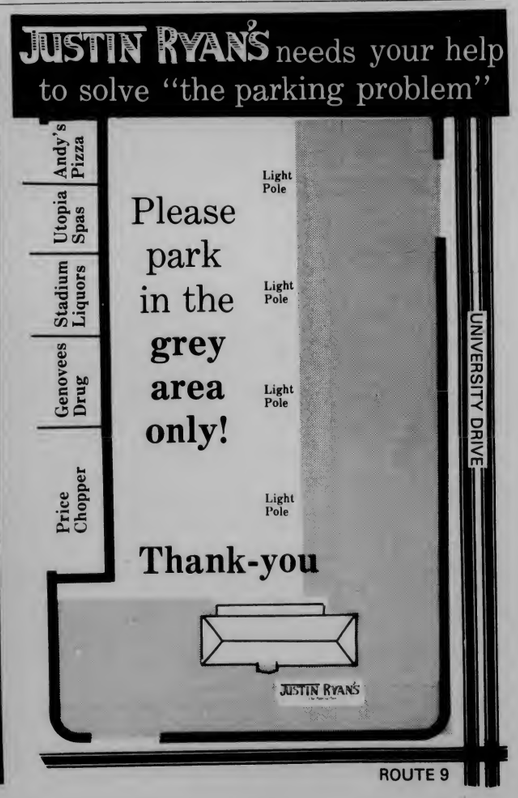
"There was no escape of radiation when the earth subsided," Boyer said. He said the workers were "bounced around" inside the trailers during the fall.

The accident occurred shortly after noon - three hours after detonation 1,168 feet underground of a nuclear test code-named Midas Myth-Milagro.

Boyer declined to give details of the test at Ranier Mesa, about 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas, except to say that it was "less than 20 kilotons." One kiloton equals 1,000 tons of TNT.



The scientists and technicians checking the instruments were the first into the area after the test, Boyer said, adding "A collapse in this hard-rock area is very unusual."



"We were told there were 12 people injured, two critical," said Margaret Purdue of Southern Nevada Memorial Hospital.

Tunnels have been dug in a mountain of rock at the barren desert test site. Nuclear devices are exploded inside long sealed chambers within the tunnels.

Health Services assists with birth control

By JEANETTE DEFORGE
Collegian Correspondant

Editor's Note: This is the second of a three part series on contraceptives.

One of the advantages of over-the-counter contraceptives, which include condoms and vaginal spermicides in jelly, foam, or suppository form, is their easy accessibility at the University of Massachusetts Health Services.

This semester, Health Services is developing a contraceptive purchase request form that will insure the purchaser's confidentiality and reduce embarassment, according to Pam Gonyer, coordinator of Contraceptive Education at the center.

"We recommend condoms used with foam or jellies," said Ron Mazur, director of the Peer Sexuality Program. "When these are used correctly and consistently, it is almost as effective as the Pill."

Mazur said the staff at Health Services is "very sensitive and understanding," and with the new order form, over-the-counter contraceptives will be "extremely available."

According to a Health Services informational pamphlet, Choosing a Contraceptive, vaginal spermicides and condoms together have a 5 percent failure rate and the condom alone has a 10 percent failure rate.

There are no reported or known dangers, other than minor skin irritations resulting from the use of over-the-counter contraceptives, Gonyer said.

"Someone is less likely to suffer from an allergic reaction if an unscented, uncolored contraceptive is chosen," she said.

Gonyer said the condom is "good, solid, primary or backup method" which also decreases the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.

The disadvantage of these birth control methods, according to Gonyer, is making the decision and commitment to always have the method available at the time of sexual intercourse.

SGA attacked by candidates

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Student Senator Tim Rudolph and Orchard Hill Area Government Treasurer Donna Dooley announced their candidacy yesterday for Student Government Association co-presidents by attacking the Student Government Association as a "radical establishment" and by promising to make the SGA more responsive to student interests.

"What we have is a radical establishment. There isn't much trust for students. We see a great deal of narrowness. We see a great deal of cronyism," Rudolph said in his opening statement.

Dooley criticized the student senate as being more responsive to special interest groups and not the student body. She said many of these interest groups receive funding from the SGA through the Student Activities Trust Fund.

"When a student pays $96 for that trust fund, a student expects something from that," she said.

Rudolph said he and his running mate could be more responsive and available to the students because they live in the residence halls, and said many of the officers in the SGA did not. He said the SGA is riddled with elements of elitism and cronyism and is governed with a "narrow-based outlook."

"What we'll be doing is going right to the grass roots. We won't have this establishment group that we have now," Rudolph said.

"It's amazing. This establishment has neglected us for so long," he said.

The two candidates promised that any expenditures by the SGA over $10,000 would go on a referendum to get student input. Rudolph said any changes in the Student Activities Trust Fund would "mandatorily go out to referendum."

Rudolph criticized the President's Council which he said has "deteriorated beyond redemption" during past and present administrations. He also attacked the SGA Coordinating Committee which he called a "super senate" for making policy decisions and investments which are not reported to the senate or the student body. He said in the past the committee made an investment that was "over $100,000."

The candidates said they would try, if they could, to use the campus radio station, WMUA, and Union Video to be more accessible to the student body.

They said they would also make use of newsletters and direct mailings to find out student opinion on various issues.

"One major desire is to turn this around and go to the students and talk to the students," Dooley said.

Plato the computer service at UMass assists the students

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

PLATO can help students learn at the University of Massachusetts, said Conrad Wogrin, director of the University Computing Center staff.

PLATO is a computer-based service which can dynamically present educational material through 10 computer terminals at UMass. The system uses both microcomputers and the University Computing Center's newest, most powerful computer, Wogrin said.

Students using PLATO receive the information over terminal screens in the form of text, drawings, and animated graphics, said Carol MacKnight, director of the Office of Computer-Assisted Instruction at UMass.

PLATO's sophisticated graphics capabilities allow students to manipulate and demonstrate their understanding of information by using terminal keyboards and by touching the screen with their fingers, MacKnight said. By touching points on the screen, students can form images, move figures and answer questions.

PLATO was installed at UMass in April 1983, but was not actually turned over to the University Computing Center until October 1984, Worgin said. This recent acquisition explains why PLATO has not been used more in courses, Wogrin said.

Fewer than 200 UMass students regularly use PLATO in pilot projects such as an introductory chemistry course or an intermediate French course, MacKnight said.

But by next Fall more than 2000 introductory chemistry students may be taking weekly quizzes administered via PLATO, she said.

Presently, these quizzes are administered and corrected by hand. "This takes a great many hours from the faculty," Wogrin said.

To administer more than 2000 weekly quizzes a week will require an expansion of present PLATO facilities. "A testing center with about 10 stations will, in fact, do all the testing and keep all the records. One faculty member and several teacher assistants will be able to do the testing," he said.

The potential uses of PLATO at UMass are many and varied, MacKnight said. Ultimately, it could help structure courses to individual students by supplementing courses or guiding independent study, she said.

As a means of testing within a course or placement testing for a course, PLATO can save time that can be used productively in class. It can efficiently point out to students and instructors "what needs emphasis" or even remedial work, MacKnight added.

But MacKnight said PLATO's flexible approach to the needs of students and teachers, and its already extensive library of 10,000 hours of computer-based lesson material, will allow it to be rapidly integrated into many courses at UMass.

Flasher arrested at local junior high

Amherst Police reported two indecent exposure incidents this week, with one leading to the arrest Tuesday of a South Deerfield man.

Police said the man was apprehended and charged with open and gross lewdness after police arrived at the Amherst Junior High School. Police said the suspect had exposed himself to two girls swimming in the school pool. The girls were 11 and 13 years old.

Another indecent exposure incident was reported Monday afternoon when a woman told police she was walking from Route 9 on University Drive and a white man, about six feet tall and 150 pounds, stopped next to her in his car. He was wearing only a flannel shirt, according to the police report.

In other police action:

A wallet containing $175 was reported stolen from the Village Inn about 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Collegian editor is suspended

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Collegian Editor in Chief Joel Myerson yesterday suspended Black Affairs department editor Yadira Betances following the printing of a Black Affairs editorial, an action which Myerson said violated the newspaper's constitution.

According to the Collegian Constitution, a full staff meeting must be convened within two weeks, and a two thirds staff vote is required to uphold the suspension and dismissal of any board member.

Myerson cited Article V, section 2 of the Collegian Constitution as cause for Betances' suspension. The clause states that "...cause for dismissal shall be based on...a performance of official duties in a way to be injurious to the best interests of the newspaper."

"Yadira was suspended because she violated a Collegian policy that was set two years ago in response to a similar situation," Myerson said. "As an editor, she should have brought out this matter, or any grievance, during a Collegian Board meeting. If she was then unsatisfied with that, then she should have drafted a letter for our editorial page."

Betances, who has written for the Collegian for three semesters, was appointed as Black Affairs editor last spring.

"I think that the procedure Joel described is there only to protect the Collegian," Betances said. "I was aware of the policy but I didn't think that my complaints would have been printed, so I wrote the editorial for the Black Affairs section."

Collegian Editorial page Editor Josh Meyer said he would have printed Betances criticism on his page.

"The Collegian is very concerned about addressing the problems that people have with anything we print," Meyer said. "Of course we will print any letter concerning the issue, particularly the opinions of those most involved.

But, said Betances, "I had talked to Joel Myerson about my dissatisfaction with the cartoon, but I understood him to say that given the chance again, he would still run the cartoon."

U.S. senate candidate to be at UM

U.S. Rep. Edward Markey (D-Mass), a candidate for the U.S. Senate, will give a campaign speech at 7:30 p.m. today in Campus Center Room 904.

Markey, who is running for the seat to be vacated by Sen. Paul Tsongas in November, is currently a representative from the 7th Congressional District. A co-sponsor of the House nuclear freeze resolution last spring, he will address the freeze movement, equal rights, education and protection for the elderly in his speech here tonight, according to his press secretary.

UMass student co-ops join cohorts

Members of University of Massachusetts Student Controlled Businesses (SCBS) will join members of area worker cooperatives and collectives here tonight at the "Cooperation Among Cooperatives" conference.

The conference, which is expected to draw from 40 to 60 participants, will provide an opportunity for members to "share knowledge and work with each other," said Katja Hahn d'Errico, director of the UMass Economic Development Office, which is co-sponsoring the event with the SCBS.

The conference will begin at 6 p.m. in Campus Center Room 101 with the 1980 British film, "The Mondragon Experiment," which with 15,000 members, is the largest co-op in the Western world, d'Errico said.

A discussion on how to network effectively will follow in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building, including a dinner from Earthfoods. There is a small charge for the event.

d'Errico explained there are two kinds of co-ops: consumer co-ops where members are volunteers and gain one vote in the management; and worker collectives, where the workers own the business. The UMass student co-ops, she said, are organized as worker cooperatives, though all Student Activities Trust Fund paying undergraduates are owners.

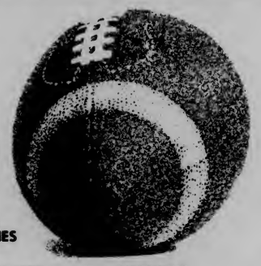
"There is no strong voice for the wilderness," Frank said. "E.F. wants to make one."

Each year the road show goes to different sections of the country. Last fall it was called the "Rockies Road Show" when it toured Wyoming and Idaho.

The show tonight, sponsored by the UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality, will consist of three different activities. The first one, a film by Australian economist John Seed, is about protecting rain forests in Australia. Seed participated in making the film and will talk about his experiences in the rain forests.

Dave Foreman, the leader of this show, will speak on national issues and wilderness proposals to keep forests.



Oregon folksinger, Cecelia Ostrow, will sing songs she has written about the wilderness and the environment.

The group corresponds through a newsletter. Members are in the U.S., Japan, and Australia, as well as in other countries.

"The purpose of the show is to inform people of the issues and get them excited about caring about the wilderness," Frank said.

The GRADUATE STUDENT SENATE is inviting political, social, cultural and academic groups to submit requests for LINE ITEM FUNDING for Fiscal Year 1985. Misinformation in Collegian article

To the Editor,

The Collegian news analysis "School finances aided Jackson's History visit?" by Peter Abraham raised questions concerning the integrity of the University's fiscal policy regarding the funding of campus events featuring presidential hopefuls as keynote speakers.

The article seriously questioned the administration's probity in dealing with the matter. It further implied there was a grave misuse of funds surrounding the keynote speech given by the Rev. Jesse Jackson as an opening for Black History Month.

In the article dated February 8th, Abraham stated that what was supposed to be a keynote speech for the initiation of Black History Month turned out to be, simply a campaign speech geared entirely towards the boosting of Jackson's candidacy.

He further implied that both the Five College Campaign coordinator, Sharon Davies, and the president of Students for Jesse, John Ruddock, misinformed the students and administration of the University when they maintained Jackson would be speaking on "Black history" and the "political and social changes that have been made in recent years."

Apparently, what Mr. Abraham neglected to take into consideration was that the act of the Rev. Jackson appearing on the stage of the Fine Arts Center as a serious Democratic contender for the presidency is in itself Black history and denotes important political and social changes that have come about in recent years.

In addition, Abraham also overlooked the fact that the Reverend Jackson's speech was no more campaign oriented than the McGovern speech that had taken place on the evening of February 1st, in the Student Union Ballroom. Presidential hopeful George McGovern opened up the Student Voter Registration Drive by speaking on the need for "peace abroad and economic justice at home," while criticizing President Reagan's "foreign policy and budget priorities."

Similarly, Rev. Jackson attacked the Reagan policies dealing with "human rights, U.S. troops overseas and health care." Considering that both were keynote speeches, it seems unfair to focus on one and not the other; and further, it appears unrealistic to invite someone running for the presidency to speak on a given topic and expect them not to mention their desire to be president at all.

According to Abraham, the chairman of the Board of Governors, Mike Reilly, was quoted as saying that the president of Students for Jesse came up to him soliciting funds, and that these were given because Reilly apparently thought that the speech "would be a big part of Black History Month." Reilly was supposed to have noted afterward that "it was basically a campaign rally."

A later conversation with Reilly revealed that the latter never uttered such a statement. Reilly emphasized that he had been misquoted by Abrahams; contrary to the reported statement, Reilly mentioned that there was "nothing wrong" with allocating the funds toward the simulcast.

He clarified that the Jackson speech was merely an "educational experience," and that the financial support did not denote that the University was endorsing the candidate. He explained that the simulcast facilitated the sharing of the Jackson address with the over 600 people that were not able to obtain seating in the FAC. Reilly further stated that in a similar situation, the Board of Governors would probably "do it again."

The truth about Public Policy

To the Editor,

I would like to respond to Mr. Altneu and Ms. Dooley's editorial in yesterday's Collegian. Their editorial focused on the cost of parking fines incurred by the Public Policy Committee of the SGA, however, it completely ignored how and why these fines came about.

The main focus of the Public Policy Committee is lobbying on legislation that we have filed and other bills that have a direct impact on UMass and students of public higher education. To be most effective in our lobbying efforts, committee members go into Boston once a week to meet with legislators on issues of concern; for example, student representation on the Board of Regents or the Building Authority, the drinking age increase or increases in tuition. Committee members spend a great deal of time researching, preparing and scheduling these meetings, which has earned the respect of the people we deal with in the State House.

Yes, members of the past and present committee have gotten parking tickets on their trips into Boston. However; people on the committee have also saved students of this university money. It was Paul Gosselin, the past chair, who led the fight against the proposed $50.00 tuition increase last semester. Public policy has consistently fought for increased financial aid during the budget fights in the House.

People should try and focus on how and why committee members got the tickets and weigh that against the work the committee does, because if people are really interested in representing students and protecting their rights working on this committee is the most effective way.

Secondly, the authors of the article failed to mention that the reason parking tickets are being paid in this manner is that there is no mechanism currently in the SATF that allows for payment of parking in advance, something which is being worked on by Eric Nitzche, the SGA treasurer.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

On common sense thinking

On September 11, 1973, the democratically elected government of Salvador Allende was overthrown in a bloody military coup organized and financed by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. That coup resulted in the murder of 30,000 people in the first two weeks alone, and subsequently a reign of terror, torture, detention and mass arrests which have lasted over a period of ten years. And for the past ten years, U.S. multinational corporations have been making profits in that country.

In 1936, the U.S., which had already invaded Nicaragua 3 times, helped to set up a surrogate right-wing dictatorship in Nicaragua (that of the infamous Mr. Somoza). For the next forty years Mr. Somoza and his gang imposed the stability (of a cemetary) on that oppressed nation.

Foad Vafaei

In 1932, a U.S. backed general, Mr. Martinez, massacred 30,000 peasants and workers in El Salvador only to set up a military dictatorship for the following fifty years.

In 1965, President Johnson ordered the entry of 12,000 U.S. marines into the Dominican Republic, (as he claimed), "...to combat communism." That action resulted in the death of 4,000 civilians.

When we go through the long list of crimes, genocides and brutalities committed in history, all too often we come across such recurring themes and excuses as: "fighting subversion and terrorism," "preserving democracy, stability and national interests," "combatting communism," etc. These matters must be looked into more critically. As citizens of a nation which has committed more acts of military intervention than any other nation in the 20th century. As citizens of a nation which has the largest military budget in the history of mankind, we have a moral responsibility to look beyond mere words when the warriors of the Reagan Administration break every record of lies and hypocrisy to justify their illegal interventions in Central America.

If we do so, it is certainly not because we are Moscow agents; it doesn't mean we want to create chaos in society; and it is not a case of adolescent rebelliousness. If we demand that people be told the truth about what their government is up to in the Third World, it certainly doesn't mean we are against democracy!! We are doing so out of humanitarian motivations pure and simple: the very ones which motivated such great men as Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Gandhi, or Martin Luther King.

Today we are facing a world in a state of economic and political crisis. The only solutions ever suggested by the Reagan Administration in the face of these complex international issues (problems) consists of trade embargoes (e.g., against the U.S.S.R.), overt military interventions (e.g., in Lebanon), military aid for brutal right-wing dictatorships (such as El Salvador or Guatemala), or covert terrorist activities aimed at subverting progressive and democratic states (such as Nicaragua).

Suffering from a profound intellectual sterility, this administration is not able to come up with any peaceful means of solving the "world crisis" which does not involve the direct use of force.

The Reagan Administration claims it is actually supporting a democratic government in El Salvador. In order to realize what an absurd claim that is we need only recall that the opposition in that tortured country is forced to use a clandestine radio, simply because it has not been allowed to express itself by any other means. It does not take any deep intuition to realize a government which has murdered at least 40,000 innocent civilians only in the last 4 years (according to ex-ambassador of the U.S. in El Salvador, Robert White), has no legitimacy as a government, never mind a democratic one.

In June 1982, our ally in the middle east, the state of Israel (which receives 3 million dollars a day from the U.S. taxpayers money!) used its colossal war machinery to nearly destroy the Lebanese capital, Beirut. With the sincerity that only a gangster can offer, its Prime Minister, Menachem Begin went to the United Nations to claim his air force was bombing that city only to destroy the 4,000 P.L.O. guerillas. Since we all know the Israeli operations in Lebanon resulted in the destruction of 37,000 people, since we know the Lebanese army was not involved in the fighting, we must deduce that our peace loving ally destroyed 33,000 people who were not P.L.O. guerillas, and were, indeed, civilians.

But, on the other hand, there are those of us who are willing to use their common sense in questioning the acts of our government...and for all the rest of us, Amen!

The need for motivation and more

He had no idea what time it was. He guessed it was late afternoon but the day had gone by so slowly. He raised the heavy glass to his lips and drank and decided that he hated Sundays.

There were only a few other people in the bar. To his right was a small, myopic fellow intently reading the Sunday Globe. The little man was reading something about Greece. There was a picture of a beautiful beach set below fabulous, old, whitewashed villas. On the beach were a man and a woman. The little man held the newspaper close to his face and his thick glasses.

John Kenney

To his left was an empty stool. Next to that was a woman who smoked cigarettes and stared vacantly at the basketball game on the television. She asked the bartender who was playing. The bartender looked at the television as if he didn't know it was on, and said that he's just come on duty. This was true. The young man had been there well before this bartender.

The woman and the bartender struck up a conversation about cars. Apparently the woman had just gotten out of work, and her car would not start. She was waiting for a friend. The bartender talked about his car too. Their conversation faded out as he listened to the "Eagles" playing on the stereo from behind the bar.

He had been at school for two weeks, but it seemed longer. He was not doing his work. He was not motivated. It just didn't seem important. And yet he knew that studying was a means to an end, a career.

But that is what he disliked so much about people at school. They are all so caught up in their major. He admired their discipline and he hated their insensativity, their inability to relate what they are studying to what they want to do.

Each semester he had problems getting classes — everyone did. This made the beginning of the semester difficult and unorganized. What was worse, he thought, was the administration office removing people from their housing if they paid their bill late. It was like they were punishing them. Who the hell were they to pull someone out of their room? Some people had to work over intercession to pay their bill. Instead of supporting these students Whitmore just phased them out, as if they weren't even people. This was the easy way for the administration.

He wanted the easy way out, too. He wanted to quit. Too many of his friends had graduated and weren't working or were working in jobs they really didn't want.

To stay here, he knew, is to risk becoming callous and apathetic, like too many of the people up here who care only about themselves — who just don't care about people.

The little man was staring at the picture of the people on the beach. He finished his drink and wrapped up his newspaper. He put his coat on, hopped off his stool and left.

The young man looked down at the surface of the bar, his arms spread out on the smooth wood that ran along the edge. The top of the bar was copper and it was dented in several places. He stared at his deformed reflection.

He gulped down his beer and left. He had to get out of there. He realized he could not quit. That was the easy way out.

Freeze: rhetoric vs. reality

To many people on this campus, the thought of a nuclear freeze is both simple and appealing; their stand is based on the assumption (hope?) that fewer weapons would reduce the risks of war.

Unfortunately, such an easy solution could not be successful in a world with such complicated international problems. First of all, we must remember that the weapons themselves do not cause war; the real cause lies in the ambitions of individual world leaders and their governments. If the essential political trust between countries is missing, a nuclear freeze or disarmament would be very unstable.

Peter Dow

One truth that the "peace" movement must accept is that we can't escape into a pre-nuclear past; nuclear technology will be with us forever. A nuclear freeze between the two superpowers, therefore, would do nothing to reduce the risks of a nuclear conflict from being started by a terrorist group or some disgruntled country.

But yet, in the face of this reality, many citizens from all countries still wish that a mutually verifiable freeze could offer true peace between the United States and the Soviet Union. But the possibility that the Soviets will consent to on-site verification is highly unlikely.

It is obvious that there has been an increase in the numbers of people in the nuclear freeze movement of late, albeit negligible. We must understand that the peace movements are much weaker than many "peace-niks" would have us believe.

The claims of the peace movement that they represent the "grass roots" is more hot air than substance. Take for instance, the movement opposing U.S. missiles being deployed in Europe; I have heard claims from some peace groups that they represent upwards of 80 percent of the population. But elections are the only way to accurately measure public opinion, and the results of recent European elections do not substantiate the peace movement's claims.

After all, it was Mrs. Thatcher who won the British elections, not the Labor Party, which was crushed by the most overwhelming defeat in its history.

And the evidence from West Germany's recent election is even more convincingly pro-deployment, and anti-nuclear freeze. Petra Kelly, leader of the Green Party opposing the missile deployment, was wiped out by Helmut Kohl. This is the same group that claims to represent a majority of the citizens, but yet the Greens barely managed to gain 5 percent of the vote.

If "true" world peace is ever to be obtained, we must separate truth and reality from the hysterical fear that is coming from the nuclear freeze movement.

live wire

Greetings and welcome back to Live Wire. Sorry it was so long in coming, but Dave Chevan jumped ship, leaving me without a music editor. But, don't mourn his passing yet -I'm sure he'll be back with some guest columns and such.

Also in the sort of distant future is UB40 on March 31 in the SUB. Another UPC presentation -seems like they're turning it into a pretty fantastic semester for music on campus.

In case you either don't get MTV or have no friends who happen to be rumour-mongers, you already know that Elvis Costello, sans Attractions, will pull into Amherst in April. All I can tell you for certain is that the show'll be in the Fine Arts Center. Rumours abound though. Probably the best one I've heard so far goes something like: all tickets will be sold at the door -general admission yet. If you wanna find out what's really going on, call UPC; they may not tell you anything, but at least you'll get to hear the cute taped message on their answering machine.

Turning to the more immediate future: the weekend isn't really hopping music-wise; probably 'cause it's a long weekend and the club owners expect everyone to go home.

Tonight, the Blue Wall has the New Models, so slip into something overpriced and Fiorucci, head on down and admire Casey Lindstrom's haircut for a couple of hours. If you'd rather listen to music that was "meaningful" while you were still in diapers, check out the Doors' tribute band Crystal Ship at the Rusty Nail tonight.

The Wall is closed tomorrow night (Saturday, too), but other local clubs offer somewhat of a selection. At the Iron Horse, it's the Jazz Babies, Chills at Sheehans, and Girl's Night Out at the Nail. If you'd rather hear some heavy metal and have access to a car, you might find it worthwhile to make the trip to the Agora Ballroom in West Hartford for Girls' School.

At the Nail on Saturday, it's the band-that-wouldn't-die, the Stompers (go, Sal, go). At Sheehans, it's Cayenne, and Toni Byrd & Morris Goldberg bringing what promises to be an interesting evening of original African folk music to the Iron Horse.

In case you missed the Stray Cats at the FAC last week, you can catch them at the Agora on Sunday night.

For those of you heading into Boston this weekend, I'd love to advise you as to what's going on, but someone took off with the "arts" section of my Phoenix, so you're on your own.

TRIVIA: Sorry, there is no trivia this week. Watch for Live Wire Trivia in the very near future, though; your musical knowledge could get you records, concert tickets, posters and other neat stuff.

Universally acclaimed pantomimist Marcel Marceau will perform at 8 p.m. on Monday, March 5 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Since his first tour of the United States in 1955, Marceau has been a regular visitor in both this country and Canada.

Always a favorite at UMass, Marceau's show's sell out every year, so to be assured of choice seats, don't delay! Get tickets today at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, all DATATIX outlets, or the Springfield Civic Center. For ticket information, call 545-2511.

Hawks fly into town for Cage battle

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For the past few years it's been a rarity for hungry University of Massachusetts basketball fans – a February game in the Cage that means something. But tonight's 8 p.m. clash with St. Joseph's is what coach Ron Gerlufsen terms, "our biggest game of the year, by far."

The Hawks, 17-4 overall and 10-2 in the Atlantic 10, are on the verge of cracking the Top 20 and have posted a big victory, 58-45, over then-unbeaten DePaul.

"St. Joe's is a great team," said Gerlufsen. "They're a physical team with strong inside players and solid guards. But we're playing some good ball ourselves."

That they are. UMass is on the crest of breaking even at 10-11 on the year (5-7 in the league) and have won three in a row, including a tight 59-58 win at Marist Tuesday night. The Minutemen have won five of their past six games and are a practically invincible 8-1 at home.

St. Joe's leads the Atlantic 10 in six of the eight team statistical categories kept by the league office. The Hawks own the best field goal percentage (51.1), the widest margin of victory (11.59), the best free throw percentage (72.2), the hold opponents to a poor 41.7 from the floor, while gathering in 39.79 rebounds a game. They allow only 63.20 points a game.

"We've got to compensate for their big forward line by playing tough on defense," said Gerlufsen. "We're ready for this one, our goal was to have a winning season and this game will put us within reach of that.

"We've made good progress this year, our defense is improving, the players are looking for good shots and after the way we played them last time I think we've got a good shot," said the coach.

The Palestra was the scene of a controversial 68-67 Hawk win in double-overtime. Smith was called at the buzzer for fouling Springman and the St. Joe's forward sank two for the win.

Lojewski was held to only six in the game, but Costner had 19 to go along with 11 boards.

"Obviously we want to beat them to gain some ground in the standings," said Gerlufsen. "But we feel we should've won that last game..."

Individually the Hawks line up with the unpopular (to UMass fans) Tony Costner in the pivot. The big (6-10, 250) Costner is second in both scoring (19.2) and rebounding (8.2) in the league. He is joined in the frontcourt by 6-7 junior Bob Lojewski (14.6 a game along with 6.1 caroms) and last week's A-10 Player of the Week, Kevin Springman, a 6-10 225 pound leaper.

In the backcourt sophomore Mo Martin (14.0 ppg) teams with freshman James Flint. Martin leads the conference in steals and shoots 58 percent from the floor.

UMass will counter with two of the top five players in conference rebounding, Horace Neysmith is hauling down 7.5 a game while Edwin Green gets 7.3. Neysmith is coming off a 17 of 17 shooting streak and a Player of the Week award for the tunes he played on St. Bonaventure and Penn State in the Cage last week. Green leads the Atlantic 10 in free throw percentage (.852) and in blocked shots (49).

Offensively the Minutemen have been hot. Sophomore John Hempel poured in 17 against Marist and 27 against PSU. He's leading the team at 15.4 a game, Neysmith is at 14.4, Green averages 13.4, Donald Russell, 11.3 and point gaurd Carl Smith scores at a 7.6 a game clip. Bobby Bruan supplies close to six a game off the pines.

UMass fans want to see some more jammin', like this one from Edwin Green.

Minutemen also look to future

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

You want to be entertained? Come to the Cage tonight at 8 p.m. for a can't-miss-thriller as the Minutemen (10-11) entertain the St. Joseph's Hawks 17-4.

The key to a UMass victory will be Edwin Green's (6-7, 200) containment of Tony Costner (6-10, 250). Costner is tabbed as a first round draft pick by the NBA. He is inconsistent but when he comes to play - look out.

Edwin Green is a real gamer who always comes to play and gave Costner fits in last years overtime thriller in the Cage won by St. Joes. Give the nod to Green in 15.

Speaking of Green, he is a senior and his loss to graduation is tragic to the program. Who is going to replace Mr. Consistency? Well, Coach Ron Gerlufsen and his assistants are hot on the trail of some blue-chip high school talent right as you read. Here are the top four they are pursuing.

Derrick Brantley, 6-7-forward, Willingboro, New Jersey-he runs, jumps and shoots well. His style of play would be a perfect compliment to Hempel and Neysmith. He is currently averaging 19 points and 12 rebounds a game. The finalists are UMass, Holy Cross, and Vanderbit. He will decide at the end of the month.

Carlton Valentine, 6-6-forward-Baltimore, Maryland-he is a rugged power forward who plays for perhaps the best high school team in America, Dematha. He is currently averaging 16 points and 10 rebounds a game. UMass, American, and Michigan State are the finalists. He will decide when his season is over.

John Westbeld, 6-10-center-Dayton, Ohio-he is a "tweener" at this point weighing in at just 190 pounds. He would still be a good catch for this program. He is averaging 15 rebounds a game. UMass, Utah, Maryland, St. Mary's of California and Rice are the finalists.

Eric Fleury, 6-11-center-Albany, New York-he is a good physical speciman at 225 pounds. He is an exchange student from Paris where he is the property of a professional team. We will have to wait and see on this prospect.

Womens hoopsters win by one face St. Joseph's tonight

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The number 1 is currently a very important number for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team. First, it was the margin of victory in the team's 53-52 victory over Boston College on Tuesday night. The victory boosted the team record to a respectable 9-12.

Their current record is the focus for the number "one" to be important for the team. The team is one game away from reaching double figures under the win column which will double the team's production of a year ago.

"It was not what you would call an artistic performance," UMass head coach Barbara Stevens stated of their most recent victory.

A low scoring (53-52) game with a total of 54 turnovers does not deserve the label 'artistic'. However, as Stevens was quick to point out it does go under the 'W' column.

The first half of the game at Chestnut Hill ended in favor of the women Eagles, 21-18. UMass had been struggling offensively for several games and this contest looked to be much of the same.

Luckily for the Minutewomen, things did turn around. The team nearly doubled their first half output, scoring 35 points in the second 20 minute stanza. The defense did not fare as well however, and B.C. was still in contention in the final minutes.

UMass was up by 5 with 4:30 remaining when B.C. made their run. The Eagles used a three part game plan for the final four minutes and it almost worked. B.C. was simply scoring, calling time out, and fouling UMass on the ensuing throw in and hoping UMass would not convert on their one and one situations.

The Minutewomen obliged, to a point. B.C. closed the gap to 'one' point but tough UMass defense deflected a B.C. pass down low and B.C. was forced to shoot quickly and missed. Out of time outs and out of time, the Eagles trudged to the locker room as losers.

UMass is currently 2-1 in conference play. Tonight at 5:00 p.m. the women will tap off against the Lady Hawks of St. Joseph's. The Hawks are currently 0-4 in conference play, but as they say, "don't let that fool you."

The Lady Hawks are led by two six footers in Trish Brown and Janet Fonda. Brown is a second team conference all-star averaging 17 points per game. Fonda is averaging 13 points per contest.

The Minutewomen will counter with their own second team all-star in Karen Damminger. Barbara Hebel, the team's leading scorer will team up with senior Wendy Ward in the backcourt. The bench may be the key to a UMass victory. The Hawks are a bigger team but the UMass bench strength may be able to wear down the Hawks and keep them grounded.

Sports Log

Just a few thoughts . . .

Well, it took a little longer than usual, but we finally got the gold, thanks to Debbie Armstrong. The women's ski team looks very strong and should cop a few more medals before this whole party is over. . . Did you see Scott Hamilton in the first round of the men's figure skating competition? He has to trace patterns as close as possible 3 times! It's kind of like watching an opera; difficult to learn, risky to perform, but all in all, not too thrilling. . . The hockey team got one under the W column by beating Austria. I'm real glad that ABC hired Mike Eruzione to interview Jean Claude Kiley. Eruzione's knowledge of skiing goes as far as Jim Craig's professional career.

ABC should pick up some more viewers as the U.S. looks tough in figure skating and skiing, but, so far, ratings are lower than expected . . . The weather hasn't helped any, but it will be good to see Jim McKay, Al Michaels, and the rest of the ABC crew. They are real professionals . . . Back to skiing, it looks like we have our own champions here at UMass, as both men and women are first in the East and not looking back.

Even though it's thawing and the skiers aren't too happy, we still have plenty of winter sports. . .Last week's column was chock full of jinxes, thank you. Jinx #1 was the Bruins, as they have since lost to powerlouses like Toronto and Detroit. The Sabres are slowly increasing their lead . . . The Washington Capitals are almost making the hometowners forget about the Redskins already by their fine style of play. . . The Canadiens are close to signing Soviet goalie Vladislov Tretiak, whose name sounds like a Yak throwing up.

Jinx #2 is the Celtics, who've lost two straight at home, including the Mosesless 76ers. . . Rumor has it that John Havlicek will come out of retirement to challenge Elvin Hayes, who recently broke Hondo's all-time games played record. By the way, Havlicek and Jim Brown had a little talk before hand. . . The Knicks suddenly are right behind Philly with three games left with the Celts. Hmmmmm.

UMass hoop has the cage going with excitement. The open style of play of Ron Gerlufson has put in is making for jams, slams, and various and sundry rejections. . . Edwin Green, Horace Neysmith (64 percent from the field), and Carl Smith have been clicking and could surprise come tournament time. . . Nice touch by that group in the stands on Saturday's game by flashing their own "rating cards" after every dunk. I've never seen that done in Chapel Hill.

Finally, early choice for Sports Illustrated's Sportsman of the Year has to go to Hulk Hogan. He brought the title back to America by beating the Iron Sheik. And you thought wrestling was fake.

No more need be said.

Harassment procedure policy to be reviewed

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

After more than a year since the policy's initiation, the University of Massachusetts is reviewing its sexual harassment grievance procedures to see if improvements should be made.

All students on campus have been notified the policy is being reviewed, and anyone with suggestions should contact Dr. Thelma Griffith Johnson, chairwoman of the Sexual Harassment Hearing Panel.

The review process is "not meant to be a process that controls input," said University Ombudsman Howard Gadlin.

"If anyone has a recommendation or reaction concerning the policy, make it. It will be considered directly," he said.

Passed in November, 1982 by the Faculty Senate, the policy states sexual harassment includes, "unwelcomed sexual advances, requests for sexual favors and other verbal or physical conduct of sexual nature."

Jay Savereid, chairman of the Communications Studies department and vice-chairman of the panel, said he sees "no serious difficulties coming out of the document." However, "there has not been a grievance that has reached the panel, and until it does, we won't be able to assess it as we ought."

Gadlin said he's "convinced that having the formal policy accounts for the number of cases settled informally" and said because of the policy, "people are more careful about how they treat others."

With regard to grievances handled informally, Savereid said "some (cases) are being damped down that would better be pursued," but he recognized "it is a hard balance to strike," because complaintants cannot be pressured into contacting the Hearing Panel if they choose not to.

The Panel is comprised of two faculty members, two professionsl staff members, four classified employees, two undergraduate students, two graduate students, and one administrative representative.

All administrative personnel, academic chairs and deans, as well as department heads in all non-academic areas, including University Health Services, the Physical Plant, and Food Services, "will have gone through a sexual harassment workshop by the end of the year," Gadlin said.

Terri Hamelin, student coordinator of the Student Sexual Harassment Education Project said the Project is open to all students and student-run organizations interested in the program.

"The workshops are geared for potential victims. We really evaluate the needs of our audience and go from there," Hamelin said.

Referring to the policy, Judy Davis, coordinator of the Office of Human Relations said "It is hard to know what has to be adjusted," because noone has used the policy formally. She said one point that does need to be reviewed is representation for the complaintant.

Other points to be addressed are definitions of terms used in the policy, such as "submission," and "unreasonably interfering," as well as the term "sexual harassment" itself, Davis said.

At the present time the sexual harassment policy is the only formal grievance policy at UMass and Gadlin said he "would like to see a general grievance policy on campus."

Recently the Chancellors' office officially endorsed a graduate student grievance procedure, and a formal racial harassment policy is developing, according to Gadlin.

Senate hopeful stresses freeze issue

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

A candidate for the Massachusetts democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate attacked President Reagan's military buildup and called for a verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union in a campaign speech last night at the University of Massachusetts.

U.S. Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., of the 7th Congressional District, who is seeking the senate seat being vacated by Sen. Paul Tsongas, called the nuclear freeze "the issue of our time."

"All the other issues combined will be a footnote in history if we don't resolve the issue of nuclear weapons," Markey said. "1984 is the watershed year."

Speaking to about 75 people in the Campus Center, Markey attacked Reagan's military build-up saying that the "blank check" Reagan has given the Pentagon does not increase the country's security but only serves as an excuse to cut domestic social spending.

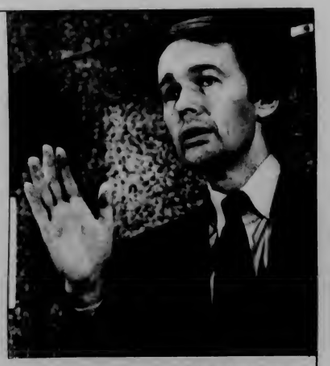
"That's why I'm running. We can't afford another collegial liberal in the Senate," he said. "There are a lot of people who don't want me to be elected and I'm very proud of the enemies I have made."

"I'm an equal opportunity maverick. I don't trust either the liberal or the conservatives," he said criticizing the "status quo inertia in Congress."

After speaking briefly on the history of nuclear weapons, Markey criticized Reagan's hardline policies on arms control with the Soviet Union saying, "More weapons does not mean more security. More weapons only increases the chances that they will be used."

"Ronald Reagan is allergic to nuclear arms control," he said.

Markey criticized new weapons programs such as the MX missile and the Trident II submarine saying they were redundant and that the ultimate effect of those weapons systems was creating a drain on the civilian economy.



"What it does is force us to make decisions on programs that have to be sacrificed," he said.

Markey called Reagan's cuts in social spending a philosophy based on "social Darwinism." Of all the programs that should be cut, Markey said education should be the last.

"The education of its people is the best defense for a country," he said. "The most valuable resource is the human mind."

On other issues, Markey said his past opposition to abortion was due to his strongly held religious and ethnic beliefs and turned "pro-choice" when he realized his personal beliefs were clouding his public responsibility. He also said he was against discrimination of gays, women and disabled persons.

Markey stressed the need for an industrial policy in the U.S. saying that this country should train more people to make more consumer goods rather than designing nuclear weapons.

Select Board candidate drops out

A candidate for the Amherst Select Board withdrew from the reace earlier this week, creating a three-way race for two open seats.

Paul Schroeder announced his candidacy and withdrew it Monday afternoon.

Schroeder left a statement with Town Clerk Estelle Matusko asking that his name be withdrawn from the ballot.

"It really is not in my position to ask for a position in the town government after not being here for that long," Schroeder said. He moved to Amherst a month ago from San Francisco.

The remaining candidates are Joan Golowich, Charles Fergison, and incumbent Richard Minear. The two opening seats are Minear's and the seat being vacated by board Chairman Edith Wilkinson.

Matusko said candidates for town offices had until 4:30 p.m. Monday to take their names off the ballot.

Schroeder said he talked with numerous people over the weekend who are involved in Amherst politics after announcing his candidacy and decided to withdraw, but said he was "not ruling out anything in the future."

Schroeder had announced his candidacy with a criticism of the water quality in Amherst and said he plans to continue researching the issue.

"I got a lot of support from people but I decided it was not for me at this time," he said. The election is April 10.

US plans to sell missiles to Jordan

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration has quietly informed Congress it intends to sell up to 1,600 antiaircraft missiles to Jordan while trying to persuade Israel to go along with plans for a U.S.-armed Jordanian strike force, sources said Monday.

The proposed sale surfaced as Jordan's King Hussein held talks with President Reagan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Robert C. McFarlane, Reagan's national security adviser, on U.S. policy toward Lebanon.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt was scheduled to follow suit Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said Reagan is moving toward a withdrawal of the American Marines from Beirut to U.S. ships off the Lebanese coast within 30 days.

"It is feasible to have them out in 30 days," Speakes said. "We will do so if it is consistent with the political and military situation."

Gemayel agrees to peace initiative

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - President Amin Gemayel has agreed to scrap Lebanon's U.S.-brokered troop withdrawal pact with Israel, Beirut radio reported, in an effort to save his disintegrating army and government.

The state radio said yesterday night that Gemayel had agreed to an eight-point Saudi peace initiative that includes renouncing the May 17, 1983, agreement between Lebanon and Israel. It added that Foreign Minister Elie Salem had communicated the decision to Saudi officials in Riyadh.

The development came as the Syrian-supported Druse and Moslem militias stepped up military and political pressure Thursday to oust Gemayel, who turned to Saudi Arabia to salvage his crumbling position.

Druse militiamen pushed the Lebanese army out of the Chouf Mountains and rolled down the coastal hills to link up with Shiite Moslem allies controlling west Beirut.

At their camps in the capital, U.S. Marines and Italian troops were packing their equipment and preparing to pull out.

A senior White House official said the Marines would begin withdrawing to U.S. Navy ships off the Lebanese coast in two or three days. The official, who spoke on condition he not be named, said the redeployment of about 1,200 Marines should be completed within 30 days from Friday.

Jackson to decide on Nicaraguan trip

KEENE, N.H. AP — The Rev. Jesse Jackson says he will make up his mind by tonight on whether to go to Nicaragua to help bring peace to Central America.

Campaigning in New Hampshire for the Democratic presidential nomination, Jackson said he is "inclined to go" if the Sandinista government allows him to see a wide range of religious leaders.

Jackson said his staff has been talking with Mexican officials and members of the Conta Dora group about meetings. The Conta Dora comprises four Central American countries seeking to end the fighting in that region.

'Spirit of '76' painting to be auctioned

LEE - An original "The Spirit of '76" painting commissioned for the nation's first centennial is among 228 American paintings being auctioned Feb. 25 in the Berkshires.

The "Spirit," of which there are seven originals, could sell as high as $250,000, predicted Louis Caropreso, owner of Caropreso Galleries in Lee, where the auction will be held.

"It makes your eyes water to see it. You saw it in history books as a child," Caropreso said.

The "Spirit," shows two drummers and a fifer marching across a Revolutionary War battleground as a fallen soldier cheers them and the American flag waves in the background.

Rockwell paintings may be moved

STOCKBRIDGE - The curator of a museum of Norman Rockwell's paintings said Thursday town sentiment may favor relocation of the museum to a farm, despite a selectman's decision to block the move.

John Beacco, chairman of the selectmen, informed the board of his decision against the move, museum director David Wood said.

The town's two other selectmen favored the move, but a unanimous approval was needed for a special permit necessary for the $3.3 million construction project. The selectmen's formal vote on the permit is scheduled for their meeting Tuesday.

Wood said the Town Meeting, which is open to all registered voters, can override the selectmen's anticipated vote. And he noted several people approached him on the street Thursday to voice their approval of moving the museum from the quaint Old Corner House in Stockbridge Center to Linwood Farm.

Connecticut River cleanup planned

NORTHAMPTON - The state will spend $1 million to buy land along the Connecticut River to protect a $1.5 billion cleanup of pollution in New England's largest river, government officials said Thursday.

"This will certainly be a model river management plan for Massachusetts, and hopefully, for the rest of the nation," said John Gutensohn, commissioner of the state Department of Environmental Management.

The money was part of a recently enacted state capital outlay budget.

His agency was joined in the announcement at a Northampton news conference by representatives of the National Park Service and the Connecticut River Watershed Council.

The three groups plan to work together to develop a "greenway" along the Connecticut, which passes through 19 Massachusetts cities and towns as it flows from the White Mountains in New Hampshire to the Long Island Sound in Connecticut.

Pike accident leaves one dead

BOSTON — A bus and two cars burst into flames after colliding at rush hour yesterday in a Massachusetts Turnpike tunnel under the Prudential Center, filling the tunnel with black smoke. Fire officials said one person was killed.

City Fire Commissioner Leo Stapleton said fire officials removed one victim of the fire, and two city emergency medical technicians were injured in the crash.

The accident snarled rush hour traffic out of the city just before 5 p.m.

Boston Police Sgt. Patricia Levitan said the accident was on the eastbound side of the turnpike under the Prudential tower carrying traffic into the city.

Carolyn Walden, a spokeswoman for Boston City Hospital, said the only two reported injuries were the Boston Deparment of Health and Hospital technicians who were being treated in the city hospital emergency room for smoke inhalation.

State Police Cpl. Robert Zepf said, "It appears one dead is a strong possibility." But he said he could not confirm because of problems communicating with officers at the scene.

He said the turnpike was closed in both directions for at least one hour after the 4:30 p.m. accident. The westbound was reopened.

Student group charged with forgetting role

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Some students are questioning the legitimacy of the Commuter Collective and its goals.

Founded in 1976, the Commuter Collective is a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) whose self-described purpose is providing "services, advocacy and programming for issues of interest to their off-campus constituency."

But many students doubt they are fulfilling that purpose, and after much debate, the Student Senate voted Wednesday night to approve the structuring of a new, temporary Commuter Collective Board comprised of non-elected members.

During discussion at Wednesday night's Senate meeting concerning approval of a new Commuter Collective Board, board member Becky Ziegler said, "The last elected board dissolved before we could do anything. Now, we're trying to create a new board so we can carry on our business."

Student Senator Bill Collins said "Not only is it possible that this new board will be made up entirely of appointed members, not popularly elected people, but there's no provision for the lifetime of this new, supposedly temporary board."

Collins said the board should receive no more financial support.

"In my opinion, this new board is merely being used to ensure the positions of those people already there. Also, when an RSO becomes non-operational, as the Collective has admitted they are without an elected board, their funds are supposed to be frozen," he said. "Last semester, when the Sylvan area government became non-operational, their account was frozen, but the Commuter Collective continues to spend their funds. This creates a double standard used by SGA leaders Chris Sullivan, Eric Nizsche and others whereby other area governments are subject to an account freeze, while their own representative area government is allowed to remain active."

SGA speaker Chris Sullivan said "We need this temporary, democratic body to resolve these issues. They are coming to the Student Senate in an attempt to solve past problems."

The Commuter Collective has an annual budget of $60,000. Every year all undergraduates must pay a $96 Student Activities Fee. $8.40 is allocated to the Commuter Collective from the fees of the 7,000 students who live off-campus.

A memorandum from Collective members Peter Brown and Ben Hilliard to Commuter Senators says "not since the spring of 1980 have there been more candidates than openings on the Commuter Assembly. Thus, since that time any student wishing to join the Assembly has been assured a seat. During that time no campaigning has taken place and voter turnout has been in the low hundreds."

"The first problem is that generally these students have little if any practical knowledge of the structure within which the Commuters operate," it continues. "A second problem in taking directly from the student body has been with commitment and reliability. In the past, board members have proven inconsistent in carrying out projects or attending meetings."

Dwindling co-ops need network

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Concerned with the dwindling number of coopertives and collective establishments, members of the University of Massachusetts Student Controlled Businesses (SCBS), along with the Economic Development Office (EDO), collaborated last night in an information sharing conference in effort to establish networking among owners.

Katja Hahn d'Errico, director of the UMass EDO said that the purpose of the event was to "start a type of networking among the people of the co-ops" and for a "chance for people who are part of the co-op operation to get to know each other".

d'Errico said the main principle behind the conference is "cooperation among cooperatives and collectives in order to survive. They (co-ops) are dwindling, there are fewer and fewer of us, so now we must find a way to make more of us," she said.

More than 50 people ranging from students on campus co-ops to co-ops in the Amherst area gathered together in the Campus Center to watch the British film, "The Mondragon Experiment" which is a documentary of how a small town in the Basque region of Spain became the largest co-op of 1,500 members in the western world through effective networking.

The film was followed by a dinner in Earth Foods and further discussion on the possiblities of following the Mondragon experiment.

d'Errico said the film serves as an educational tool to provide incentive to the area's co-ops. According to the film, not only are major industries co-ops that produce appliances ranging from washers to refridgerators, but also include research plants, factories, banks and a university. The goal of Mondragon, the film said is to "abolish the distinction between capitol and labor."

"When unemployed, the people in Mondragon go to school whereas in our society, we are ignored," a particpant said. "Some sort of integration has to take place."

Karen Zimbleman, director of training from the North American Students of Cooperation (NASCO) the conference could "be seen as an opportunity to stress that little businesses can work together, can do better together."

Zimbleman said that co-ops are suffering because of "hard economic times, internal faults, improperly trained management and lack of education in taking on ownership responsibilities".

"A balance needs to be reached between good business procedures and social goals," Zimbleman said. "Ownership that is community based to generate community based skills to work in groups and together, obtain power into our own hands" is a way to achieve the balance, she said.

Zimbleman said co-ops suffering most are the food co-ops.

"The food business is a tough industry (because) there is only a one percent net profit out of every dollar," she said.

d'Errico said that all students own a part of the University co-ops, which are student controlled businesses.

"We are an RSO (registered student organization) that brings in revenues for student activities, creates jobs, and serves as jobs, and are educational benefits serving themselves and others," she said.

Safety of rhythm method questioned

By DEBBIE NEUBAUER
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the last of a three part series on contraceptives.

The rhythm method or "fertility awareness" a form of birth control that uses no artificial devices, is one of the more controversial contraceptive methods practiced today.

According to Pam Gonyer, Coordinator of Contraceptive Education at the UMass Health Center, the rhythm method is an ineffective method for college age couples to use.

Gonyer stressed that in order for this method to be effective, a woman must have a predictable, regular menstrual cycle, and with her partner, carefully monitor and understand her body's rhythm.

Among college aged women, changes in diet, and emotional or stress levels effect the regularity of menstrual cycles which lowers the effectiveness of the "natural method," she said.

But according to Kathleen Barrett, coordinator of the Natural Family Program at the Catholic-run Holyoke-Providence Hospital, fertility awareness is effective "if learned well and used well."

Barrett said this method requires a relationship in which the male partner is willing to take an active role in understanding the woman's menstrual cycle and establishing and strictly adhering to the "safe" times to have intercourse during the cycle.

According to Barrett, sperm can live and travel in a woman's body up to 5 days. "You can make love to your partner on Saturday night, and get pregnant in Botany class on Wednesday afternoon," she said.

Gonyer said she does not advocate the method for college-age couples, but if carefully practiced and understood, it is better than no method at all.

According to statistics in the 1982-83 Contraceptive Technology Book, the rhythm method has a theoretical effectiveness rate of 80-98 percent, which means 2-20 women, out of 100, will theoretically get pregnant.

A study conducted by the Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York City in 1983, indicated the following: 10 million American women use the Pill, with a 2 percent failure rate; 4.5 million couples use the condom, with a 10 percent failure rate; 2.3 million women use the I.U.D. with a 4 percent failure rate; and 1.9 million women use the diaphragm with a 13 percent failure rate. 3 million women do not use any form of birth control with a 90 percent failure rate.

Scheduling book to keep advertising

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Advertisements will remain in the University of Massachusetts scheduling booklets.

A motion passed by the Faculty Senate yesterday says the Office of Student Affairs will continue to advertise in the scheduling booklet "provided only that University Publications Inc. agrees to group the advertisements in sections rather than scattering them throughout the course listings."

Advertisements appeared for the first time in the Spring '84 scheduling booklet generated concern and dismay from both faculty and students.

Senate Secretary Robert E. Jones said he received a number of written comments about the booklet and that "it was not appropriate for such a publication."

Rules Committee Chairman and Afro-American Studies professor Chester Davis said he and his collegues believe the presence of advertisements in the booklet "was cheap and chinzy looking."

Student Government association co-president Tom Ahearn said that many students "thought it wasn't a good idea."

Davis said in his group report that the major objection to the advertisements in the booklet was that it was "vulgar and cheapened the image of the university."

"This is not only a matter of taste but also of degree and comparison," he said. "Those ads broke up the continuity. Some professors just tore out the advertisements."

The Committee found that the scheduling booklet "is an ephemeral throw-away publication produced on cheap news print and the presence of advertising, is to some degree, less objectional there than it would be in a more dignified, and long document such as a catalog," the report said.

The trade-off for allowing advertisements in the scheduling booklets will enable the University to save a few $1,000 in production costs which is estimated to $8,600 per year, Davis said.

"It will also reduce the publication time," Davis said. "Because the University will not be actually taking care of it, University Publications Inc. will be."

"Like the yellow pages, we'll save a few pennies this way," Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson said.

The recently announced Student Government Association (SGA) presidential candidate team of Rick Patrick and Jim Keller said the key to sucessful UMass government is awareness, and stressed the need for active participation from students.

"There is a lot of potential power in 18,000 students," said Keller, and awareness "is important in bringing about change."

Keller said one of their goals is to bring students and the Student Government Association (SGA) closer, and provide more of an opportunity for student input into "administrative decisions which affect us."

"We must look towards the future and deal with present problems on campus," and not spend time "looking back on past SGA administrations."

Patrick and Keller said they intend to work on several reforms, including an academic grievence procedure.

Patrick said students cannot take proper recourse against grades and academic actions they feel are unfair.

"Other universities have standards which entitle students to due process in class," he said.

He will work towards creating a board here at UMass.

"Study space is also a problem," Patrick said.

In order to alleviate this problem they propose to pen the dining commons at night as study areas.

The short reading period before finals is a student concern "which as presidents we will address," said Keller.

According to Patrick, the university calendar has already been set for the next few semesters, and only one day has been allocated for students to prepare for finals week.

"We would like to work on getting a three day reading period," he said.

Patrick and Keller said student opinions are not given "ample consideration," where proffessor evalutation and tenure decisions are concerned.

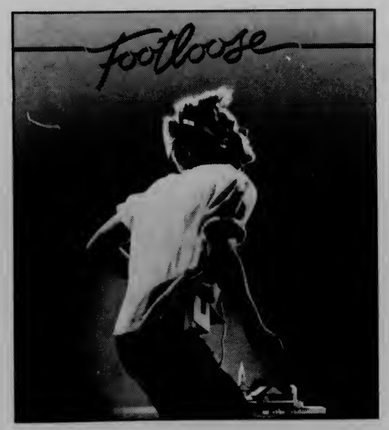
They said the credibility of the CATE guide, a teacher/course evaluation booklet, needs to be increased, and they plan to supplement it with an evaluation program through campus mail, in order to reach more students.

Fees is another important area where they say student awareness should be strongly applied.

"We need to assess the student backing and put pressure on the Board of Trustees to keep tuition and other fees down," said Keller.

He said although Governor Michael S. Dukakis said he will not increase state Rick Patrick is a junior economics major and commuter area senator who is actively involved in several committees. Jim Keller is also a junior economics major and a former member of the Board of Governors.

Stores will be open on Monday



Monday marks the national observance of George Washington's birthday. There will be no classes for University of Massachusetts students Monday because of Washington's Birthday, a national holiday, but most of the campus will still be functioning.

The dining commons, snack bars, Munchy stores and campus libraries will all stay open and keep their regular hours for the long weekend. Local bars and liquor stores will also be open Monday.

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union as well as the local banks and libraries will all be closed Monday in observance of the holiday.

Legislator asks UMass for assistance

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

A Berkshire County legislator was at the University of Massachusetts yesterday looking at ways the school could better serve his constituency.

Rep. Frank N. Costa, D-Adams, met with Harvey Stone, director of the Office of Extended Engineering Education to discuss services the office offers to Berkshire County.

"The possibilities that exist for the resources of this institution to assist in meeting the needs to upgrade education at all levels is vastly under-tapped," Costa said. "The resources here are, by and large, under-utilized."

"There are a lot of great things happening here," Costa said. "There is a vast array of agencies and satellite offices here but it is just a matter of creating an awareness of what's here."

Costa said the math and science programs will be targeted for retraining teachers at the secondary level where there is a critical shortage statewide.

Costa was to have met with Mario Fantini, dean of the School of Education, and other faculty, but said the meetings were cancelled because of late meetings at the Statehouse.

Costa said he is working with the Joint Committee on Education to establish statewide performance standards for academic achievement. He said Massachusetts lacks a uniform standard of measuring levels of achievement and the committee hopes to put a basic standard of performance in effect.

Costa is a member of the state House Committee on Taxation and the Committee of Federal Financial Assistance. He said proposals for higher cigarette and gasoline taxes to fund scholarships for higher education to help offset federal cuts originated in the Committee on taxation.

Costa said he hopes to return to UMass next month.

BOG lacks nominations

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors (BOG) has received no nominations for next semester's officers or coordinators.

"We are in a very desperate situation. If we won't start getting some nomination papers, there might not be a BOG next semester," said Allison Hughes, BOG vice-chair, at last night's meeting.

Nomination papers for BOG positions are due Feb. 22. "We had no idea that the papers were due so soon. I think the entire office was a victim of some misinformation," said BOG Coordinator Brad Jacobs.

Originally, the members thought that the nomination papers weren't due for another three weeks, Jacobs said.

"Our whole problem lies in the students' apathy. It's simply ridiculous that the students of this university don't care about the Campus Center when they pay for it," he said.

Less than 10 positions are being applied for within the BOG while 32 positions haven't yet been approached.

Besides Ron Homs, nine other BOG coordinator positions will be opened up due to graduating seniors and members who have decided not to run for board positions next semester.

Hughes said that a plan will be unleashed tomorrow in which present board members will begin speaking throughout the various areas on campus to discuss with the students the importance of having a strong BOG.

"Practically all of us are either graduating or stepping down," Hughes said. "I'd like to get a few more women on the board next semester. After all, there are only a few of us as it is."

BOG treasurer Jerry Quill said that the board is facing an almost "panic situation. The students must realize that if they don't grab a hold of the BOG, there may not be one. And without a BOG, the students wouldn't be protected from excessive cost raises, a decrease in study space, and possibly less action directed towards student activities in the Campus Center."

The BOG said that they plan on setting up a table on the concourse today in hopes that students will sigh to run for BOG positions. If anyone who is interested in running for a BOG position, they are asked to contact the table or the office.

Residential voice needed, says SWAG

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

The Southwest Area Government (SWAG) is going to work against the Student Government Association (SGA) in ratifying the proposed SGA Constitution, according to SWAG co-presidents Michael Bean and David McCarthy.

In an effort to gain a residential voice in university policies, Bean and McCarthy will introduce a resolution to the SWAG assembly next week urging representatives not to give their final aproval to the SGA Constitution.

The reason, according to McCarthy, is that the committee formed to meet with the administration has been filled with representatives outside of the residence areas. It is a move that would form a lopsided viewpoint in student voice.

"The most elite thing you can do is exempt residential population," said McCarthy after last night's SWAG assembly meeting.

In addition, McCarthy said that he expects at least four of the other residential areas will pass a similar resolution calling for the change or will not give their own approval.

Bean referred to the proposal as a "bit drastic" but believed the residential areas must have representation when the university officials meet with SGA officers.

"The ramifications could be overwhelming, but necessary," said Bean.

"We love the Constitution as a document, but we can't see this meeting going off without some kind of residential voice," McCarthy added.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Aid needed for Central America

In recent years Central America has become one of the focuses of U.S. foreign policy and consequently, our involvement there has been hotly debated. Arguments on all sides tend to be immersed in idealogy. Specters of Viet Nam, the "domino theory", Nicaragua under both Somoza and the Sandanistas, all contribute complexity to the issue. Many of those on the political right see Central America in purely an East-West context, not recognizing the significant social and political aspects.

Stephen C. Erickson

Many of those on the political left see U.S. involvement anywhere as another Viet Nam and fail to recognize that in the case of Soviet-Cuban backed revolutions, one tyrant is merely replaced by another. So in terms of political thought regarding Central America, what is needed is a clearing of the idealogical fog that clouds the region as well as many liberal and conservative minds. Contrary to recent conjecture, the Kissinger Commission report on Central America does just that, embracing the realities of the situation in the spirit of compromise.

The Commission was a bipartisan study group appointed by the President. The composition of the group was truly diverse, encompassing conservative Congressman Jack Kemp, outspoken liberal Congressman on Central America Michael Barnes, A.F.L.-C.I.O. President Lane Kirkland, and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, to name but a few. Unlike the President's commission on Social Security which waffled, sidestepped, and generally put off dealing with its problem, the Kissinger Commission took the Central American dilemma head on. The truly amazing thing was that such a politically and philosphically diverse group could come up with such a definitive and comprehensive solution. With the exception of a couple of members who dissented on further funding for Contra forces fighting the Sandanistas, the Commission was unanimous in its endorsement of a plan to aid Central America.

The findings and proposed solutions are not rubber stamps of Administration policy. To the contrary, President Reagan had, just prior to the release of the Commission report, vetoed a bill linking U.S. military to human rights violations. The Commission specifically states that military aid must be tied to progress in the area of human rights progress. Thus, the Commission realized that the conflict in Central America is not only an East-West one, but a struggle for the hearts and minds of the people living in the region. This is also why the Commission slanted a large expenditure on educational aid, education being an imperitive for democracy and peaceful social change. In addition, the package calls for more Peace Corp workers and substantially increased economic aid.

All of the Social-Economic assistance in the world, however, will not help a people obtain their freedom if a Leninist-Marxist government such as the one in Nicaragua, is allowed to assume control. This is why the Commission has wisely advised for the continuation of military assistance to El Salvador and elsewhere, pending certain conditions. Unfortunately, negotiated settlements with rebel groups are not practical. There may be individuals within a Soviet-Cuban supported revolution who favor democracy, but those who lead these revolutions tend to be doctrinare Leninists. There can be no power sharing, as rebel forces in El Salvador demand, with elements that don't believe in democracy or personal liberty.

Clearly, the Kissinger Commission package is one that must be taken in its entirety. Insurgencies must be beaten down with the support of the populace and with adequate military measures. The President and Congress would do well to heed the Commission's advice. Such strong, decisive, and comprehensive action is neccessary for the freedom and prosperity of the people of Central America as well as the security of the United States.

Stephen C. Erickson is a UMass student.

Explanation for editor's suspension

A week ago today, a nationally syndicated cartoon was printed on the Editorial/Opionion page of the Collegian. Many readers, especially members of the Third World community, were offended by the content of the cartoon. Two days ago, Yadira Betances, the editor of the Black Affairs page of the Collegian, wrote an editorial criticizing the newspaper for printing what the Third World community felt was a blatantly racist cartoon. Yadira was subsequently suspended from her position by me. However, I have rescinded that suspension.

Joel Myerson

The editorial cartoon generated a somewhat unexpected response. In making the decision to print the cartoon, the Editorial page editor felt that it portrayed a desperate situation which still exists in parts of Africa, through no fault of the people living there. By printing the cartoon, the editor felt he was making the community more aware of this situation. His intent was not to offend any members of the community.

Unfortunately, many people were offended. The content of the cartoon could understandably be interpreted as racist, although that was not the Collegian's intention. The Editorial/Opinion page serves as a forum for the free expression of ideas, and tries to be a catalyst for the discussion of important issues. The cartoon in question tried to do this by using "shock value;" some believed it went too far.

Yadira Betances was obviously deeply offended by this cartoon. Considering the situation, I can appreciate her need to respond to the cartoon as quickly as possible. She acted as one who has suffered the pain and indignation of racism.

I suspended her because of her method of responding, not because she doesn't have a right to express her opinion. The Collegian policies are very clear, and are necessary to maintain the high standards the paper has set for itself. No staff member should publically criticize the paper before bringing the issue to the Board of Editors. An issue which cannot be resolved by the Board can then be discussed on the Editorial/Opinion page. A suspension questions whether or not a violation has occurred. In my opinion, there was a question at the time. In light of the events leading to that suspension, I cannot justify making it permanent.

Suspension seen as unfair

To the Editor,

I find the recent suspension of the Black Affairs department editor Yadira Betances due to her editorial quite interesting and very upsetting. When constructive criticism such as Betances' article is interpreted as being injurious to the paper, and when the Editor in Chief then says that "she should have drafted a letter for our editorial page", one begins to wonder. This suspension seems to be an irresponsible knee jerk retaliation by some adolescent who can't take criticism.

The attempt at justifying this suspension based on injurious effect and then also because of the printing in Black Affairs instead of in the editorial page is completely wrong. I urge the staff not to uphold this suspension.

Conrad Nuthmann
Belchertown

Editor's note: The integrity of a newspaper depends on the legitimacy of its constitution. The suspension was invoked solely on the interpretation of the Editor in Chief.

Basketball player is a "star"

To the Editor,

On Thursday, Feb. 16, the Collegian carried a story about the basketball game to be played that night between UMass and St. Joseph's University.

Collegian staff member Dan Leberfeld wrote a story which referred to SJU center Tony Costner as "inconsistent." The article suggested that Costner, a probable first round NBA draft selection, did not always "come to play."

For the record:

Tony Costner was a first team All-Atlantic 10 selection in 1983.

He averages 19 points per game.

Will be the highest scorer in SJU history.

Has scored double figures in 20 out of 21 games this season.

Has started 112 consecutive games for SJU.

Hits 54 percent of his shots.

Hits 78 percent of his foul shots.

He is the second leading scorer and rebounder in the competitive Atlantic 10.

Hardly the credentials of an "inconsistent" player, nor the credentials of a player who does not "come to play."

The gratitious assertions made by Dan Leberfeld have no basis in fact and reflect badly on the quality of the Collegian accuracy.

Jim Boyle
SJU Basketball coach

Rape is no laughing matter

To the Editor,

We would like to express our disgust and outrage at the cartoon "The Strip" by Bert Saveriano and Jim Walsh in February 15th's Collegian. Do these men realize that their cartoon of "rapin' Rodney" actively promotes and legitimizes violence against women?

We wish to bring this to the attention of the UMass community that concerned students on this campus do not find rape jokes and innuendos funny. Given the number of rapes nationally and on this campus, their cartoon serves to perpetuate the idea that rape is a humorous and tolerable aspect of campus life. For the many women who have been the victims of rape, this cartoon is a poignant and painful reminder of a violent and degrading event in their lives. Please refrain from further media violence and exploitation of women.

Vincent Hardin traces DuBois' writing in connection with the future of America at Mahar Auditorium last night.

Harding discusses DuBois

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Correspondent

Students and distinguished guests of the five college area gathered last night at Mahar Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts to listen to author and historian Vincent Harding.

Harding spoke as part of the W.E.B. DuBois lecture series sponsored by Chancellor Joseph Duffey and the Department of the Afro-American Studies of the University of Massachusetts, Five College, Inc., and Five College Black Studies, Inc.

Harding, author of There is a River and The Other American Revolution, is the chairman of the Institute of the Black World and professor of religion and social change at the Lliff School of Theology in Denver, Colorado.

"I want to share with you," he said, "not a lecture, but perhaps a set of reflections on the significance of DuBois' vision for the future of America."

Harding quoted several passages from W.E.B. DuBois' autobiography to show how DuBois influenced the future of America.

"We are," he said quoting DuBois, "like this passenger on the bus; fighting for decades and decades just giving all of his time and energy, knowledge, skill, and talent, just to prove that he has the right to have a seat on the bus. Fighting," he continues, "against all odds and it is in this day in time that we sit down and finally catch our breath and ask ourselves where is this bus going."

Most of us refuse to see where the bus is headed, he said. "All we want is a seat on the bus."

Harding talked about human integrity, about taking risk.

"I cry sometimes about the generation of young people who are mental conservative," Harding said, "afraid of taking a difficult course because it might get in the way of their grade point average."

Afraid of becoming human beings."

"The vision of DuBois for a new America, is it dead or is it alive?" Harding asked.

"The vision of black people and all of their allies rebuilding American society, is it dead or is it alive? It's in our hands," he said.

UMass Night held at Springfield

By MARILYN G. BOU
Collegian Correspondent

SPRINGFIELD - Representatives from the University of Massachusetts Third World community participated in an all Third World "UMass Night," a panel discussion geared to answer questions and concern prospective University students and their parents might have relative to their future college life.

The panel, aired on WTCC in Springfield, was held at the W.W. Johns Life Center, Inc. with a turn out of about 100 people.

Speaking in the panel were Arthur Jackson, Director of Financial Aid, Dr. Benjamin Rodriguez, Director of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, Dr. Juan Caban, Associate Director of Admissions, Reynold Winslow, Director of the Minority Engineering Program, John Lopes, Academic Advisor for the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and other Minorities, Dr. Tim Cabanas, Director of the English as a Second Language department. There were also other representatives from the Amherst Third World community in the audience like Dr. Clarles Broody, Director of Upwward Bound, an organization which helps prepare high school students for the academics and social adjustment of college life.

The Johns center is a mental health center focusing on the minority community in Springfield. Janet Simmons, the center's director said the center's purpose was "to assist community members with preventive services in coping with the stresses of every day life." She said the staff is a multi-ethnic, bilingual to service the entire community.

"These meetings are an attempt to fulfill vice chancellor Dennis Mudson's commitment to extend the University's resources to Western Massachusetts," Jones said.

"(My) role in the panel was to inform new students of the academic and social expectations that they might not be aware of through regular channels," Lopes said.

"We wanted to impress upon them that the college experience does not solely consist of four years of straight academic progress," he said, "but should also include development of social interaction skills, career development skills, and anything and everything that leads to the final product, which is a degree well rounded, mature individual."

In the words of various panelists, students and parents, the panel was "welcomed," "well received," and the evening was a "success."

Reagan's budget penalizes blacks

In the last weeks of January Ronald Reagan dominated our newspapers and airwaves. In the course of two short weeks, the President delivered his State of the Union address, announced his candidacy for reelection as President, and unveiled his priorities for America in a proposed budget for the year beginning October 1st.

While each of the events - his distorted but inspirational State of the Union address, his announcement of readiness to run for a second term in office, and his budget proposal - was significant, it is his proposed budget which offers us the best insights into what another term of Reaganism will mean for black Americans and all working people.

The Fiscal Year 1985 budget which the President has proposed seeks to make further cuts in social spending. The proposal seeks additional reductions in programs which have assisted workers, the elderly, the poor, and students.

There are provisions for reduced spending on employment and training programs, and for a maintenance of the currently inadequate funding for occupational safety and health programs. Poor people would suffer from an erosion in Medicaid coverage under a plan which would introduce "cost-sharing" for those who can least afford to pay for medical care.

In the area of education, while the budget calls for a slight increase in overall federal spending, it will result in requiring low income students to pay a larger share of their educational expenses than they have in the past. There is also a proposal for further cutbacks in community service programs and special assistance for the children and the elderly.

Despite these cutbacks which have eroded programs of great benefit to blacks and working and poor people, the budget still projects a huge federal deficit of some $180 billion dollars. The net effect of such a budget deficit will be to drive interest rates even higher, and thus threaten economic recovery.

Coming on top of the already significant reductions in federal spending in the Reagan Administration's first three years, the President's election year budget amounts to nothing short of a further attack on the interests of blacks and all working people.

The budget makes no attempt to deal with the sad reality of unconscionably high unemployment rates. It contains no necessary initiative to attack the growth in poverty which has been the sorry by-product of Reaganomics.

The Reagan Administration's budget is not as radical in its proposed reductions as were its predecessors. But that is a concession to the political necessities of the election year.

Despite being tailored to fit the requirement of an election year, the Reagan budget is a renewed attack against the poor, the elderly, and the jobless. One can only hope that in this election the intended victims of the Reagan Administration's onslaught will work diligently toward his defeat and prevent his disastrous initiative from further sundering the social fabric of our nation.

Ahora adresses long-term plans

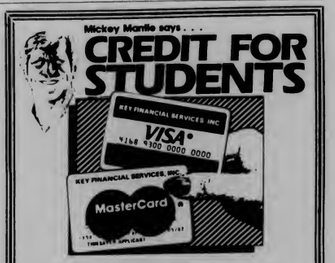
By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Plans for the celebration of Latin American Week in early April and long term goals for the organization were the issues discussed in the Ahora meeting last night in the Campus Center Complex at the University of Massachusetts.

Linda Velazques, who oversees the organization, spoke to a small audience of Hispanic students on the historical development of the organization as well and its necessity for survival.

Velazques said she is not president of Ahora, but someone who "understands it should not die," said students should volunteer and "sincerely support the organization in any way."

Like many other Third World organizations on campus, Ahora is short of student involvement. Presently, Velazques said, there are only five active members who work for the organization.



"It's not possible for five to run the organization," she said, "the myth of superman and superwoman are only figures of the imagination of those who created it."

Latin American Week celebration will consist of only a week-end after it intervened with the Martin Luther King Week and the International Student Association Week.

Ahora was developed in 1974 when a concerned group of staff and community members wanted to increase the Hispanic student population at the University. Ahora subsequently founded the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

Trailers

By most accounts the video game fad is dying out, but no one seems to have told Donald Bluth, who's sinking millions into developing new ones. Bluth, the former Disney animator who wrote and directed the excellent 1982 feature The Secret of NIMH, has been working like a lunatic creating video games that look and feel like cartoons. His "Dragon's Lair" game had some mild success last semester by the curious and indiscriminate videot, but it's spot by the Hatch has been largely ignored this semester. Within the month, his "Space Ace" is scheduled for release. The new game features the title character, out joyriding with his girlfriend Kimberly "when suddenly evil Borf attacks him with the dread Infanto ray. The ray changes Ace into small, puny Dexter, a young boy. Borf then kidnaps Kimberly. Borf's plan is to take over the Earth by changing everyone into babies." Unbelievable. Interestingly, the press release for the game denies it contains the sexism "Dragon's Lair" was accused of. This time around, Kimberly is "more representative of the assertive woman of the 80's." (I.E. She barks at Dexter to "Get me out of here." But is still unable to save herself.)

Perhaps the two busiest writers in Hollywood today are Stephen King and John Sayles. King, who had amazing success last year with Creepshow, Cujo, and The Dead Zone, will this year give us Children of the Corn, filmed and ready for distribution: Creepshow II, being prepared by George Romero; and his on again/off again movie version of Firestarter, to star (check this out) George C. Scott, Martin Sheen, David Keith, Drew Barrymore and Heather Locklear. King's recent bestseller, The Pet Sematary, will not be made into a film, as per the author's desire. Sayles, meanwhile, has completed The Brother from Outer Space, about a black martian who comes to Earth and must deal with racism; Blood of the Lamb, about two bored ex-60's radicals who infiltrate a fundamentalist cult; and adaptations of two Jean M. Auel novels: The Clan of the Cave Bear and Valley of the Horses.

The John Landis/Twilight Zone case is still being deliberated on, but many sources feel that Mr. Landis is up shit creek. I'd like to take the opportunity to defend my jokes about the incident, which have apparently been bumming some people out. I do consider the situation somewhat morbidly humorous, but of course understand the importance of filmmaking safety. The accident which two summers ago took the lives of actor Vic Morrow and two Korean children, was shameful and avoidable; but whose fault was it? I don't think it was Landis', which is why I feel comfortable ragging on the man. Landis, though a former stuntman, is not a special effects expert, and should not be tried as if he was one. Recent testimony has indicated that it was extreme heat, causing part of the helicopter to melt, and not an explosion, which caused the accident. How could Landis be held responsible for that? I can't see him being sent to jail, but a big fine and possible MPAA penalty are probably in the cards. In any case, I doubt he'll be selected to direct Blue Thunder II.

Mel Gibson has a slew of new pictures in the works. A remake of Mutiny on the Bounty has been done for some time now and Mrs. Soffel, a love story with Diane Keaton, started filming this past Tuesday. He's also set to star in The River, with Sissy Spacek and Scott Glenn. Gibson beat Harrison Ford for the part, and in it plays a midwestern farmer. He uses an American accent for the role.

Random drivel: Martha Coolidge (Valley Girl) has replaced Penny Marshall as director of National Lampoon's Joy of Sex, which resembles the book only in title. Colleen Camp and Christopher Lloyd star...Lloyd also turns up in Buckaroo Banzai, an adventure film with Peter Weller in the title role. John Lithgow and Jeff Goldblum also star...John Lithgow also turns up in 2010, the future adventures of HAL and his space buddies. Keir Dullea reprises his role, as does Douglas Rain, the voice of HAL. Bob Balaban and Roy Scheider also star...Here's one to miss: The Zany Adventures of Robin Hood, starring George Segal and Morgan Fairchild. Always beware of films calling themselves zany...George Segal also turns up in Stick, the newest Burt Reynolds debacle. Candice Bergen and Jose Perez also star...Jose Perez currently stars with Gary Busey in DC Cab...Gary Busey also turns up as Paul "Bear" Bryant in the upcoming Bear, portraying that wacky Alabama football coach...Danny DeVito turns up as a crooked D.A. in Amy Heckerling's comedy Johnny Dangerously, starring Michael Keaton and Joe Piscopo. He also will appear in Romancing the Stone, a love story featuring Kathleen Turner and Michael Douglas.

Local Best Bets: Hitchcock fans are hooked up. The Amherst Cinema has a double bill of Rear Window and The Lady Vanishes and the Academy of Music in Northampton has Vertigo. The Calvin still has The Big Chill and The Hampshire 4 still has Silkwood. Mountain Farms has Reckless (If you've seen Rebel Without a Cause, Valley Girl, Liar's Moon, Four Friends, An Officer and a Gentleman, Breaking Away and All the Right Moves then you've seen every scene in this film). Opening at the malls today are Broadway Danny Rose, The Right Stuff, Tom Selleck as Lasseter (Thanks but no thanks), and Footloose (That song is getting real obnoxious, real fast.)

Ace and Kimberly gaze off into the distance and fight together to save Planet Earth in this scene from "Space Ace."

Quit grinning, John. You're Outta here.

TRAILERS Trivia: Response to last week's question was overwhelmingly incorrect. Everyone guessed that Judd Hirsch's first film was Ordinary People. It was Serpico. This week's question: In what film did a character say, "I believe there is justice in our hearts."? The first correct answer will receive an 8x10 glossy photograph of an RCA laser disc. Good luck

This just in: The nominations for the 1984 Academy Awards have been announced and they're a surprise, to say the least. Only a week ago I made some preliminary nomination predictions so I'm pretty surprised myself.

The Best Actor category is perhaps the most shocking. Nomination for Robert DeNiro? Nope. Eric Roberts? Al Pacino? Nope, nope. Tom Conti got a nomination for crying out loud. In fact, four out of the five nominees are English. Bloody Limeys. Conti is up for his role in Reuben, Reuben, Michael Caine for Educating Rita, Tom Courtenay and Albert Finney for The Dresser and Rober Duvall for Tender Mercies. Poor line-up. Duvall should get it but Courtenay could be a safe bet as well.

Best Actress doesn't hold many surprises. Meryl Streep's portrayal of Karen Silkwood was amazing, and most deserves the award.

Other nominees are Debra Winger and Shirley MacLaine for Terms of Endearment, Jane Alexander for Testiment and Julie Walters for Educating Rita. Streep better get it.

The Best Supporting Actor category is another travesty. No bid for Burt Lancaster, William Hurt, Jeff Goldblum, Kevin Kline, Dan Aykroyd or Eddie Murphy. Jack Nicholson is a shoe-in for Terms of Endearment but it could possibly face competition from The Right Stuff's Sam Sheperd. Other nominees are Rip Torn for Cross Creek, John Lithgow for Terms (he deserved it last year for The World According to Garp, not this year though), and Charles Durning for To Be or Not To Be (What, is there some Academy rule that Charles Durning has to be nominated every year no matter what crap he's been in?).

The Best Supporting Actress category is another tough one to pick. The nominees are Amy Irving for Yentyl, Glenn Close for The Big Chill, Cher for Silkwood, Alfred Woodard for Cross Creek and Linda Hunt for The Year of Living Dangerously. Cher and Linda Hunt were fantastic in their roles. It could go either way.

Best Picture was just as I had predicted, with one exception: The Dresser instead of Fanny and Alexander. Other nominees are The Right Stuff, Tender Mercies, The Big Chill, and Terms of Endearment. Please Lord, give it to Big Chill. If Terms wins it I'll bum. Sappy little dinkwad of a film.

Best Director holds some surprises as well. Mike Nichols got a bid for Silkwood though the film itself wasn't nominated. Ingmar Bergman as well, for Fanny and Alexander, his most recent "last film." Other nominees are Peter Yates for The Dresser, Bruce Beresford for Tender Mercies and James "The Sitcom King" Brooks for Terms of Endearment.

The award ceremony will be televised nationally on April 9.

Gymnasts host MIT tomorrow

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

With some changes in the lineup and some surprises in the routines, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will host the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the last home meet of the season, Saturday at 7:00 p.m.

UMass should have no problem defeating MIT according to coach Roy Johnson, and will be rearranging the lineup while adding in spectacular moves and tricks.

"I don't think MIT will be a big threat, but it will be the last chance to see the seniors perform," Johnson said.

Junior Ken Dougherty, seniors Bert Mathieson and tri-captains Jim Corbett and Willie Stevens will all be competing in the all around on Saturday. For Corbett it will be the first time in his college career that he will compete in the all around.

"We're going to see how high he can score with that additional pommel horse score," said Johnson of Corbett, who usually competes in five events. "We're going to try to score 50 on all around."

Added to Corbett's high bar routine will be eagles (giant swings with arms rotated laterally 360 degrees). It will be the first time he will perform them in competition.

Stevens will be adding some more excitement to his routines including an "incredibly hard" perfomance on the parallel bars event. Stevens, who has been scoring high eights in the event, will be increasing the difficulty in his routine by adding a front handstand to an immediate Healy Twirl (full twist spin from a handstand).

In the vaulting event Stevens will be switching to a more difficult vault. After scoring a 9.35 in the past two meets with a fron handspring front somersault vault, he will perform a Tnsinca front somersault (cartwheel front somersault out) which is worth 9.6. He is also working on a Kasamatsu (Tnsinca front half) which is worth a 9.8.

Minutewomen falter, lose to St. Joseph's

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

The scouting report meeting had ended and the next thing in mind were the Bonnies of St. Bonaventure, who checked into the Cage a week ago, Thursday night. Alone in the Massachusetts locker room was Carl Smith, the Minuteman starting point guard and the freshman who just happens to be ranked among the top ten in assists in the nation.

Consider the fact that the 5'11 Smith has also won two games and tied another with buzzer-beating-buckets and you start to get a more complete picture. Listen to Head Coach Ron Gerlufsen describe him as "our leader", starting forward Horace Neysmith call him "team-oriented", and co-captain Edwin Green talk about him as a player who's "personality wraps itself around the rest of the team", and everything becomes clear. The rookie has made the impact.

Carl Smith...assist leader

Smith himself, has trouble finding something of a self-description. After thinking for awhile he says quietly, "I'd like to think of myself as a leader and I am to a certain degree, but I'm just like the field general who gets orders from the sidelines and relays them along." He seems to be more comfortable with the word conscientious or aware, in that he says "I've got to pick up the little things from both my teammates and opponents out there." Finally, he looks down, grins and says, "That's a very tough question."

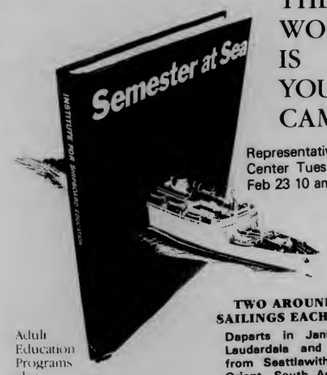
The last comment says a lot about the Kings Mountain, North Carolina native. Smith is a modest athlete who insists on playing down his pressure hoops and average of 7.2 assists per game.

On the shooting, he wants the responsibility in the tight situation. "Sure, I want the ball," he responds. "But there really is no pressure because I know our front line will come away with the rebound if I miss."

"Actually," he begins again, "I'd rather pass than shoot. On those plays I wanted to dump it off, but if the opportunity isn't there, I'll take the shot. But like I said, there's no pressure because I know we're going to score anyway."

The pass has indeed become the important facet of Smith's game. He says he'd like to lead it all in assists and again credits his teammates for his success. "It's not a matter of my pass, it's the shot that makes it. The more my teammates hit shots the more assists I get. If the shot doesn't go in, there's no assist, no matter how pretty the pass was."

Smith attributes his inspiration for assists from watching the likes of Magic Johnson and Isiah Thomas. "I was once locked in on the thought of scoring was the most important thing," he reflects. "But watching Magic out there and the excitement created when he throws a great pass, I saw it was different."



Perish the thought that the switch of ideals was out of necessity for Smith. He once tossed in 29 points in a high school game by connecting on every shot he threw up, 13-13 from the floor and 3-3 from the line. "You don't forget a game like that," he smiles.

And there are others that Smith is grateful to. Ken Napier, his junior high coach who, "first taught me the finer points of ball-handling," Horace Neysmith who "has been a major help besides the coaches," and a childhood friend Paul Ingram, who Smith says has an awful lot to do with his mental make-up. "Paul is there to bring me back to reality when I have a good game, and there to bring me back to the top when I have a bad game."

The transition from his hometown high school to Division One basketball has not all been easy. In fact, he says "it's been very rough," emiting an exasperated sigh. "In high school you usually had three basketball players and two good athletes starting, and good athletes making up the rest of the team. In college, everyone is great and everyone can beat you. Sometimes I have a letdown because every opponent that I play opposite is so talented." He adds, "It's something I have to work on."

Tough or not, the opposition is having quite its own share of trouble with Carl Smith. "He wants to be challenged," says Gerlufsen. "He says he wants to do this and do that," chips in Green. "And it makes everyone else say 'why can't I do that too?"

As the interview ends, Smith looks up grinning and showing the loose, comic side others around him know well, and says "And I'd like 100 dollars for this interview." Then he closes his locker saying, "Tell everyone down at the Collegian that we're going on a winning streak." This time he's not kidding.

At .500 after a 93-89 win over Hawks

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Welcome back University of Massachusetts basketball.

After five years of frustration the Minuteman grabbed a big portion of the limelight back with a convincing 93-89 win over powerful St. Joseph's annoying mascot and all, before a fanatical 4,200 at The Cage.

"I don't know about everybody else on the team but for me it's the biggest win of the year, the biggest win of my career," said an excited coach Ron Gerlufsen whose team has now reached the magical .500 mark with an 11-11 record.

John Hempel poured in a season-high 29 to go along with 21 each from Donald Russell and Horace Neysmith as the Minutemen climbed into fourth place in the Atlantic 10 with a 6-7 record and have now won four straight.

It wasn't easy. St. Joe's, now 17-5 and 10-3 in the league, had a combined foot and two inch height advantage when the starters met at halfcourt to open the contest. Enter Hempel and his lofting jumpers.

The sophomore forward was flying in the first half, shooting 8 of 11 from the field with 16 points, all from the 15-20 foot range. Neysmith added 14 as he challenged Hawk center Tony Costner, all 6-10 250 pounds of him, to a duel under the boards.

The Hawks ran off a streak of nine to take a 30-23 lead with 5:09 left in the period. Guard Maurice Martin (who had 29 of his own) scored 15 to spark the visitors surge.

UMass came back with a tidal wave. Green uncorked a two handed slam over Costner with 1:10 left before Neysmith slammed home another after nailing a pair of free throws. With a second left, Horace threw in a layup to complete a amazing eight point UMass run that gave them a 40-35 halftime lead, a lead they would never relinquish much to the vocal crowd's delight.

UMass built the lead to as much as 13, 84-71 on a Carl Smith free throw before the Hawks managed to cut the lead to six, 89-83, with a minute left. UMass shot an impressive 27 of 33 from the line in the half, foiling the Hawks plans to step closer to a NCAA berth. Smith and Russell each hit big free throws down the stretch to close the door on Costner and Co.

In the dunk department Hempel, Russell, Green and Neysmith all had well-judged slams, given 9.9's and 10,s from the crowd with Smith earning a perfect score for his confident ballhandling against the press.

"Hell ya, this is the biggest game of my career," said Bobby Braun, who played a major role in casing Costner (20 points) to foul out with 5:42 left in the game. The bulky forward hauled down nine rebounds, four off the offensive glass, while scoring eight points. "Carl (Smith) was sick out there, we all were. I played him (Costner) in high school, I'm not saying I know his moves but..."

"...Sure he does," interupted Neysmith. "It feels good to get this one, biggest one yet. We caught them open a few times, nailed some slams, got some layups, it was real sweet."

For the game UMass shot 50 percent from the floor, St. Joe's 55.6. The Minutemen were 77 percent from the line at 35 of 45. Russell was 11 of 13 with Neysmith 9 of 11.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: In the NCAA rankings released this week Neysmith is fourth in field goal percentage at 64.2 percent, Green is 24th in free throw percentage at 85.1 percent and Smith is eigth in assists with 154, he had 11 last night. UMass had 14 points off the break, the Hawks but four. The Minutemen also took advantage of 15 St. Joe's turnovers to score 25 points. Hempel was an incredible 13 of 17 from the field. Sign's in the crowd: "Nuke St, Joe's" and "Double OT Revenge" (UMass lost the last two meetings in double OT to the Hawks). "I have one thing to say, we have to get a new mascot," said Green. "Or at least get him a gun." Bobby Braun called the crowd, "our sixth, seventh, and eigth man out there."

Crucial meet for women's gymnastics...

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

Roller coaster rides are usually fun.

The University of Massachusetts womens basketball team continued their upward swing of the ride last night in the Cage, which started Tuesday night at Chestnut Hill. In the second 20 minutes of last night's contest against the Hawks of St. Josephs, UMass started roaring downhill and never found their brakes.

The result of their ride was a 54-44 defeat in a game which should have belonged to UMass.

UMass surged to a 12-4 lead in the first half, and looked destined for victory number 10. Led by Barbara Hebel's 10 points (18 total) and Karen Damminger (6 points), UMass looked tough. Late in the half, St. Joe's fought back with some tough rebounding and managed to tie the score at 26 as the buzzer sounded ending the first half of play.

At the start of the second half, the patrons were not even in their seats when Karen Damminger hit the floor injured. The diagnosis was not known, but Damminger missed the rest of the game.

Another factor was 6'0 Trish Brown. Brown had a very impressive evening pouring in 18 points. Coupled with her team high 18 points, Brown also added 4 steals, 1 block, 8 rebounds and was perfect from the charity stripe.

"She (Brown) can shoot, you can't take that away from her. We had our hands in her face all night but she still hit," confessed UMass guard Wendy Ward.

Brown was not the only factor in this defeat, UMass can share in much of the blame. The Minutewomen shot a dismal 24 percent from the field in the second stanza and were outrebounded by the taller Eagles 37-28 for the game.

The team just could not find the range, save for one player. Barbara Hebel sank a game high 18 points, keeping her the number one scorer for the team. Rebecca Kucks also played another fine game especially on defense where she collected 3 steals.

The Hawks are currently 1-4 in conference play as UMass evens their conference record at 2-2. The Minutewomen are playing at a 9-13 clip for the season.

Massachusetts hosts New Hampshire in Boyden

When the second-ranked team in the East is playing the sixth ranked-team in the East, it is a big meet. When the sixth-ranked team is coming off their best match of the year and is hosting the meet, it is time for an upset.

And upset is what is on the mind of the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team as it hosts the University of New Hampshire tomorrow at 1:00 p.m.

New Hampshire is a powerhouse. With a program built on two scholarships per year (two more than the Minutewomen get), the Wildcats are strong year in and year out and this season are number two in the East behind Ohio State. UNH already defeated the Minutewomen earlier in the season at the UMass Invitational.

"New Hampshire is an awesome team. Without their top all-around (Laura Cavanaugh, who hurt her knee), they have been scoring between 174-177 points. The thing they have is a lot of depth," observed UMass Coach Ken Anderson.

UMass is by no means conceding the match, though. Last Saturday the Minutewomen(7-5) scored a season-high 170.25 points enroute to defeating Springfield College and they will compete tomorrow with virtually the same line-up, except it is a week better. Also, Sue Allen, who missed last week's meet with a fractured finger, will be competing in the balance beam event.

"We are capable of a 175. The team has been working real hard and I am looking for a good qualifying score for the East Regionals. We are back home in our gym and we are looking for an upset. The girls are really psyched," said Anderson.

Competing in the all-around for UMass will be Robin Low, Jennifer Pancoast, and Tricia Camus. In the vaulting event, Chris Cloutier, Elizabeth Janney, and Lisa Griffin will round out the line-up.

On the uneven parallel bars event, where UMass is hoping to add two points to the 41.60 they scored last week, Maureen Sutherby, Tricia Harrity, and Coutier will be the specialists.

Captain Barbara Lord, Janney and Allen will be the three specialists on the balance beam, and Lord, Griffin, and Abigail Farris the floor exercise event specialists.

The most exciting moment of the meet may occur when Low does her floor exercise routine. Low, who set the UMass floor exercise event record last week with a 9.55, will be attempting a double-back somersault.

More exciting than a successful double-back somersault by Low, however, would be a UMass victory over UNH.

SIT-IN — Amherst College students stage a sit-in yesterday at the College protesting the possible abolishment of fraternities on campus.

Amherst students protest before fraternity decision

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

More than 200 students held a day-long sit-in yesterday at Amherst College to protest their lack of input in an upcoming Board of Trustees vote they feel will call for the elimination of fraternities.

Both fraternity members and non-members peacefully occupied the hallways and offices of Dean of Students and Acting President G. Armour Craig for more than seven hours. Craig shut the door to his private office when students entered the reception area at 9 a.m., and later left without speaking to them.

Trustees, who have been deliberating the fraternity issue for almost a year, are scheduled to vote on abolishing the 624-member coed fraternity system during a meeting set for this weekend in New York City.

At the risk of further anti-fraternity sentiment, the event was organized to peacefully protest lack of student involvement in a decision students say has already been made.

Protestors, some of whom left temporarily to attend classes, spent the time playing cards, doing homework, and writing letters to the trustees. Upon leaving they carefully picked up trash and vacummed rugs.

"We've tried everything else. We feel like we have nothing to lose at this point," said senior Mary Dagostino of Rockport, N.Y., president of Psi Upsilon fraternity.

"We are not arguing the fraternity system, (but protesting that) we have not been listened to and dealt with as responsible adults."

But while school officials refused comment other than to indicate the occupation would not be prohibited, an Amherst College spokesperson rebutted the student complaints, saying both individuals and committees composed of students submitted opinions to the trustees.

"Their views were clearly solicited, " Douglas Wilson said. "190 students wrote letters about the fraternity issue. Those letters were all forwarded to the trustees."

"We've tried rallies, we've tried petitions, we've tried polls," said senior Hal Ball of St. Louis, president of the Interfraternity Council. "It's a very small chance that it will go our way. We're essentially making a statement to show we care."

The call for what may be a final evaluation of fraternities began last February when late Amherst College President Julian Gibbs submitted to trustees a paper questioning "not whether we maintain fraternities forever but, rather, for how much longer?" The paper was recirculated in April by Craig, who then asked for comment from various student, faculty, and alumni groups.

Alumni reaction was reported by trustees to be mixed, the faculty voted 90-29 in November for abolishment, and students, 85 percent of whom polled in December by the Amherst Student supported the system, began their ongoing efforts to block the move.

The trustees were originally scheduled to vote last month on the future of social life at the College, a wide-ranging subject which entered on the role of fraternities, but postponed the vote until this weekend. Rush at the eight houses for next semester was put on hold awaiting the decision.

Computers add 'new dimension' to teaching

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts professors who use computers as teaching aids say they expect colleagues to follow their lead soon.

The integration of computers into courses "adds a new dimension," to teaching possibilities, said Michael Malone, assistant professor of chemical engineering at UMass.

Computers are never going to replace textbooks or lectures, but they can enhance the quality of teachers' presentations by reinforcing concepts students learn in class, he said.

While the teachers' workload will not be lessened students will be able to learn faster, Malone said.

Student evaluations of the PLATO computer system, which Malone used for the first time in his introductory chemical engineering course last semester, were generally positive. The students "would still come to see me during office hours, but they'd have higher level questions," he said.

While Malone used the PLATO system to review lesson material, Roberta Day, an assistant professor of chemistry, used the system in a pilot project. Her goal was to determine the feasibility of using PLATO in administering quizzes to the more than 2000 students who take introductory chemistry courses every semester, she said. Implementing computer-administered quizzes will save chemistry instructors "on the order of 70 hours of contact time a week," by eliminating some of the need for discussion meetings, Day said.

After she used PLATO for the first time, Day said there were a few "bugs" in the system which drew some student complaints.

"It's a learning process for us too," she said. Computer-aided instruction "is a new media that has its own strengths and its own weaknesses" she said. "It is not a classroom, and it's a mistake to take the philosophy that you apply in the classroom and expect it to transfer over to a computer terminal."

In today's high-technology society, computers are increasingly becoming important tools for scientists, Day said. A benefit of using computers in science courses is greater familiarity with the computer itself.

"The science student has to be computer literate," Day said.

Micheline Dufau, a French professor, used PLATO in a fourth semester French course at UMass.

The problem in many language courses is the drill and repetition, which can become "boring" to both students and teachers, Dufau said. By requiring them to use the computer for drills, she said she was able to spend more time with students covering other areas.

"Roughly, it gave me 20 hours in the semester of class time that I could spend speaking to the students, having the students speak, and answering questions — doing what an instructor should be doing," Dufau said. "Anything that a machine can do better than me, I am going to let the machine do."

With help from University Computing Center staff, Dufau wrote the computer-based exercises for her class. But the day will come when publishers sell their own computer software material to accompany texts, she said.

Woodstock's Wavy Gravy chooses Nobody

Nobody, the leading contender in this year's presidential race, will hold a rally tonight in Amherst to consolidate support for the only candidate who can end world problems such as the nuclear arms race and hunger.

Despite interpretations of yesterday's Iowa caucuses and innumerable other polls, complete statistics have clearly shown Nobody should win every four years. In 1980, 79 million voted for president, but 82 million stayed home and thus voted for Nobody.

Among other things, Nobody is the latest in a series of candidacies spearheaded by Nobody's Fool, also known as Wavy Gravy, a poet, teacher, hospice worker, hog farmer, and most recognizably, the clown who emceed the Woodstock Festival.

In an eight-year-old campaign he both jokes childishly about and speaks of as seriously as he does the school he runs for dying children. Wavy Gravy has some ultimately compelling reasons for his choosing Nobody, the perfect catch-all candidate.

Gravy's fame flowered at Woodstock, where he and his Berkeley, Calif.-based commune, the Hog Farm, managed the food tent, feeding and later keeping the peace for upwards of 40,000 people.

He is now on the Board of Directors of the S.E.V.A. Foundation, a charitable society of doctors and laypeople who work to help the 80 percent of the world's blind who are needlessly so by giving them a $10 operation.

Gravy will be at Amherst College's Fayerweather Hall tonight at 8 and at Hampshire College's Music Recital Hall Saturday at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN — Waterloo, Iowa — President Ronald Reagan addresses a rally crowd of almost 8000 people yesterday in Iowa on the day of the Iowa Cauacuses.

Mondale wins Iowa caucus; leaves other candidates behind

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Walter Mondale outdistanced the Democratic field last night in returns from the Iowa caucuses, cementing his front-runner credentials in the first contest for nomination to challenge President Reagan.

"A great victory," enthused Mondale. He said: "This is the beginning of the end of the Reagan administration."

Republicans caucused too, with Reagan unopposed.

The major TV networks all said their projections showed Mondale an easy victor in the leadoff contest of the Democratic presidential race. The first projection came with just precincts reporting.

The caucuses were the first phase in the selection 50 Iowa delegates to the Democratic National Convention, and Mondale's showing pointed to a near-sweep of those nominating votes.

With 39 percent of the 2,495 precinct caucuses reporting, Mondale had 16,024 votes or 46 percent of the total.

Politicians and pollsters expected Mondale to finish well ahead of the field, and his pursuers were locked in a race for second.

The Democratic caucuses were expected to attract nearly 100,000 people to register their presidential preference in meetings convened in living rooms, schoolhouses and fire stations.

The non-Mondale vote was divided eight ways, among seven rival candidates and the voters who preferred to remain uncommitted.

Those numbers:

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado 5,034, or 14 percent.
Former Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota 4,180, 12 percent.
Sen. Allen Cranston of California 3,219, 9 percent.
Uncommitted 2,514, 7 percent.
Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, 2,038, 6 percent.
Former Gov. Rubin Askew of Florida 1,102, 3 percent.
The Rev. Jesse Jackson 1,040, 3 percent.
Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina 99.

French truckers continue blockades in fifth day of protest

PARIS (AP) — Road blockades by protesting truckers continued for a fifth day in some regions yesterday as the government prepared to negotiate with the drivers who had created some of the worst traffic jams in French history.

The National Highway Information Agency reported that blockades remained in 17 of France's 96 departments, or administrative districts.

The protests, which started Thursday and spread from the Atlantic to the French Alps, were to demand lower fuel taxes, changes in border crossing procedures and relaxed safety regulations.

Most of the blockades came down Sunday night after the president of France's largest independent truckers' organization called on his members to halt the strike.

Maurice Voiron, president of the 23,000-member National Truckers Federation issued the plea after Transportation Minister Charles Fiterman agreed to schedule negotiations with the truckers this morning.

On Saturday, Fiterman had said no negotiation date would be set until the highways were cleared.

Voiron predicted that the remaining barricades would come down today. "There's only about a dozen barriers left compared to about 170 Sunday night," he said.

Neither Voiron's independent truckers' organization nor a rival association, which claims 8,000 members, were involved in organizing the protest.

Since the blockades went up Thursday, one person has been killed and five others injured in separate accidents directly attributed to the strike.

McFarlane: Reagan 'unaware' of secret PLO negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — National security adviser Robert McFarlane says neither he nor President Reagan had any knowledge of secret talks reportedly conducted by the administration with the Palestine Liberation Organization, if any such talks did occur.

The New York Times reported Sunday that the Reagan administration conducted the talks through an intermediary with the PLO during nine months in 1981 and 1982.

"I am very confident that the president was unaware of any such contacts if they took place," McFarlane said Sunday during an interview on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

"I don't know a thing about it. Neither does the president and I took time to check with him before coming on today," McFarlane said.

The Times reported that the intermediary held 50 talks with PLO leader Yasser Arafat, seeking an agreement in which the Reagan administration would recognize the PLO if the PLO recognized Israel.

The Times reported Sunday the talks broke down after Israel invaded Lebanon in June 1982.

Boston Jackson supporters campaign in New Hampshire

BOSTON — Bundled in winter coats and singing spirituals, more than 100 Massachusetts supporters of the Rev. Jesse Jackson piled into school buses yesterday to travel north for a day of campaigning in New Hampshire.

Before they took off for the Granite State, supporters vowed to spread the word for Jackson every chance they get in the last week before the Democratic presidential primary.

"I always wear my 'Women for Jesse' button," said supporter Juanita Wade as she finished leading a rousing chorus of "Sail on, Jesse" to the tune of the church song "Sail On, Jesus."

But, she added, "I'll talk to anyone, any person, any neighborhood — anyone who will listen."

The morning rally for Jackson was briefly interrupted when four members of Jews Against Jackson marched through the crowd carrying placards denouncing the candidate's association with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Washington's Birthday holiday traffic death toll reaches five

At least five people, including one pedestrian, died in traffic accidents over the Washington's birthday weekend, and two teen-agers were critically injured in a crash that killed the driver and a third passenger, police said.

In Medford early yesterday morning, Thomas F. Kennedy Jr., 28, of Brookline died after he was struck by a passing car on Interstate 93, said State Police Cpt. Ronald Lamoly.

"It would appear that the victim was either walking or possibly hitchhiking on the road," Lamoly said.

Massachusetts rules reformers want to 'open up graveyards'

BOSTON — The fate of some 1,500 bills that died in committee last session, but never were killed, has fueled the campaign of rules reformers who want the Massachusetts Legislature to decide matters on floor votes.

"It is important to open up those graveyards," Judith Barnet of Barnstable last week told a committee considering changes in Senate rules.

The flow of legislation is generally controlled by the presiding officers — Senate President William M. Bulger and House Speaker Thomas W. McGee.

Several legislators and members of the public recommended that the Senate adopt the recent change in House rules that makes it easier to win the release of a bill from a standing committee.

In the lower branch, after a nominal waiting period, a petition signed by 40 percent of the members or a majority roll call vote can now pull a bill out of committee for floor action.

In the Senate, it is virtually impossible to force a bill out of the committee that involves the Senate counsel because unanimous consent is required. And, the four standing committees in each branch are not subject to deadlines for action.

Rhode Island pilot killed in ultra-light plane accident

DUNSTABLE — A 62-year-old Rhode Island man was killed when his new ultra-light plane, which resembled a hang glider, got caught in trees and plunged into the Nashua River, police said.

Dunstable Police Chief Kenneth Tkachuk said the plane had just taken off from Pepperell Airport when it went down at about noon Sunday.

"I believe it might have been his first time up," Tkachuk said. "From my understanding he had recently purchased the craft."

The pilot, identified as Hilric E. Pechie, of Esmond, R.I., was pronounced dead at St. Joseph's Hospital at 2:30 p.m.

Two men who were at the air field and saw the plane go down leaped into the Nashua River to try to rescue Pechie, but the river's strong current pulled them about 100 feet downstream, Tkachuk said.

Pechie's body, still strapped to the plane, was recovered by firefighters who went out on the river in a boat.

UMass men reveal attitudes toward women, relationships

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Correspondent

Male students living on campus have a high degree of interest in topics concerning relationships with women but are less interested in topics relating to the experience of being male, according to a survey conducted by the University of Massachusetts Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO).

The male issues survey, conducted by Project Pulse last semester, surveyed 266 campus men by a telephone to assess men's interest in various social topics and to evaluate male undergraduate support for a men's center on campus.

Of the men who were asked about their interest in relationships with others, 59 percent were found to be very or extremely interested in relationships with women; 13.1 percent showed interest in gay/lesbian issues, and less than 10 percent showed interest in relationships with other men.

James D. Wright, director of the UMass Social and Demographic Research Institute and a professor in the sociology department, said any rise in male interest concerning gay/lesbian awareness issues "will depend on things that may happen or go on around campus."

Eva Loher, sexism awareness coordinator for the East side of campus who requested the survey, said, "men are most aware of topics concerning relationships with women because it is something they can relate to."

Loher and Wright said stereotypes and socially defined roles for men make it difficult for many males to feel comfortable expressing their emotions, which may account for the relatively low interest in the topic of men and their emotions.

"The feminist movement on campus and elsewhere has obviously made men aware of issues that they probably would not be aware of otherwise," Wright said.

Of the topics directly relating to the experience of being male, more than 40 percent of the respondents said they were extremely interested in violence and anger, over 25 percent indicated interest in men and their emotions, and less than 10 percent said they were interested in male socialization.

Among social awareness issues, over 40 percent said they were very or extremely interested in racism; over 35 percent showed interest in handicapped issues, followed by a 34.6 percent interest rate in sexism, a 33.4 percent interest rate in anti-semitism, and 21.8 percent interested in ageism.

Campus appearance 'intolerable'

Mud 'unnerves' UMass prof

A University of Massachusetts professor last week charged the administration with having "an absence of commitment" in maintaining the physical appearance of the campus during a faculty senate meeting.

Political science professor Irving Howards called the situation of the campus "intolerable and despicable."

"If you have a commitment to do something, no matter whether you have the funds, you will do it," Howards said.

"I have been at the University for nine years and I am unnerved by what I see," he said. "Something needs to be done about this mud."

Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse said the answer to the problem is always the same.

"The bottom of the line is — and you hear it all the time — the lack of funds," DeNyse said.

DeNyse said the lack of funds is worsened by the fact that there are serious campus repair problems — such as the leaking roofs in the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center — that have a higher priority.

"When you only have so many resources, there are only so many things you can do with them," he said.

DeNyse said he will present the mud problem to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and that he will draft a statement with possible solutions to the problem.

In other news, the senate unanimously elected English professor Walker Gibson as the delegate to the UMass Board of Trustees. Gibson will replace botany Professor Seymour Shapiro, who resigned because of "realignment of activities and a larger course load," Senate Secretary Robert E. Jones said.

SGA Position may go unfilled

Due to lack of student interest in the past, this year "some important positions" may go unfilled again, according to Mindy Ordway, Student Government Association (SGA) Elections Coordinator.

"Not many people have signed out papers," Ordway said late last week.

Nomination papers, due today at the SGA office, are for the office of SGA president, positions on the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center Board of Governors and the Residential Committee.

The BOG, (Board of Governors) helps run the Campus Center and the Student Union Building and advises Registered Student Organizations, Ordway said. The Residential Committee deals with housing policies and contracts as well as roommate problems and dormitory issues.

To be nominated for president, students must collect 250 signatures, Ordway said. Fifty signatures are required for the Board of Governors and Residential Committee.

The SGA elections will be held March 12th and 13th, at various campus locations. Nomination papers can be picked up at the SGA office.

Students will have an opportunity to travel and explore countries around the world while standing in the Campus Center Auditorium at an International fair scheduled for April 7th.

The fair, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts International Student Association (ISA), will include booths set up by students who are from different countries around the world. Booths will feature aspects of the students native countries and cultures.

"The fair has the atmosphere of a bazaar with all the people dressed in their native costumes," said Moshe Meit, treasurer of the ISA.

In the past, students at the fair have performed native dances and songs, served food common to their culture, displayed or sold hand-made crafts and offered general information about their countries and its customs.

A party with a disc-jockey is planned to follow the fair. "It brings us closer to our community and the community closer to our culture," said Meit.

The fair is open to he public and people have come from as far away as Springfield and Greenfield to attend, Meit said.

A preliminary meeting to prepare for the fair will be held at 4:30 p.m. today in the Foreign Students Office. Meit said he encourages foreign students from all countries who may be interested in setting up a booth, to attend.

At the meeting, general information about the fair as well as information on how to set up a booth will be available.

Prior to the fair, the ISA will sponsor a raffle to raise funds for the fair.

The ISA is a Recognized Student Organization and is funded by the Student Government Association. Along with the International Fair, which is the association's biggest event, the ISA sponsors parties, guest speakers and films throughout the year.

Officers in the association often play the role of a contact person.

"Many times people call me to find how they can meet other people from a certain country," Meit said.

Meit said the purpose of the ISA is to "bring coherance to foreign students at the University."

Every foreign student — graduate or undergraduate — who enrolls in the University is automatically a member of the ISA.

"There are about 1200 members in ISA," Meit said. "We are currently trying to have it updated."

ISA member Roderigo T. Soto said the group was a good way to meet other foreign students. "It is very helpful because you can find a lot of friends."

UMass goes beyond walls

Students earn credits for informal learning

By JOAN McCARTHY
Collegian Correspondent

Students with informal prior educational experience are able to earn college credit through a nontraditional program at the University of Massachusetts.

University Without Walls (UWW) combines informal learning experiences with a formal degree program. According to Gary Bernhardt, coordinator of student and administration services at UWW, the purpose of the program is to get students in touch with personal systems of understanding and to analyze them through a formal degree program.

"When anyone has long term experience, they build a system of understanding based on their experience," Bernhardt said.

"Intensive and supportive advising, credit for informal prior learning and participation in the design of the degree," comprise the three basic components of the UWW program, Bernhardt said. These components strive to demonstrate a "balance of practical experience and theoretical knowledge," he added.

UWW students must meet all University undergraduate degree requirements, including accumulation of 120 graduation credits, fulfillment of core requirements and maintenance of a 2.00 cumulative grade point average.

The UWW program further requires students to develop an "area of concentration," Bernhardt said. UWW graduates receive either a Bachellor Arts degree or a Bachellor of Sciences degree.

UWW began in 1970 when a group of UMass School of Education graduate students formed an advisory council to determine "what kinds of things were necessary for higher education for adults," Bernhardt said.

He said the program gives its students "more power and control in decisions about their life."

"Administrators also learn so much from our students."

UWW learning centers at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Worcester campuses as well as in Springfield comprise the "oldest alternative program in New England," Bernhardt said. Currently approximately 200 students are enrolled in the program, he added.

"We receive more applications than we can take."

It began with $100 and a few spare parts

By SCOTT SLAVSKY
Collegian Correspondent

Button Up, a new University of Massachusetts student controlled business, offers campus groups an alternative to traditional publicity methods.

Located in the Student Government Association Communications Office, Button Up began producing buttons for campus groups last October "with $100 and a few spare button parts," Button Up Director Roberta Arena said. The business has grown since then and has produced buttons for groups ranging from the UMass Ski Club to Students for Jesse.

"Most people use us as a fundraiser," Arena said. "I expect more of a demand for political buttons this spring."

The one-and-a-half inch buttons, which can be made into any design, are ideal for organizations and fundraisers because of their low cost, Arena said.

Button Up does not currently produce single-button orders.

"In the future, we hope to do single order buttons one day each week in the Campus Center," Arena said. "My goal is to purchase a larger size button maker."

According to Marie Butler, an environmental science major who works for Button Up, the business "usually gets orders of 100 buttons, and (produces) three to five orders per week."

Most organizations come to Button Up with an idea, and graphic artists in the Communications Office attempt to create a design or slogan that will suit the customer, Butler said.

Button Up is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

UMass police report two weekend assaults

University of Massachusetts police received a report of an assault and battery at 2:29 a.m. yesterday from a woman in Moore House in the Southwest Residential Area. According to the complainant, a male suspect struck her in the face for no apparent reason. The suspect was described by the complainant as being under the influence of a type of drug. The case is under investigation.

In other police action:

Shortly before 6 p.m. Saturday police received a report of an assault from a resident assitant in Cashin dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area. A male subject, apparently removed from the dorm following a previous complaint, threatened to kill the complainant, police said.

The residential assistant was advised of proper court procedures, police said.

Police responded to a report of a fire in Cashin dormitory at 2:44 a.m. Sunday. According to the report, a desk chair in a student's room caught fire but was extinguished by residents before the police arrived. The Amherst Fire Department did not respond, police said. The fire was started as a result of careless disposal of smoking materials, according to the police report.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Collegian insensitivity purposeful?

Now, Big Brother (Collegian editors) may deem that the following words must be censored or abridged. But, rest assured that if critics of Collegian policy are suppressed within the Collegian institution, they could come out when the powder keg is ignited.

Recently, by many accounts, the UMass Daily Collegian Board of Editors have temporarily degenerated this student run newspaper into a racist and reactionary mouthpiece spouting ugly sensationalism and Orwellian double talk. Let me explain.

Robert Teixeira

First, their degeneration began on 2/2/83, the day the Rev. Jesse Jackson appeared on campus as the keynote speaker in a celebration to kick off Black History Month. The Collegian editorial staff, in all its arrogance, denied Yadira Betances, the Collegian Black Affairs editor, her right to write the cover story on the front page of the Collegian. Instead, they assigned their so-called objective reporter Peter Abraham to cover the story while denying Yadira one of two complementary tickets in their attempt to keep Black Affairs from covering the news event.

Well, if I do say so, I feel that the above was nothing but an insult to the UMass Third World Community as well as the Black Affairs Staff. It is well known that the Black Affairs staff, by tradition and respect, were always the writers who covered major news stories affecting the Third World Community on the front pages of the Collegian.

Second, the spouting of their sensationalism and double talk manifested itself with the front page printing of a so-called "News Analysis" entitled "School Finances Aid Jackson's History Visit" (P. Abraham 2/8/84) and the printing of a racist cartoon on its editorial page.

The article turned out to be nothing but a partisan editorial against the Jackson campaign, an editorial which belonged on the editorial page. Even where Mr. Abraham appeared to have done some research, he completely neglected to be balanced. For one example, Abraham seeked the opinion of Michael Reilly on the Board of Governors (BOG), who contributed money for a live videocast to over 800 students in the Campus Center Auditorium. However, that is one opinion. Abraham did not ask members of Afrikam, the student senate, or of Student Affairs for their opinions. These groups contributed far more money for production costs than the BOG. So much for balanced money journalism.

Also, Mr. Abraham nor the Collegian should have the right to peer into a student's personal academic or administrative record. This kind of activity should be left solely to the University administration and the SGA registrar, not to peeping Toms.

As for the editorial cartoon implying that Arabs and their nations are responsible for starvation in Africa, no words can express my shock and anger. Perhaps a history lesson is needed. Starvation in Africa is a direct result of European and American Colonialism and Neo-Colonialism. There was never wide-spread starvation in Africa until the Europeans invaded and imposed a foreign social, political, and economic system upon Africa. For example, Africans were forced to grow cash crops for European markets instead of food for themselves. These economic relationships and many more with the Capitalist World still exist. Starvation will end when these imbalanced relationships end. Arabs are in no way responsible for these colonial relationships, rather, they too are a victim of them.

The Collegian owes the Arab, African, and University community an apology for their insult. Imagine what would happen if the cartoon read "Zionist League gives America money instead of feeding starving Palestinians." Imagine the outcry this would arouse.

However, the Collegian's racism and double talk has not ended. Yadira Betances was suspended last Wednesday after printing an editorial on the Black Affairs page. Ms. Betances editorial concerned itself with the credibility of a newspaper that prints racist cartoons. The bossman has rationalized that Yadira has criticized the paper by "implying that the Collegian is racist." This act, he said, was "injurious, and not in the best interest of the newspaper."

This is outrageous. In a meeting with members of the Third World community on Thursday, Dec. 16th, Collegian Editor-in-Chief Joel Myerson answered yes when asked if the Collegian was institutionally racist. Well, isn't it ironic that the same person who suspended Yadira for critiquing Collegian racism has now admitted to Collegian racism.

Many questions must be answered. How was Yadira's editorial damaging? At the least, has not her editorial helped the Collegian's credibility? And, isn't their a double standard at work here? Why weren't the editors who allowed the printing of a blatantly racist cartoon and a front page editorial suspended?

I don't know about you, but I am permanently offended. Maybe now is a time for change. Perhaps an independent editorial board should be established to insure responsible journalism. Or, maybe a complete restructuring of the Collegian is needed, I sure hope it happens soon before the powder keg begins to burn.

Naming that reason why we are in Lebanon

Only a slippery speaker like President Reagan could have come up with his most recent interpretation of the dissolution of the Lebanese government. Meeting Friday with a group of writers, the President said, "...it's very obvious that the attacks began because the multinational force was contributing to success...that certain elements don't want." Efforts to drive back the Lebanese Army, therefore, were "a kind of significant admission that we were having some success." While this may sound somewhat contrived, it is to be expected following the parade of inexcusable contradictions that has accompanied the "official" reactions to these critical events.

Reagan's self-righteous criticism of the Democrats' withdrawal resolution was one of the first instances of unabashed hypocrisy to emerge in recent weeks. The President, of course, had begun making tentative plans for withdrawal as early as Jan. 21, in a meeting with special Middle-East envoy Donald Rumsfeld. A week later he told the Wall Street Journal that House Speaker Tip O'Neill "may be ready to surrender, but I'm not." A withdrawal, he said, would lead to "pretty disastrous results for us worldwide." When attending a White House photo session with Mika Spiljak, president of Yugoslavia, Reagan was asked again about the resolution. He answered, "It's too happy an occasion to take up anything the Democrats are doing." White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters on Feb. 1 that the resolution "could encourage intransigence on the part of the Syrians and clearly undermine the peace process."

Thomas Pitoniak

Apparently the Administration's decision to "cut" before their own withdrawal with excessive naval bombardment did not, in their minds, constitute a threat to the peace process. This issue could be better examined if there were a coherent policy, however flawed, to interpret. But regrettably the same confusion has been present in the bombardment policy as well. On Feb. 15, Secretary of the Navy John F. Lehman, Jr. said, "There very definitely has been a shift in emphasis to make it clear that we will be providing supporting fire to the Lebanese armed forces." Speakes was quick to term this "incorrect;" said Speakes, "Whatever we do is in support of the Marines."

Larry Speakes knows what it's like to make a public mistake. On Feb. 8, Speakes spoke strongly of the need to protect the Lebanese government. Having presumably been corrected upstairs, he returned two days later to say the most important concern was "the safety of American and other multinational force personnel in Lebanon." It did not, however, occur to anyone to assess the damage done to the hill villages, or to take into account the civilians they are supposedly protecting. The Administration is managing to bend what George Schultz termed "constraints" into a rhetorical maze.

When Congress asserted that the bombardment was a violation of last October's War Powers Resolution, the President claimed it was only to protect the lives of the Americans there. But Reagan's own report sent to Congress last week successfully distorted the well-intentioned limitations. According to the report, targets now were "any units in Syrian-controlled parts of Lebanon firing into the greater Beirut area, as well as against any units directly attacking multinational forces or U.S. personnel and facilities." The lines were bent even further as the report mentioned the additional aim of aiding the expansion of the Lebanese Army.

The overall policy has been to shoot first and then explain it to the people. On Feb. 9, Larry Speakes was asked by reporters to explain how bombarding the Syrian-held areas would increase the chances for peace and reconciliation. His hauntingly cold response: "Well, I think what you say may have the very fact to make them more tractable." This off-the-cuff treatment reveals a lack of direction or ethical standards. When one has to rely on Speakes for information, while Reagan cuts brush and Schultz blames his disco fever on Rio, a disconcerting gap is revealed at the bureaucratic connections that are supposed to be guiding and advising the U.S. during these crucial moments.

Even after a most exhausting week, the withdrawal is, of course, only a "redeployment." The request for $300 million in supplemental military aid and Reagan's consistently un-neutral attitude make it clear that the first priority is the repulsion of the Soviet-sponsored Syrians. If there were a true dedication to reconciliation the Administration would not need untruths and serious contradictions. The recent events have revealed a dangerously improvisational approach on the part of our "leaders" to an issue of grave world concern.

Suspension violates due process

To the Editor,

The Collegian's policy of suspending members of its staff for "performance of official duties in a way to be injurious to the best interest of the newspaper" before guilt has been determined, violates the due process requirement on which the United States' judicial system is built.

I suggest that you clean-up this part of the Collegian's constitution containing this phrase, as it may be a source of further embarrassment to your paper. Finally, the Collegian may do well to review its policy about what it prints. My wish is that Yadira Betances, the Black Affairs editor will never have to write another editorial criticizing the Collegian for its insensitivity to the Third World community.

The ineptness of nuclear thought

To the Editor,

According to a Mr. Peter Dow (any relation to Dow Chemical Co.?) a recently published Collegian commentator, "nuclear technology will be with us forever." All I can say is brother, forever is a long time. Like the old joke, You Can Kiss your Ass Goodbye.

Mr. Dow's perspective seems to be a bit lacking in global awareness; what other cultures have thus far produced on the earth can be neither fathomed nor matched by Western man's ineptly lethal technology. If human beings are so far advanced that they cannot accept the possibilities of mutual co-existence then they will most logically advance themselves to mutually assured destruction.

Women swimmers top MHC

By TOM SCOLLINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team had an easy win over Mount Holyoke last Tuesday night, 89-48, in their last dual meet of the year. It was an impressive way to gear up for the New England's, as there were many drops in time for the team, which is just what Coach Valerie Turtle had hoped for.

"We started off well by dropping time with our 400 yd. medley relay team," said Turtle. Sue Freitas, Rosemary Kelsall, Maura Sweeney, and Elizabeth Feinberg were the members of that team which hopes to finish well in the New England's. Sue Freitas had an exceptional night winning the 50 and 100 yd. freestyle, and the 200 Individual Medley along with being a member of the winning relay team.

Co-captain Elizabeth Feinberg, always a leading point winner for the squad, had another great night winning the 200 and 500 freestyle, and also a share of the relay win. Kelsall was another triple winner placing first in the 100 and 200 breaststroke and the relay. Janice Rowan finished second to Kelsall in both breatstroke races.

Sweeney and Nancy Stephens were again strong for the Minutewomen, placing first and second respectively in the 50 and 100 yd. butterfly. Elizabeth MacDonald put in a strong performance dropping her times in the 50 and 100 yd. butterfly. Senior Lynn Williams also swam well dropping in the 100 yd. freestyle.

Senior diver Jean Bushee won both the one meter required and optional dives. Usually dives are made from one and three meters but Mount Holyoke's pool is only ten feet deep so two different one meter dives were necessary.

Coach Turtle was impressed with the attitude of the women going into the match. "It was a good supportive meet," explained Turtle. "Both teams showed a lot of enthusiasm."

The Minutewomen finish at 5-7 and are taking 11 members of the squad to the New England's. "We have people qualified in every event," said Turle. "There will be 20 events, 18 swimming and 2 diving." The New England's will be held at the University of Maine at Orono, February 24-26.

Win streak over, UM falls to GW

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Well, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team did not get to savor being at .500 very long. Those pesky Colonials from George Washington took care of that with a 80-62 pasting of the Minutemen, Saturday night, to send UMass back to sub-.500 land.

After such an emotional and well-run offensive show against St. Joseph's, Massachusetts got some glue stuck in their wheels and struggled against George Washington.

"We were struggling the whole way," UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "We were working hard but our reactions were slow. I think we were a little tired. It was our fourth game in seven days."

In the first half, UMass couldn't get anything going. The Minutemen were down by eight at the half, 42-34. "The whole (George Washington) team played well and outplayed us in the first half. We felt lucky to be down by only eight at the half," Gerlufsen said.

"It was one of our poorer halves of the year."

In the second half, Massachusetts was able to pull within two with 9:30 to go but couldn't sink the equalizer.

"We could have tied it on a few occasions," Gerlufsen said. "But we just couldn't convert on the situations."

Losing Horace Neysmith with a sprained ankle midway through the half didn't help either. Bobby Braun, the first forward off the bench, was hobbled by sore knees and only played 10 minutes.

"We were sluggish offensively," Gerlufsen said. "For our offense to do well, our defense has to do well. We didn't play with enough intensity to force George Washington to make offensive mistakes. I could tell early, we were in for a long day."

UMass, now 11-12, 6-8 in the conference and tied for fifth with St. Bonaventure, shot poorly in the second half converting only 38 percent from the floor and 30 percent from the charity stripe.

It was also a low scoring night for the Minutemen. Neysmith, even missing most of the second half, led the team with 14 points. Donald Russell added 13 while John Hempel scored 11. Edwin Green and Carl Smith had only eight points each.

Big Mike Brown led the Colonials with 19 points, 12 rebounds, and five blocks. Troy Webster added 16 points and Chester Wood had 14 points. Next up is West Virginia and another crucial game in Morganstown.

Minutemen mush MIT

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

With season high totals in the floor exercises and long horse vaulting events, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team dominated a shaky Massachusetts Institute of Technology team 250.15-173.80 on Saturday.

It was the last home meet for seniors Mark McGaunn, Bert Mathieson (9.45 in the high bar event) and tri-captains Jim Corbett (9.3 in floor exercises) and Willie Stevens.

The Minutemen had no problem handling the depleted MIT squad and started the meet off in floor exercises with fine performances from Corbett, Phil Gorgone (9.15) and Stevens (9.0). All three competitors hit their double back somersaults as the Minutemen scored a season high of 44.7 points in the event.

In the vaulting event, UMass also recorded a season high of 45.20 points through help from Gorgone, Stevens and Ken Dougherty. Gorgone, who has been hurting all season due to bad ankles, received a 9.35 for a tsukahara vault.

"It didn't hurt," Gorgone said about landing his vault, although he did admit to feeling numb pain after sticking his double back somersault on floor exercises. "I wanted it. I had stuck two in warmup and I wanted it bad. I wanted to hit for Mom and Dad and my little sister," said Gorgone.

Stevens scored a 9.2 with a difficult vault, a Tnsinca front (cartwheel front somersault out) and Dougherty notched an 8.95 with his vault.

Mathieson received his highest score ever on the parallel bars event (9.25) while performing some difficult tricks including a rear uprise Markolov (half twist release from an under arm swing). Along with taking the all around with 53.3 points, he had a strong ring routine (9.15 and tied his high score on the high bar event with a 9.45.

"I just had a blast for my last meet on home turf," Mathieson said. "I had just gotten my high score on parallel bars and that made the meet worthwhile, even if I didn't do good on high bar. So I had a good frame of mind going up on high bar," said Mathieson.

"It's just been great competing at UMass and I'm sad to see it end," he added.

Tony Sbarra (8.9) salvaged his high bar routine after he began swinging crooked, but recovered nicely to finish the routine.

"I was thinking about the delchev (release skill) for a while," Sbarra said. "After I caught it, I was so relieved that I didn't think about the next move which was easy. Then I wanted to straighten out for my dismount (double layout)."

Coach Roy Johnson said, "It was fun seeing all the seniors finish up. I didn't think MIT would have too much of a team."

The Minutemen have two more meets to go before they head to East Stroudsburg for the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships on March 16th. This Saturday UMass will travel to meet Temple and finish up at Springfield the following week.

Minutewomen score high, but lose tough one to UNH

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

A standing-room-only crowd of more than 400 people was treated to an exciting, sometimes near-great, display of gymnastics this past Saturday at Boyden, as the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team was edged by the University of New Hampshire, 177.20-173.

Although they did not win, Saturday's meet was a victory for the Minutewomen in a couple of ways. Their team score of 173 was their highest total of the season (beating their previous high by 2.75 points) and is a good qualifying score for the NCAA East Regionals. Also, all three UMass all-arounds, Jennifer Pancoast, Robin Low, and Tricia Camus, improved on their scores from last week, and Pancoast, with a 35.05, became the first Minutewoman to break 35 this season.

"We have been doing a lot more repetitions in practice and I have been really concentrating on the parts that are problems for me," said Pancoast. "I also rearranged my routines to try and help my scores and it worked."

"We're getting better. Jennifer did a very good job," said UMass Coach Ken Anderson. "I thought that the judges were a bit flaky. No question UNH had us beat, but by not as great a margin."

From the outset, UNH led, taking the top three spots in the vaulting event. The Wildcats' Nancy McCarrick took first with a 9.3, Diane Carlin was second with a 9.05, and Jayne Dean third with a 9.0.

The top UMass gymnasts in the vault were Lisa Griffin, who received an 8.85 for a full twist on-full twist off, and Pancoast, with an 8.7 for a handspring with a full twist.

"I thought both Elizabeth (Janney, who got an 8.65 for a half twist on-one and a half twist off) and Jennifer were underscored a bit," remarked Anderson.

In the uneven parallel bars event, Carlin (9.2) and Dean (9.05) of UNH finished first and second while UMass' Pancost (8.95) took third. An ecstatic Robin Low came in a close fourth with an 8.9.

"Robin really hit bars. It was her best set of the year," Anderson said.

UMass entered the balance beam event trailing UNH, 89.10-86 but was not able to gain any ground as Carlin and Dean again had the two top scores. This time both scored a 9.0. Tricia Harrity of UMass came in second with an 8.7.

In the floor exercise event, Lucia Cancelmo of UNH finished first with an inexplicably high score of 9.3, while Griffin and Low took the next two spots with 9.15 and a 9.1, respectively. Low fell while trying to execute a double-back somersault. Otherwise, she gave her usual spectacular performance.

The UMass team score of 44.60 in the floor exercise event was a season high, but once again UNH outscored them with a 44.75.

The Minutewomen host Southern Connecticut Thursday night at 7:30 in Boyden. It is their last home meet of the year. Watching gymnastics is an incredible amount of fun and this is your last chance — be there!

Ski team wins NEISC title, Segal takes second overall

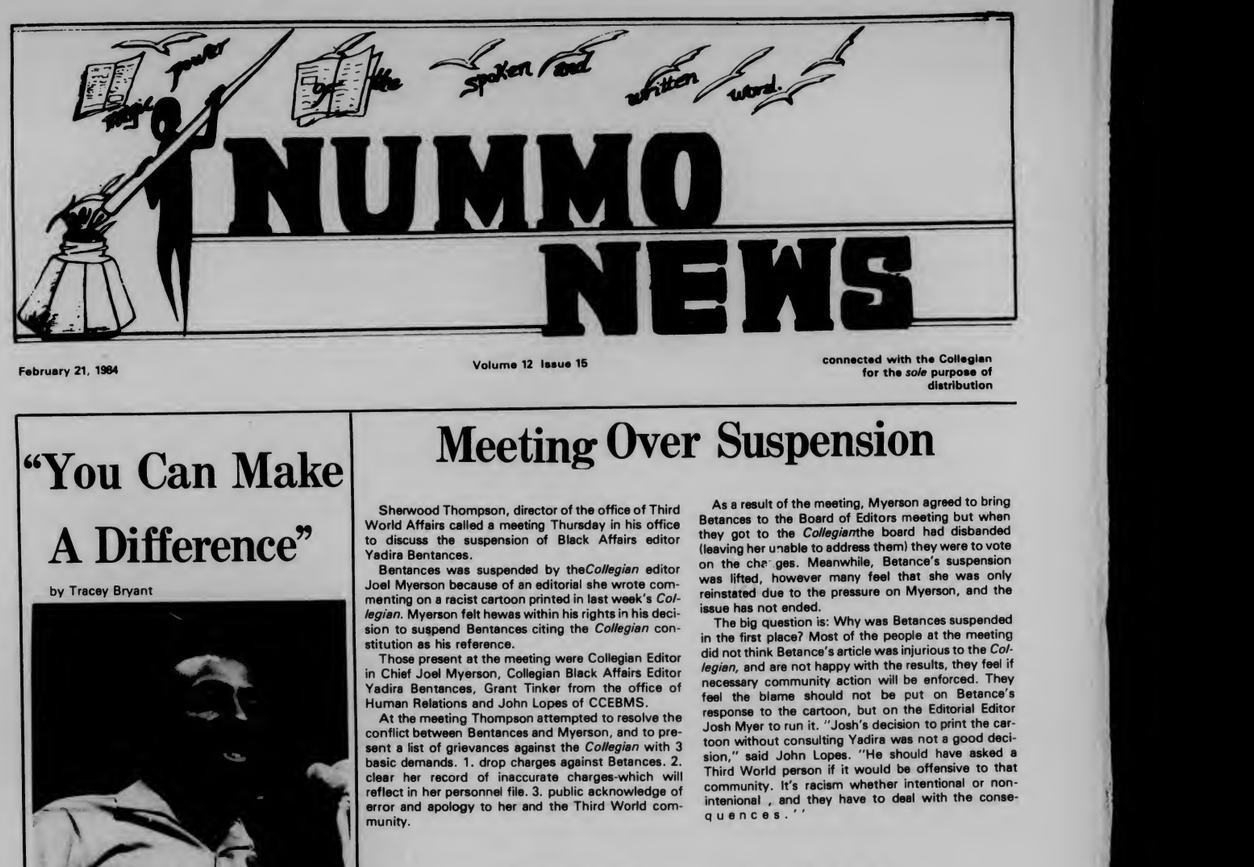
By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's ski team put on their raincoats at Berkshire East this past weekend and hung on to take first place at the end of New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference (NEISC) competition.

UMass took two second places in the slalom and giant-slalom to finish behind a strong Plymouth State College team. PSC won both races, but their end of the season surge wasn't enough to upset the Minutemen in the overall league standings.

In Saturday's drizzle, UMass had some problems and only four Minutemen finished the rutty slalom course among the top 20. Dan Conway (3rd) and Jon Segal (6th) put in their usual strong efforts for UMass, while teammates Matt Luczkow (12th) and Dave Greenburg (19th) also did well in the race and Amherst was fourth.

Bear Hovey from UConn won the race and Don MacArthur from Amherst College was second to help his team's third place finish. Boston College took fourth overall.



The fog lifted early on Sunday and UMass almost saw a win before the day was over and the clouds began to roll in (again). But it was a tough PSC (538.71 seconds that took the giant-slalom victory from UMass, whose team time was 545.12 (best 5 of 8 racers).

On the brighter side, Segal won the giant-slalom race (104.16 seconds) by a substantial margin over rival Doug Karwoski (105.57) from PSC. Unfortunately though, Karwoski took the individual league title (best 8 of 10 races) over Segal by just three points. UMass' Conway was 3rd in the league overall, despite being hampered by injuries all season.

Other UMass finishers in the G-S were: Andy Clarke (6th), Luczkow (12th), Conway (14th), Captain Tim Enright (16th), Kris Vanderzee (17th) and Bob Faigel (19th). Boston College took third in this race and Amherst was fourth.

The final NEISC standings are: UMass (64 pts.), PSC (61), BC (45), Amherst (36), Brown (34), UConn (26), Army (11) and Trinity (3).

The skiers will travel to Waterville Valley, New Hampshire this weekend for the NEISC Championships, where they will compete against nine other New England teams.

"You Can Make A Difference"

by Tracey Bryant

Dick Gregory, political analyst and satirist lectured at Smith College for Black History Month.

Discussing current events Gregory said that he couldn't wait for Soviet leader Andropov - "that Russian" to be buried so America could stop pretending to be sad. He said that George Bush must be thinking " 'Lord, are you gonna kill all the ex-heads of the Intelligence Units?' "

He called America and Russia "hoodlums, thugs, partners in crime" and said that the ability to talk about wiping out whole nations isn't power. "The people talking about building nations will be around long after the last missile is dropped," said Gregory.

Gregory told the audience that every so many years America shows the world "how bad we are" by attacking another country. "Carter messed up. Reagan said I will restore our honor," by attacking Grenada, said Gregory. "Grenada doesn't even show up on the Grenadian map! They don't have an army; they don't even have a boy scouts. And we fought nobody for two weeks....and really got off on that."

He said that the public also gets off on celebrities: we tolerate behavior (-drugs and scandals) from them that we wouldn't from everyday people.

Mentioning Michael Jackson's recent accident he said that Jackson got so many phone calls the circuits blew out. "There were no phone calls for all the starving people," said Gregory. "One day you'll pay for that."

Meeting Over Suspension

Sherwood Thompson, director of the office of Third World Affairs called a meeting Thursday in his office to discuss the suspension of Black Affairs editor Yadira Bentances.

Bentances was suspended by the*Collegian* editor Joel Myerson because of an editorial she wrote commenting on a racist cartoon printed in last week's Collegian. Myerson felt hewas within his rights in his decision to suspend Bentances citing the Collegian constitution as his reference.

Those present at the meeting were Collegian Editor in Chief Joel Myerson, Collegian Black Affairs Editor Yadira Bentances, Grant Tinker from the office of Human Relations and John Lopes of CCEBMS.

At the meeting Thompson attempted to resolve the conflict between Bentances and Myerson, and to present a list of grievances against the Collegian with 3 basic demands. 1. drop charges against Betances. 2. clear her record of inaccurate charges-which will reflect in her personnel file. 3. public acknowledge of error and apology to her and the Third World community.

As a result of the meeting, Myerson agreed to bring Betances to the Board of Editors meeting but when they got to the *Collegian*the board had disbanded (leaving her unable to address them) they were to vote on the charges. Meanwhile, Betance's suspension was lifted, however many feel that she was only reinstated due to the pressure on Myerson, and the issue has not ended.

The big question is: Why was Betances suspended in the first place? Most of the people at the meeting did not think Betance's article was injurious to the Collegian, and are not happy with the results, they feel if necessary community action will be enforced. They feel the blame should not be put on Betance's response to the cartoon, but on the Editorial Editor Josh Myer to run it. "Josh's decision to print the cartoon without consulting Yadira was not a good decision," said John Lopes. "He should have asked a Third World person if it would be offensive to that community. It's racism whether intentional or non-intenional , and they have to deal with the consequences."

Ken Thorne's Trial

by Segun Eubanks

In 1969, Trinidad native Kenneth Thorne came to America because he wanted to America because he wanted to play Jazz and learn about the American Indian.

As a musician, who plays flute, saxaphone, steel drums, and percussion, he was lured to the Amherst area in 1977 by what he called the "rich Jazz community.' What he got from Amherst was what he calls racism and harrassment.

Walking into Ken Thorne's Village Park apartment one must first take off one's shoes. There's a front room full of musical instruments, African and Indian artifacts, and a wall full of art and photography. The atmosphere is relaxed, the mellow jazz with its strong African overtones provides the background.

Thorne is sitting on the floor with his legs crossed wearing his favorite Los Angeles baseball cap, complimented by a "Jackson in 84" button. He talks excitedly about his travels around the country and a year spent living on Indian reservations in the mid-west.

Thorne also talked about his native country, Trinidad, and the history of the steel drum. Eventually the conversation began to turn toward the subject which I had come to discuss. Thorne's voice changed quickly from excitement to bitterness, and anger. He leaned forward and began talking faster about the events which began on September 24, 1982 and led to his conviction in October 1983 which may lead to his deportation by the U.S. Immigration Department.

Ken Thorne was convicted on October 17, 1983 on two counts of receiving stolen goods (a camera and a stereo). He was sentenced to one year in jail, suspended, and is currently serving two years probation. Thorne says that he loaned an acqusintance $350 cash and was given the stereo and camera as collateral. He still maintains that he did not know that the equipment was stolen and friend Robin Howard and he were victims of the police and court system.

Thorne was keeping the equipment at Howard's apartment and Howard was also arrested although her charges were dropped one year later. "It is not so much the conviction on receiving (of stolen goods) that upsets me," said Thorne "but the process that they (police and court) used to set me up." He cites a series of events and situations that turned his case into "a political and racial case."

-Ken Thorne was denied a public defendant on the grounds that he owned a car and could afford his own lawyer. Thorne paid $1600 in legal fees and could not appeal his conviction due to lack of ability.

-Police entered the apartment of Robin Howard on September 24, 1982 without a search warrant and illegally searched her home and arrested her.

-Shortly after Thorne was arrested the Amherst police asked him to come down to the station and pick up his belongings. Upon arrival Thorne says he was interogated by police, without the presence of a lawyer, concerning an alleged drug operation in the Amherst area. "They kept shooting names at me. They wanted me to give informatioin in exchange for exoneratioin of my own charges." When Thorne could not give them the information they wanted, Thorne said the police told him "Lets see you get out of seven indictments."

"It's not just me, "says Thorne, "It is happening all the time. It could happen to anyone in the community today."

Look for the in depth report in next week's Nummo

Editorial

by Segun Eubanks

Over the past few months, many members of the Third World community have began to seriously question the Collegian's sensitivity or commitment to people of color on this campus.

The must recent, and perhaps the most flagrant example of the insensitivity that I am referring to began with the printing of a very offensive cartoon on the Editorial page. The cartoon depicted a very ravished, impoverished view of the African continent, with the caption saying something to the effect of: "A Jesse Jackson campaign contribution has been made in your name."

The cartoon evoked such criticism from members of the community that the Collegian Black Affairs Editor, Yadira Betances felt it necessary (and very appropriately,) to print an editorial in Black Affairs expressing the disgust and anger of many people in our community. When Collegian Editor In Chief, Joel Myerson read the editorial, he decided to suspend Yadira. This, as Myerson soon learned, was a grave error.

Immediately, Black students and administrators came to Betances' support and Myerson had to (at least temporarily) remove the suspension. What Myerson had promised would be a public apology in the Collegian editorial, turned out to be his idea of a justification for the suspension.

One thing I must point out, is that for about a year now Black Affairs has been only a half page at the most, the other half being advertisement. However, for the past few weeks Betances and her new staff have been filling the page, leaving less room in the paper for advertisement. It seems strange that all of a sudden Meyerson would come up with some never before used constitutional clause to suspend Betances. Coincidence? Maybe, but a pretty peculiar one.

Collegian's insensitivity does not stop just with the issue of Black Affairs. Last semester, and the beginning of this semester, coverage of Yvette Henry case was both inadequate and biased. The Collegian was quick to print all the negative aspects of the Henry case, i.e. the arrest and suspension, however, they shyed away just as quickly from the aspects of the case which made the University look bad, i.e. the reasons the charges were dropped and the very questionable circumstances. Using a vague excuse of "just reporting the news" the Collegian clearly showed that instead of being as progressive and responsible news organization, it is closer to a conservative organization that responds to the desires of the University administration and not the student population.

Students of A BETTER CHANCE HOUSE studying diligently.

1984 marks the 16th year of success and achievement that A Better Chance (ABC) House has given to the Amherst community. ABC is a program designed to offer educational opportunities to talented minority youngsters of high school age from deprived urban areas who may otherwise not have received a quality education.

ABC celebrated their anniversary in January with a program that included an art exhibit by UMass professor Nelson Stevens, a ABC history slide show, and the movie "Now is the Time." The Amherst chapter is one of one hundred sixty-five ABC programs nationwide. The nationwide program began in 1963 with the Amherst chapter, now located at 74 No. Prospect St., beginning its operation in 1968.

The program works by a network of teachers, principals, guidance counselors, and other area educators recommending students who show outstanding promise for going to college. But who would not have sufficient educational opportunities to adequately prepare for college, but for the ABC House. Students selected come to Amherst, live in the ABC House and attend Amherst Regional High School.

Mitchell Smith, who has been Residential Director of the Amherst program for three years, said that the program has been very successful in sending students to college. Smith also pointed out that ABC "Benefits the predominatly white community due to the cultural diversity that we bring to the community."

The programs $35,000 dollar budget is all raised locally by gifts from local churches, the Hampshire Community United Way, College functions, and individuals. In addition, there are special fund-raising events, such as the foliage walk and art raffle.

The programs success and benefit to the Amherst community has been proven by its 16 years of existence and by the over two hundred Amherst residents who have volunteered their services to the program over the yers as board of directors members and host families.

As ABC enters its 17th year of success, Mr. Smith stressed that along with the strong academic commitment, the program thrives to make sure that the students in the predominatly white area "maintain a strong sense of cultural identity and community responsibility."

CCEBMS PEOPLE

Rick Townes, Assistant Director of CCEBMS.

by Donette Wilson

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Minority Students (CCEBMS) is a vital part of many of our students' existence on this campus. What makes CCEBMS so important is the quality of their staff such as Assistant Director, Manuel "Rick" Townes.

Townes has been employed with the University for eight years. Townes says his main interest is doing whatever is necessary to ensure the growth of all minority students here at the University.

Townes believes that "here at the University we have the unique opportunity to have a great impact on the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; because of the University's versatility in character and ethnic backgrounds.

Townes has seen many changes at the University since his arrival. At first, said Townes, minorities were becoming eligible to come to this university; and in the 70's people were very sensitive to minorities' feelings.

He feels that the adjustment process is much more convenient now than when he attended UMass in 1970. He said that there were no PVTA buses, therefore everyone had to walk to wherever they wanted to go.

There also wasn't a Nummo News, a Black Mass Communication, a Black Affairs, or no WMUA; all of these projects started while Townes was a student. Townes said that for a campus of this size (25,000 students) we have a lot compared to many other universities.

The Assistant Director went on to explain that with the growth of the minorities on this campus, CCEBMS went from 50 students in 1970 to about 650 students this present year. Also the average CCEBMS students graduates in 4-4½ years. He added that the committment and goal of many to have 1,000 minorities is still in view.

By keeping in touch with other counselors, CCEMBS expects an increase in its number of students. He made it known that simply because UMass is a public institution doesn't insure any Massachusetts residents acceptance. Two-thirds of the minorities that applied were rejected.

Mr. Townes looks forward to the coming years, because of his hope that more and more minorities will get the education available to all.

this was again shown by the front page "News Analysis" by Peter Abraham which made a farce out of investigative reporting. In investigating the Jesse Jackson speech on Black Homecoming, Mr. Abrahams obviously did not listen to Mr. Jackson's speech or see the over 3,000 people who packed the Fine Arts Center and the Campus Center auditorium to listen to Mr. Jackson. More importantly Mr. Abrahams did not even have common sense enough to fully investigate the speech made by another presidental candidate just one week before Jackson spoke. To add insult to injury, there is now some question as to whether Abraham misquoted one of the main sources he usd as evidence to prove his analysis. Therefore, what was supposed to be a "News Analysis," that could very well have brought fourth some legitimate points of discussion, turned out to be nothing more than an editorial attack on Black presidential candidate and even more relevant a Black student and a majority Third World organization on this campus.

Now this may sound like I am coming down hard on the Collegian and indeed I am. We, as students, support the existence of the newspaper and we must demand that it represents all of us in a fair and equal manner. Some of you may read this and say, 'Well, the Collegian has given us Nummo and Black Affairs.' Those of you who think this do not know the history of Nummo or Black Affairs.

Back in the early 1970's there was absolutely no vehicle of expression for people of color on this campus. The Collegian was either totally ignoring or severely slanting news and information about the Third World community. When Third World students asked the Collegian to address the issues concerning them the newspaper did not respond. In 1975 these students had to literally take over the Collegian offices and stop the newspaper from printing before they would allow Nummo to use its facilities and Black Af-

Judgments and Suspensions

Editorial

by Tracey Bryant

What I want to know is: Has Peter Abraham been suspended? Has Josh Meyer been suspended? And if not, then: How long does the Collegian think it can continue to slander and victimize Third World people and women; and uphold blatant double-standards?

Yadira Betances, the Collegian Black Affairs Editor wrote an editorial apologizing for a cartoon in the Collegian that misrepresented and offended a great many people.

She placed the editorial on the page fought for by these misrepresented people; she put it on the page originally interposed into the Collegian, by these people, to prevent such racist propaganda, like the cartoon.

And she was suspended.

The suspension was revoked, many feel solely because of the publicity and pressure applied. But the issue does not end there.

Collegian Editor In Chief, Joel Myerson cited Article 5, section 2 of the Collegian Constitution as the reason for her suspension: "...cause for dismissal shall be based on...a performance of official duties in a way to be injurious to the best interests of the newspaper." (As printed in the Feb. 16, 1984 issue of the Collegian.)

Was she injuring the paper by saying, in effect, that the entire staff, at least Black Affairs, was not a party to this virulent perpetration of racism?

She wrote, "The main objective of the Black Affairs page in the Collegian is to erase the bias and racist representation the Third World suffers and the outcast of news and information it is denied. And it will continue to do so until it manages, some day, to eliminate the type of attitudes which prompted it (the Collegian) to print such a blatantly racist cartoon."

How could her attempt to restore some semblance of integrity to the paper be seen as injurious?

Was the Collegian really going to try to pretend the cartoon was not racist and ignorant?

If we translate the decision to suspend Yadira Betances into human terms (instead of hiding behind a structure that support injustice,) it seems she was suspended for voicing her dissent, for asserting her difference; for her non-compliance and non-complacency in the disrespecting and degrading of a people.

She faced and exposed a major point of conflict between the Collegian infrastructure and Black Affairs, moreover between the Collegian and the Third World community.

There are many questions to be asked and comparisons to be made.

Why was her insistence upon respect and respectful treatment of Third World people seen as a threat to the Collegian, by the Collegian?

Why does her assertion of dignity subject her to reprimands from the Collegian?

Why does the assertion of dignity for Third World people conflict with Collegian interests, while the actions of Peter Abraham who wrote a "news analysis" riddled with "misinformation," does not?

What are Collegian interests?

Journalistic integrity isn't one of them? Honesty, accuracy, balance?

What made Mr. Abraham and his article particularly dangerous for any newspaper was the assertively biased assumptions he used to string together his story; with its "misinformation."

And how can we comfortably use the word "misinformation when it has been made clear that the information Abraham received did not carry the meaning he aggressively attached to it.

How can the type of writing and assumptions displayed in that article not be considered injurious to the newspaper?

How can the type of judgment Josh Meyer exercised in using that cartoon not be considered injurious to the Collegian?

The kindest words to be offered about the actions of Abraham, Meyer and Myerson is that perhaps their ignorance and insensitivity got the best of them.

The problem is that all three on separate occasions acted with ignorance and insensitivity toward Third World people.

And I hear women aren't treated much better. In fact, the only other similar Collegian suspension was that of the Women's Editor two years ago.

Logistically we must question the validity of a constitution that allows and shelters certain types of ignorance and insensitivity - toward certain people, while suppressing and penalizing very necessary acts of dignified assertion and those courageous enough to carry them out.

There is no constitutional, moral or practical justification for Yadira Betances' suspension. There is also no justification for the tone of Peter Abraham's story. But most importantly, there was, is and never will be any justification for that cartoon or a newspaper printing it.

There is also no justification for not suspending Abraham and Meyer before suspending Betances.

Nothing short of a front-page apology to the entire Third World community will ameliorate the ill.

W.E.B. Du Bois: A Place in History

by Russell Jordan

Thursday night Vincent Harding, noted Historian and author spoke at Mahar auditorium at the University of Massachusetts as part of the W.E.B. Du Bois lecture series.

Introduced by Chancellor Duffey and William Strickland, Harding illuminated on the significance and scholarship of W.E.B. Du Bois; which according to Harding has yet to achieve its proper place in American history and social thought.

"This is largely due to Du Bois being Black and the fact that he said things Black people weren't suppose to say, especially at that time during the early 1900's," said Harding.

Harding continued his presentation by citing W.E.B. Du Bois' great love for this country, which continued after he left the United States for Ghana when he was eighty-eight years old. "Du Bois had the courage to criticize this country for its betrayal of the America ideal," said Harding. "He loved the United States for the promise of freedom and equality in her Constitution and Bill of Rights, but he at the same time realized that these rights were not equally guaranteed to all Americans, in particular the descendents of African slaves in this country."

Du Bois accurately predicted that the crises of the twentieth century would not be the problem of the color line. This has been borne out by the struggles for equality by Blacks in the U.S.A. and South Africa and the struggles against Western imperialism and exploitation by the formerly colonized Third World nations.

Du Bois accused the United States of assuming the role of world policeman and taking on the imperialist mantle that the European nations, primarily England, France, and Belgium once held in Africa, Asia and throughout the Third World.

Harding praised the accurate and far-seeing observations of Du Bois and remarked on the wealth of knowledge and wisdom that Du Bois contributed to American scholarship and social thought in his many books, essays, and articles.

Dr. Du Bois who was educated at Harvard and taught at Fisk, founded the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and was the editor of Crises magazine for a number of years.

Having died in Ghana at the age of 95 in 1965,his long life was characterized by social activism and a deep commitment to American society's fulfillment of its noble ideals.

Often criticized by both Blacks and Whites, Du Bois held a hope and view of a world which was free of oppression and exploitation and produced an equitable distribution of the Earth's fruits.

Mr. Harding is most noted for his book, "There is a River", a critically acclaimed history of Black struggle against colonialism and slavery. The book is credited for its effectiveness in correcting the popular myth that Blacks willingly and complacently accepted the yoke of colonialism and the brutality of slavery.

According to Harding, "Du Bois was part of that traditon of struggle, the tradition of Frederick Douglass and others. He is in turn inspired many of his contemporaries: Martin Luther King, Malcom X and a host of others."

When questioned, Harding characterized Jesse Jackson's campaign as part and parcel of that traditon and Du Boisian philosophy which is essentially characterized by the belief that the uplift of Black Americans will have a ripple effect of social awareness and enlightenment in this country and a merge with the human rights struggles throughout the world, particularly in South Africa and the Third World.

The University of Massachusetts has stewardship over many of the works and writings of W.E.B. Du Bois. Harding believes we should not only value what we have, but we should utilize it to its fullest extent.

Responsibilities

by Tracey Bryant

As Stevie Wonder said in his message to Black college students: "These times we live in are not full of hope. Yet they are not hopeless. We must uncover the formula for survival that will refresh our souls and uplift our spirits. We must search for the harmony that records the rhythms of our brothers and sisters. The world is but an orchestra and we've all been blessed to be members. Life is an assignment form the Creator. We are all responsible for the production of life's symphony which will ring out harmony among us all. We are charged with the understanding that each of us has an instrument and we must play it carefully....for if we do not, we bear the responsibility for this off-key music....Know that your responsibilities as a Black college student in the symphony of life are awesome tasks....Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. knew the musical score. He had the music and many willing players."

Jesse Jackson was one of those players. And unlike many of them who were willing then to follow, but are not willing to continue breaking new ground; unlike many of them who were willing to hide in the shadow of Dr. King's dignity, but not pick up the gauntlet when he was laid to rest. Jesse Jackson has not allowed himself to be impeded by the threat of public or political ridicule. He has not plea-bargained away the needs and rights of people for a little corner of respect. As many did!

Many who asked us to follow, their direction, their guidance; many who stood beside Dr. King, behind Dr. King, around Dr. King, asking for control of our power, have settled for polite smiles (more for themselves than for all of us) as opposed to real power. Jackson was asking then and is asking now for people empowerment, equality, not manners. He is asking people to get involved - be powerful for themselves; to utilize themselves to their best interests.

Many of us have been dormant, as we have been asked to be. And many people rest easier knowing we are dormant; because they realize that sleeping power is not power at all. And potential never effected anything.

The longer we sleep, the greater the chance we will never wake up. Those asking us to lie dormant, are not simply asking, they are actually. That is why Jesse is saying "Wake up, wake up and in the words of Marcus Garvey, "Arise, ye [illegible]

Jackson Speaks of a New Generation

The term "New Generation" has become a cliche because it has not been analyzed and explored for its proper meaning. There is nothing unusual or unique, as such, about a new generation. It is simply the end product of a generation of young people who, by timing of birth, have come of age. So each "new generation" is new by birth and without effort. It is something whith which they had nothing to do and about which they can do nothing.

The uniqueness of each generation is what it does -what responsibilities it either assumes or shirks. The greatness of a person or a generation is determined by the real needs that are served. Everybody cannot be famous, because everybody cannot be well-known. But everybody can serve. Serving the needs of its day will make this generation, not just new but a greater generation.

Students in Germany in the 1940s were a great generation because they organized a resistance movement against the atrocities of Nazi Germany. American students, sensing the repression of McCarthyism in the 1950s, fought for freedom. The student generation of the 1960s marched, demonstrated, sat-in and went to jail en masse to break down the barriers of segregation and end a war for which there was never a moral justification.

The challenge of this generation is to protect the gains of the past and close the educational and economic gaps in our society.

Lastly,the New Generation must excel because of the joy and julfillment that comes in the victory of conquering a taks and doing it well against the odds. We must resist being servile, but we must accept the challenge to be of service.

Work must be seen as having value even beyond the money involved - though we should certainly fight for livable wages for the work that we do. There is a dialectic involved-opportunity on the one hand and effort on the other. Effort must exceed opportunity for change to occur.

A series of assassinations, the war in Vietnam, Watergate and an economy in trouble have created a civilizational crisis which has at its core the loss of moral authority - the loss of believability, of trustworthiness.

The challenge of this New Generation of adults is to regain the confidence of this New Generation's youth.

On the same note he said that President Reagan's commission didn't find any hunger because there were no hungry people on the commission. He said "How are people unfamiliar with something going to locate it."

Turning to local issues he compared a Springfield newspaper which said that Massachusetts found harmful levels of EDB and banned it, while a Hartford paper said that state tests (in Connecticut) found the levels 'acceptable.' Gregory told the audience that he had friends who knew something was wrong with "the Devil's food cake" before the tests "because the roaches wouldn't eat it."

He also said that people value their cars more than their bodies and their children. "Take care of your bodies," intoned Gregory.

He cited the high proportion of hysterectomies in America and told people to keep control of their bodies and get a second and if necessary, third opinion. Gregory said that women should insist that contraceptive usage be alternated between men and women.

Women need to get integrity over their bodies, said Gregory. "Rape has increased 98 per cent since television. Five-year old boys see car commercials with women standing next to the car; and by the time he's twenty and gets a girl in the car, he thinks it goes along with it."

Women need to tell the people who make commercials - "if you ever use me as a sex symbol, we'll call a national boycott," said Gregory. "The whole Civil Rights and King movement started because a Black woman said "no." It would have been a hell of a day if she had said 'no one listens to me.' "

He said that Black people need to stop playing the "athletics game" because a Black person's chances of being a professional athlete are one in 42,000. "Liberation will not come by what you got out here (-clothing and style), but by what you've got in here (-the mind)," said Gregory pointing to his head.

He also told the audience that Black people handle 155 billion dollars a year. "If we were a separate nation we'd be the fifth or sixth most powerful nation in the world," said Gregory.

According to Gregory, other minority monies in America turn over in their neighborhoods a minimum of seven times, a maximum of eleven times, but"Black money stays in the Black neighborhood seven hours." He said that we spend all of our money on records, bubblegum and potato chips; "and don't even demand that the potato chip companies hire us!"

"If we used 10 per cent of that money we could wipe out unemployment in our neighborhoods. Are you buying Black art? Then who is? Are you buying Black literature?...," asked Gregory.

Gregory said that instead of humiliating another Black person, Black fraternities and sororities should be getting together to make sure that the caps and pins they wear are made by Blacks. "You don't even question whether the diamonds and gold in the pins were from South Africa," he continued. "Your Black brothers and sisters in South Africa do not need your ability to get revenge after they're dead. They need your love and affection, your ability to manipulate the system to keep them alive."

Gregory ended by saying, "Somewhere you can make that difference. You have to make that difference."

Students for Jackson

by Tracey Bryant

The Students for Jesse Jackson (SJJ) are committed to informing the public of Rev. Jesse Jackson's position on prominent issues in the Democratic Presidential nomination race. They also are trying to build a wide base of support for Jackson at the University, while assisting like efforts at other schools in the Five College area.

Their constitution states, "Upon Jackson's victory in securing the Presidential nomination, our organization shall then turn our collective efforts toward victory in the 1984 Presidential election."

Although their purpose seems broad and open, their by-laws are strict:

No member shall engage in the destruction or desecration of any opposing candidate's campaign literature or property.

No member shall slander or libel any member or candidate of another campaign organization or party.

All members accepting campaign contributions must report and turn over such funds immediately to the office of the Treasurer.

All statements and activities related to the group shall be of open and honest intent so as to ensure the organization's credibility.

If you would like to be involved in the Jackson campaign, the SJJ committee would like to hear from you. Call the Office of Third World Affairs at 545-2517.

Organizational membership is open to all University of Massachusetts undergraduates. Honary membership is open to the general public. All members can vote!

The committee urges everyone to register to vote and to become involved in the Jackson campaign. Any help is welcome.

Nat Turner

by Donette Wilson

Nat Turner, "the prophet of God" in the 1800's, is mostly remembered for his famous rebellion. He was born in Southampton County, Virginia in 1831. Turner was highly respected because of his ability to read and preach the gospel of the Lord.

Turner played with white children until the age of eleven. Then Turner had to go to the fields and work just like any other black slave. Being a great follower of God, Turner felt that he was placed on the earth to end this injustice of slavery.

Turner waited for a sign from God; when that sign appeared Turner was to do what was to be done. In February of 1831, the sign came in the form of a solar eclipse.

Turner then gathered his followers and went into the town and killed slave owners and their families. After killing about 60 whites and being in hiding for about 3 days, Turner was hung on November 11 in a town called Jerusalem.

Turner's insurrection was a landmark in the history of slavery."

From Home Boy to Revolutionary

by Curtis Haynes

The development of Malcolm X's philosophy of Black nationalism was a direct result of his growing up within a racist society, and his learned desire to throw off the negative affects that he had encountered. His quest was to attain his highest potential and to help his people reach theirs.

Malcolm's first encounter with the philosophy of Black nationalism was during his early life. Malcolm Little was born in Omaha, Nebraska, on May 19, 1925. His father, the Reverend Earl Little, was a Baptist minister, and a dedicated follower and organizer of Marcus Garvey's nationalist Universal Negro Improvement Association (U.N.I.A.).

This movement preached of Black race purity and exhorted the Negro masses to return to their ancestral African homeland. Malcolm's contact with his father was cut short by his untimely death (which was widely believed to have been a lynching because of his teachings of Garvey's philosophy).

At an early age his aspirations of becoming a lawyer were wiped out by a teacher at school who told him that it was foolish to have such ideas. Subsequently he dropped out of school at the age of fifteen.

It was in his teen years that Malcolm first lived in a the city of Boston, Massachusetts. It was here that Malcolm set his goals to become one of the "baddest" street hustlers ever.

Malcolm outgrew Boston and saw that he could further develop himself as a hustler on the streets of Harlem, New York. The hustling life took its toll on Malcolm and he soon discovered that what he thought was the most glorified life possible for a man, was nothing more than a dead-end street.

He had reached the top of the "so called" underworld but his use of drugs and the competition from the other young street hustlers, who were trying to take his place, brought him tumbling back down to reality.

At the age of twenty-one he was sent to prison for burglary. This fate would lead him to yet another view of his place in life.

Malcolm's whole period of development as a hustler is an example of his struggle for a "higher form of existence" within his narrow sphere of knowledge and logic. It was not until he found himself in jail, and after his life on the streets, that Malcolm came back in contact with the idea of Black nationalism.

He was converted to the Nation of Islam (Black Muslims), a religious ,Black nationalism professed through the teachings of Elijah Muhammad which taught that the white man was the devil and that all the Black man's problems were caused by the white man. To the mind of a broken street hustler the words of Elijah Muhammad seemed to be the logical answer to the black man's plight.

This sent Malcolm upon a new set of goals, of reaching his highest potential within the Nation of Islam. These goals required him to learn the teachings of Elijah Muhammad, to follow them, and to spread the word to others. To Malcolm, this was the answer.

It was within this stage of development that Malcolm became conscientiously able to weed out the different contradictions within himself which did not go along with the teachings of Islam. Malcolm created a discipline within himself which he felt was necessary for his own liberation, and a discipline which he felt other Blacks must gain if they were to be free.

Malcolm's goal was to liberate the Black man from his bondage, something he knew he had to do internally first. When he left prison in 1952, he dedicated himself to building the Black Muslims, and adopted the name, Malcolm X. As he developed as a Black Muslim he was thrown into national and world limelight as the spokesman for a "religious sect" which white America feared and many Black youth admired.

Malcolm would have continued along the paths as a Black Muslim but his faith was shattered in his leader whom he discovered was hypocritical to his own teachings. Elijah Muhammad feared the popularity that Malcolm was getting while spreading the words of the Nation of Islam.

Events finally led to Malcolm being ejected from the Nation of Islam in March 1964, forcing him to evaluate where he stood in regards to his struggle for the liberation of the Black man. When he left the movement he organized first the Muslim Mosque, and later the non-religious Organization of Afro-American Unity.

During 1964 Malcolm made two trips to Africa and the Middle East thus broadening the perception of his struggle and changing his perception of the contradictions necessary to be eliminated internally, to reach this goal.

Within his broadening of consciousness, his goal was still to reach his highest potential, i.e. playing his part in the liberation of the Black people, but he was now able to see how this was to affect the liberation of all men and women and it was from this view that he tried to reassess his avenues necessary to reach this goal.

"WHAT DOES BLACK HISTORY MONTH MEAN TO YOU?"

Nadie Pierre, class of '87,
an Engineering major said:
"To me Black History Month is a chance for Blacks to unite, get back together, have a sense of Black pride; to show what Black culture is about and how Black awareness has extended throughout the years.
We have more of an equal chance than we did 20-30 years ago. It's really togetherness; a chance to celebrate and show what we have as opposed to what we didn't have a few years back. Now we even have a Black man running for president."

Laurie O'Keefe, class of '87,
a Political Science major said:
"I don't know. So Black people can get an idea of their culture. It doesn't really mean much to me. I'll go and watch the dances and stuff."

Sylvia Kinn, class of '84,
a Psychology major said:
"Black History Month is an opportunity for Black people to learn about their past, their present, and also their future.
I think it is unfortunate that we have to have a separate month, because I thnk everybody should learn about Black history, along with American white history.
I think it is very important because until we know where we come from, we will not know where we are going.
It is also important for young Black children to know that Black people have made important contributions to history."

Kimberly Fletcher, class of '87,
a Fashion Marketing major said:
"A time for Black people to recognize their culture, roots, and history. A special time of year for everyone to get together and recognize where they're from, and learn things about themselves."

"Black History Month is a time where we all remember important things about Blacks, slavery and their past. To contemplate and ponder it and hope things will be better for Blacks, and other minorities, and women."

Geoffrey Holder will be performing at Bowker Auditorium on Feb. 27.

Geoffrey Holder, a man of many talents such as choreographer, writer, dancer, director, designer, cook and composer. Holder, especially noted for his acting achievements, will be performing in "Instant Theater" an evening with Geoffrey Holder at Bowker Auditorium, February 27, at 8:00 p.m. Admission is free.

A native of Port au Prince, Trinidad, Holder says he received all his education in the arts from his brother Boscoe, who is also a painter, dancer, musician and choreographer.

Holder came to this country to audition for Sol Hurok within two months he had become the principal dancer in "House of Flowers" on Broadway. Holder married dancer Carmen de Lavallade, they subsequently became principal dancers at the Metropolitan Opera appearing in "Aida," "La Perichole," "Samson and Delilah," and other productions. A Guggenheim Fellowship enabled him to turn his attention to painting and this, he says, led naturally into costume and set design. "The stage is a canvas," he says "Picasso, Dali, Ben Shahn all designed sets." Conversly, "Painting, dancing and music are all forms of theatre." Instant theater is just that theater in an instant. One minute, there is dancing in the aisles, the next a fatherly lecture on family values and the importance of home life. Holder works an audience as a master puppeteer pulls the strings. Instant theater is a must-see attraction so don't miss it!!

Since that time it has always been a struggle for Black Affairs and Nummo. Practically every year the Collegian has taken measures to either cut back or eliminate the two Third World organizations. Ask any previous Black Affairs Editor who has had to struggle with editors that wanted the page for advertisement. Come down to the Collegian any Sunday when the staff of *Nummo*is there. Sometimes the tension can get so thick that it seems like it's going to explode and a couple of times it has.

In am in no way referring to the entire Collegian staff. There are staff people who have been very helpful and supportive. However, I am referring to the organization as a whole and it seems apparent, at least to this writer, that the Collegian has been working against the best interest of the Third World community and in turn the community as a whole. So be aware, read the newspaper and keep abreast of the situation with Ms. Betances. If things continue the way they have in the past six months, the events that occurred in 1975 may have to be repeated.

In 1978, 300 Native Americans began the "Longest Walk" to protect treaty rights. Nummo News is printing the following poem to commemorate that spirit.

I WALK IN THE HISTORY OF MY PEOPLE

by Chrystos

There are women locked in my joints for refusing to speak to the police
My red blood full of those arrested in flight, shot
My tendons stretched brittle with anger do not look
In my marrow are hungry faces who live on land the whites don't want
In my marrow women who walk 5 miles every day for water
In my marrow the swollen faces of my people who are not allowed to hunt to move to be

On the scars on my knee you can see children torn from their families
bludgeoned into government schools
You can see through the pins in my bones that we are prisoners of a long war

My knee is so badly wounded no one will look at it
The pus of the past oozes from every pore
The infection has gone on for at least 300 years
My sacred beliefs have been made pencils, names of cities, gas stations
My knee is wounded so badly that I limp constantly
Anger is my crutch
My knee is wounded
See
How I Am Still Walking

Fed-up students begin fasting for frat's survival

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Nine Amherst College students began a four-day fast at lunch time yesterday in an attempt to show the college's Board of Trustees they are taking the issue of abolishing the school's fraternity system seriously.

"Our hope is that the trustees take the decision as seriously as we do, that's basically what we're here for," said Bradley Whitman, 19, a Psi Upsilon fraternity member who began the fast.

He and eight others, two of them women, will subsist only on water and diluted fruit juice until 1 p.m. Saturday, when the trustees are scheduled to meet to discuss and make a recommendation on a proposal to abolish the 624 member, eight house co-ed fraternity system.

The fast follows Monday's sit-in in the office of college President G. Armor Craig, which gained national media coverage but no response from the Amherst administration. The students are charging the administration with disregard for student interests.

Chi Psi fraternity secretary and fast participant Robert Hecht said the trustees have disregarded a student poll taken last fall, which showed 85 percent of the student body to be in favor of keeping the fraternity system.

"It seems like the administration and the trustees have kind of shrugged them (the results)," he said. "It's hard to know what they know and what they're going to weigh . . .we want to show them the decision is very important to us."

But college spokesperson Wilson Douglas said the administration received 190 letters on the subject from students, which were forwarded to the trustees and "taken into account certainly."

"The trustees were quite deliberate in seeking opinions from students as well as faculty and alumni," he said.

Wilson said the administration has issued no response to the students protests because they have not been asked to do so.

"Both (sit-in and the fast) seemed to be relatively peaceful and quiet protests that seemed not to be disrupting the work of the college," Wilson said. "They are ways of expressing a point of view."

"Apparently the students are conducting the fast in such a way (drinking juice) they should be out of danger," he added.

Meanwhile, in other fraternity-related news, two editors of the Amherst Student, the colleges student newspaper, resigned yesterday over an editorial written by the paper's senior board. That editorial "criticized the sit-in and the fast before each event took place and we feel that it was done in a slightly improper way," said Keith Dawson, 19, a sophomore English major from New York who had been an opinion editor at the paper.
Dawson stressed that his action, and that of roommate Aaron Scharf, production manager, did not try to deny the authority of the editors responsible, but was simply "a way of expressing my disagreement."

Dawson said the editorial in question was written only by the paper's senior board, after the entire board was divided on the issue and wrote an editorial titled "More dialogue needed in fraternity debate." While both editorials ran, the senior editorial was placed in a more prominent place in the paper, he said.

Amherst Student chairwoman Anne Marie McGowan was unavailable for comment.

Area Govs. shun SGA Constitution

Panel lacks residential backing

By LISA-MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

In an unexpected move, the Sylvan and Orchard Hill Area Governments Monday rejected the recently passed Student Government Association (SGA) Constitution.

The vetos are in protest of no residential area representation on the SGA appointed committee, which is expected to review the document with administrators next week, said Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) co-president Mike Altneu.

"We love the constitution, and we would fully endorse it," Altneu said yesterday, but "I am opposed to the self-appointed committee."

According to existing constitutional bylaws, four of the five area governments must ratify the new draft before the SGA can officially present the document to the UMass Board of Trustees.

The four member committee, which includes Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate Chris Sullivan, treasurer Eric Nitzsche, and SGA co-presidents Charlene Allen and Tom Ahern, was approved by the senate last week. All of the members of the committee are commuter students.

Altneu said "We want to make sure on-campus students are not short-changed" during bargaining between the administration and students regarding the constitution.

Central, Northeast, and Southwest Area Governments are expected to meet later this week to discuss the constitution and the review board.

The Sylvan and OHAG decisions were based on a recommendation sent out Sunday from the United Areas Council (UAC), a residential government collective, Altneu said.

Bob Kievra, a UAC spokesperson, said the problem is "definitely not with the content of the constitution" but solely with the makeup of the elected board.

"Basically UAC thinks this is the only possible measure to get people from residential areas on the board," said Kievra.

Nitzsche said he is prepared to give up his seat to a residential person.

"I was never opposed to having a residential area member on the board," Nitzsche said. "I think it is a good idea."

According to Nitzsche, a motion calling attention to the conflict will be brought before the senate at tonight's meeting.

UMass psych Prof. gets board position

By GLORIA ROSADO
Collegian Correspondent

Bonnie R. Strickland, a clinical psychologist and professor of psychology at the University of Massachusetts has been appointed to the Advisory Council for the National Institute of Mental Health by the Federal Secretary of Health and Human Services, Margaret Heckler.

"I am very excited about the appointment. In many ways the needs of the mentally ill have not been addressed. This council allows me the opportunity to raise concerns and to speak forcefully on behalf of those individuals who have not been well served by present programs," Strickland said.

The Council is a 12 person panel composed of selected mental health professionals and public representatives of consumer groups active in the field of mental health.

The Council meets four times yearly, as the final review group for grants and contracts funded by the institute. The Council, working with the institute, provides leadership for the federal effort in the promotion of mental health, the administration of training programs to meet national mental health personnel needs, and the provision of technical services to states and communities.

This semester, as part of the Chancellor's Lecture Series, Strickland will deliver a lecture on "Gender Differenes in Health and Illness" at UMass on March 8, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

In conjunction with the lecture there will be a brief presentation in which Strickland will be awarded the chancellor's medal, the highest honor bestowed on individuals who have rendered exemplary and extraordinary service to UMass at Amherst.

Strickland is the recipient of numerous awards and honors. She is also involved in various professional activities through the American Psychological Association.

She has been president of the Division of Clinical Psychology, chair of the National Council of Graduate Departments of Psychology, chair of the Board of Professional Affairs and committee chair-elect of the Policy and Planning Board of the American Psychological Associations. She has also testified on behalf of increased funding for the social and behavioral sciences and clinical training on at least two occasions before federal congressional committees.

Strickland said, "Congressman Silvio O. Conte has been a major figure in the support of research and clinical training funds in mental health."

Strickland received her B.S. from Alabama College, and graduated with highest honors. She received both her M.A. in psychology and Ph.D. in clinical psychology from Ohio State University. Strickland joined the UMass at Amherst faculty in 1973. From 1976-77 and from 1978 until 83, she served as chair of the department of psychology. She also served a one-year term as senior advisor and associate to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

Sandanista elections to be held Nov. 4 Marxist democracy to remain a force

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist Sandinista government said yesterday it will hold nationwide elections Nov. 4, three months earlier than expected. But it insisted that Marxism would remain a part of "Sandinista democracy."

"We do not accept democracy that is ordered by the U.S. government," said Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the governing junta, an apparent reference to U.S. pressure for open elections.

Nov. 4 is two days before the U.S. general election.

Ortega spoke to an estimated 130,000 people in the Plaza of the Revolution to mark the 50th anniversary of the death of guerrilla hero Augusto Cesar Sandino, the Sandinistas' namesake.

Ortega also announced:

-The president, vice-president and legislature will take office Jan. 10, 1985, for six-year terms.

-The voting age will be lowered from 18 to 16.

He did not mention the state of emergency, in effect since March 1982, which has restricted political activity because of what the government said was the threat of a U.S. or US.-supported invasion.

Opposition parties say they will boycott the elections unless the government lifts the emergency and press censorship, respects human rights and cuts links between the official party — the Sandinista National Liberation Front — and government security forces.

Citing the costs in lives and damage from U.S.-backed rebels, Ortega said, "We don't want that democracy that used power to threaten and attack those who do not follow its imperialist designs."

"We don't want that kind of democracy where only 30 percent of the population vote," he added. "For us democracy is for the people. ...For us democracy is the agrarian reform. For us democracy is rights for the worker."

Hart's second place finish brings rebirth to campaign

WASHINGTON AP — Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Gary Hart plans to exploit his second place finish in the Iowa caucuses by working hard in New Hampshire and then waging a "guerrilla campaign" to nibble away at Walter F. Mondale's big lead and well-financed organization.

"We are not going to play by Mondale's rules," Oliver Henkel, Hart's campaign manager, said in an interview Tuesday. "We are going to go our own way."

Meanwhile, in New Hampshire, the Colorado senator predicted that after that state's primary election next Tuesday, he will replace Sen. John Glenn as the principal rival to Mondale.

"I think this will be a two-person race and I'll win it," said Hart, who attracted 15 percent of Iowa Democrats compared with Mondale's 45 percent. Glenn had 5 percent for sixth place finish—behind four other candidates and an uncommitted slate.

At the very least, Hart said he will become known among millions of potential supporters nationwide and attract much more money to a campaign that has been low budget from the start.

But Hart's strategists concede that what happens after New Hampshire is another matter.

Even before the Iowa caucuses, Hart's organization in New Hampshire was rated second behind Mondale's and his fund-raising had tripled, compared with last fall and winter.

Hart has been gaining steadily in New Hampshire in polls taken among Democrats and independents, rising four points to 12 percent in a Boston Globe survey in late January, compared with 18 percent for Glenn.

Registration by mail may net 1.3 million voters

BOSTON — A decade long drive to let voters register by mail is being resurrected again this year by sponsors who charge the state has one of the most backward voter registrations in the country.

The growing coalition of labor, student and citizen activists asked the Legislature's Election Laws Committee yesterday to endorse mail-in voter registration to make it easier on working people, the handicapped and elderly.

It is the 10th year the bill has been filed, according to sponsors who estimate about 1.3 million potential voters are unregistered.

"We would hope to register at least half of those voters," said Joel Ario, Massachusetts Public Interest Research group attorney, at a news conference.

"There are many working people in this state who would be voting in elections if only it wasn't so damn hard to register to vote," State Labor Secretary Paul Eustace told the committee.

"Massachusetts is behind most of the country in opening up the registration process. It makes no sense at all for me to pretend we are holding down voter fraud when what we are really holding down is the number of people who could vote."

Between 63 percent and 65 percent of the eligible voters in Massachusetts are registered, according to officials, leaving about 1.3 million potential voters unregistered.

Other backers of the legislation included Massachusetts Fair Share, the League of Women Voters, the AFL-CIO, the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers, State Student Association of Massachusetts, 9 to 5, CPPAX, Women in Politics '84, and Boston-based Operation Big Vote.

Secretary of State Michael Connolly also endorsed the idea.

Doe West, Boston handicapped affairs commissioner, added, "There is no way that many of the physically, emotionally and mentally disabled of this municipality can go in and make that effort to register to vote because of architectural or attitudinal barriers. This would overcome that."

Former Governor sights problems of current drinking age

BOSTON -- The first hour in jail is the most dangerous for a scared teen-ager just arrested for drunken driving, former Gov. John Volpe told a legislative panel studying jail suicides yesterday.

"The same individual that might drink and drive with reckless abandon will collapse when imprisoned," Volpe said.

Volpe, who chaired a Special Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving last year, said suicide is the second highest cause of death for teen-agers after motor vehicle accidents.

Both causes of death contribute to making the age group between 15 and 24 years old the only one in the country that has not seen an increase in life expectancy, he added.

Volpe told the Special Commission on Suicide in Municipal Detention Centers that he supports a national drinking age of 21 years old. But, he said, he wants to give states two years to raise the drinking age first.

"I think 40 states would pass laws raising the drinking age," Volpe said, "then I see no problem with the federal government passing a law and saying, 'you other 10 get in line.' The law will be enforced better if passed by the states."

The commission, which is preparing recommendations on how to prevent jail suicides, also heard from parents of young suicide victims.

Harvard business students feeling school's computer crunch

CAMBRIDGE, Harvard Business School students are being urged strongly to either to own a personal computer or have easy access to one, school officials say.

Business school officials said Monday they struck a deal with International Business Machines to provide the computers at a discount to the school's 780 first-year students next fall.

IBM and Harvard officials declined to disclose the discounted price. The machines retail for about $2,700.

F. Warren McFarlan, a professor at the graduate school and chairman of the first-year MBA program, said the computer's cost would be a factor in awarding financial aid.

"We are strongly urging every one of our first-year students to acquire a machine," said McFarlan, who said the university's 120-member middle management classes have been required to use personal computers for the last year.

"We found a remarkable difference in quality of work between students using computers in their rooms and those using time share terminals."

Theta Chi to get new start

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A group of University of Massachusetts students are planning to bring the Theta Chi fraternity back to campus after it was disbanded a year and a half ago due to suspension.

Theta Colony has been recognized by UMass this semester according to, Greek Affairs Coordinator, Michael Schardein who said the group may be incorporated into the fraternity system as early as next semester.

Theta Chi lost its charter in the summer of 1982 when Umass officials decided that the members of the organization had not met stated objectives regarding life in the fraternity. The action came after a fight fraternity members were involved in.

A colony is formed with the intent of eventually trying to gain admittance into the national chapter. The colony has the same powers as a fraternity but cannot vote on the Interfraternity Council or initiate members.

Schardein said that "about 25-35 students" are interested in restoring Theta Chi. The groups involved include students currently boarding at the house (which is still owned by Theta Chi alumni) and other groups including some students interested in engineering.

A list of requirements by the national headquarters would have to be met when the colony applies for readmittance in the Fall.

"I am reasonably confident that the colony will gain acceptance," Schardein said. "They're a good group of students with good ideas and policies for the future."

"The approach of the fraternity when the incident occurred was to suspend the charter and start from scratch. I think this approach will work if everyone is committed to bringing in good members and instituting good foundations," Schardein said.

"Our goal at Greek Affairs is to eventually have 10 percent of the students here at UMass involved in the Greek system."

"We have several other plans in motion for bringing in other fraternities in the future," he said.

UMass currently has 14 fraternities and nine sororities, including the Theta Colony.

"The Theta Colony is a step in the right direction for us in Greek Affairs."

"Hopefully all will go well with their plans." he said.

Conn. police nab rape suspect

A man suspected by Amherst police of abducting and raping a 17-year-old Connecticut resident in Amherst was arrested in Connecticut yesterday morning, police said.

Stephen Shields, 30, a runaway from a Connecticut halfway house, was arrested about 3 a.m. and tentatively charged with the rape which allegedly occurred in Amherst on February 10.

Amherst police detectives were summoned Tuesday by Connecticut State Police, who were helping in the investigation, to start extraditing Shields, who has been at-large since a warrant was issued for his arrest last Thursday by Amherst police. No arraignment date or official charge has been given to Shields, because police must wait until their request for transporting him from Connecticut to Amherst and the Hampshire District Court is granted.

Shields could be arraigned as early as this week, or as late as 90 days, according to a district attorney's office official.

Police said Shields allegedly forced the Connecticut resident to drive her car from a parking lot near her home to Amherst, where he raped her. Amherst police were given a description of Shields by the victim, and notified Connecticut State Police that there was reason to believe the suspect knew the area between the Connecticut border and Amherst.

Childcare and off-campus housing head service

Commuter collective surviving

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Despite the lack of a working governing board, the Commuter Collective continues to provide service and advocacy for off-campus undergraduate students.

As a Recognized Student Organization (RSO), the Commuter Collective partially finances both the Off-Campus Housing Office (OCHO) and University Childcare.

The Collective is also responsible for the commuter lounge, located at the rear of the Hatch, student lockers for commuters, and working with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority for bus service.

Professional staff member Jose Tolson said, "Our commitment to childcare has been very consistent since 1976. We contribute part of our own budget to childcare services and help advocate increased funding and commitment from other sources for childcare.

"We also work very closely with OCHO, whose purpose is to aid students in securing affordable, well-maintained housing," Tolson said.

This semester, OCHO is distributing A Guide to Your Responsibility As a Landlord and Tenant in the Town of Amherst, which covers "almost every aspect of classic landlord-tenant relationships."

Each semester the Collective also publishes Commuter News, a newsletter designed to keep commuters informed of the Collective's activities.

"This semester we're hoping to print a second issue during the first week of April so that we can improve communications with commuters. Besides a survey we just completed, we're putting together a more extensive survey to be included in the newsletter," Tolson said.

In addition to helping commuter students, Collective officers are required by their constitution to "be committed to programs and actions which are non-sexist and non-rascist." The Collective is also sponsoring the Progressive Film Series, several events for Black History Month and some political caucuses.

It is this aspect of the Collective that draws some criticism as being outside the realm of their purpose.

"This is the only area government that I'm aware of that has a prescribed idealogy that one must adhere to in order to remain part of that group. It's not that I disagree with their non-rascist, non-sexist declaration or their political advocacy, but I'd like to see these things approved by their constituency," said student Sen. Bill Collins of Southwest.

"From 1976 through the fall of 1982, when we had an acting board, all of our projects were approved by the elected board and were open to criticism. We now have a mandate from the student senate to continue our work while we make up a new board of governors," Tolson said

"As far as I'm concerned, we have a clear purpose as a temporary board to resolve our problems. Those students with criticism were able to voice it at the senate meeting last week and will be able to do so when our new board is in place.

"One of our bigger problems has been communication with commuter students. We're trying to resolve this by printing an additional newsletter each semester, conducting surveys of commuter opinion, and creating an outreach program to recruit commuters to work with us and provide input," Tolson said.

ECE dept. to discipline student cheats

By STEWART RONALDSON
Collegian Correspondent

A policy to enforce maximum penalties for academic dishonesty is now in effect in the electrical and computer engineering department (ECE) at the University of Massachusetts. According to a memo from the ECE Undergraduate Program Director Leonard Bobrow.

In response to an increase of cheating, the new policy mandates that action be taken against individuals who have been caught cheating or exhibiting dishonesty, while University policy allows for sanctions to be taken on a case-by-case basis.

The university's regulations state, "students are expected not to give or receive help during tests; not to submit papers or reports (that are supposed to be original work) which are not entirely their own; and to site source materials properly."

Penalties for ECE students involved in any of these acts will include failure in the course, a statement, that the student has been found guilty of cheating, is put on the students record, and action to expel the student from the University will begin.

Bobrow said the memo was not designed to intimidate students, but rather to inform them that this behavior "damages the integrity of the entire department and must be prevented."

He said he hopes that the memorandum will serve as the deterrent, rather than using students as examples, and that accused students will be given an opportunity to appeal their case.

To appeal, the student first must approach the professor to state his or her defense. If the problem cannot be solved on that level, the next step is to meet with the department head, and then the Board of Appeals.

Incidents rarely get past the professor, says Bobrow, because "the evidence is iron clad, students usually end up admitting their guilt."

Bobrow attributed the increase in cheating in the ECE department to increased class size.

"Over the recent semesters, the class sizes have increased dramatically which leads to increased ease in glancing over to the student next to you," he said.

He also noted that glancing during exams is the most common offense.

Skills Center helping deprived

by IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Students with learning disabilities can complete college with the help of instruction and counseling offered by the University of Massachusetts Communications Skills Center.

Shirley DeShields, who has directed the center since it opened in 1973, said the program assists "students for whom traditional teaching has not been successful."

Learning disabilities include poor word recall; trouble distinguishing phonetic sounds and sequencing letters, syllables or digits; and difficulty in comprehensive reading or coherent writing. Many people, DeShields said, have "difficulty in processing language -- not just English, but any language."

Many of the students who seek the center's help are self-referred. Others are advised to do so by professors or tutors, she said.

First-time visitors are asked to complete a five-page "developmental profile," said Shields. They then may be given a diagnostic and or neurological tests by graduate students from the communications disorders department and professionals paid for with federal grant money.

Each day, about 10 students come to the Center, located in the Bartlett basement, for tests or counseling. The center tested close to 1000 students last semester.

Ninety students are now enrolled in the center's special classes listed in the UMass course offerings which include "Writing the Research Paper," "College Reading Skills," "Structural Fundamentals of Writing" and "Contemporary Word Usage."

DeShields stressed that these are not remedial or "slow" courses. Most of the students, she said, have "substantially above average IQ's. They are not people with less potential." Many have just one particular area of difficulty, she said.

"We structure our courses to focus on the college level, but our methods of teaching are different" from standard college classes, she said.

The center's writing courses, for example, use diagrams to break essays into structural components. This helps learning-disabled students understand organization and development of ideas, she said.

One student completed "Structural Fundamentals of Writing," and then took English 152, the UMass junior-level Rhetoric requirement and received a B grade.

DeShields said the term "learning disability" often unnecessarily carries a negative connotation. Perhaps "different learning styles" would be a better way to describe many students' problems, DeShields said.

Standard teaching is geared to people with left-dominated brains; this includes most people. But roughly one-third of the population is right-brain dominant, DeShields said.

People with right-dominant brains are much more susceptible to neurological dysfunctions such as dyslexia and to other difficulties with processing information and executing ideas, said DeShields. Thus they can be impaired academically.

The number of learning-disabled people attending college is steadily increasing. This includes many older students returning to school, and those who have had special grade and high-school instruction under Chapter 766, she said.

Such students now have easier access to UMass, said DeShields, thanks to Chapter 344, an amendment signed by Governor Michael S. Dukakis last August. Chapter 344 states that if a Massachusetts resident has been diagnosed as having a learning disability, he or she does not have to take SAT's or other standarized tests for admission to state-run colleges and universities.

Enrollment up this Spring ; GPA rising

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Students' improved academic performance and reduced inclination to transfer have resulted in the largest spring enrollment in years at the University of Massachusetts, the registar said yesterday.

Between 100 and 200 fewer students were academically suspended after the fall semester this year, and the overall University grade point average rose from 2.56 to 2.62, said Registrar Ralph Jones. That compares to a GPA increase from 2.55 to 2.56 a year ago, he said.

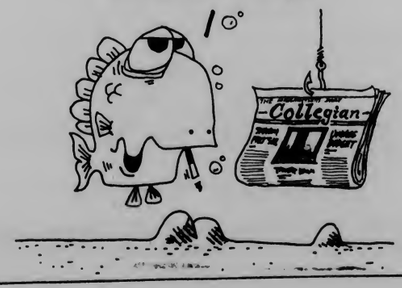
"Students are doing better in the classroom," Jones said.

Annually, between 1500 and 2000 students fall below the retention scale which calls for academic suspension, Jones said, though nearly two thirds to three quarters are reinstated before their studies' are interrupted. An academic dean may reinstate a student who has made significant improvement or has had an "overriding factor," such as an illness; those not reinstated by a dean can file a written request, or take time off and attend a community college, said Jones.

Enrollment this spring is at a peak 18,790, with last spring's attendance at 18,406, a jump from 17,960 in 1982. But the spring semester, "historically for the past 10-15 years," has enrolled between 800 and 1000 fewer students than the fall, Jones said. Last fall's enrollment leveled at 19,375, over the 19,070 students in fall '82.

Jones said an admissions practice of admitting fewer students to the College of Arts and Sciences as an alternative when the college to which they apply, such as business or engineering, is filled, has also contributed to the larger enrollment. With fewer students attending UMass who hope to gain acceptance to their preferred major but cannot by their junior year, fewer students are transferring out of UMass, he said.

And while the office is still processing course change forms from this semester, Jones noted the spring was a "very busy" period with possible effects on class overcrowding.



"The more students you have, the more seats you need in the classroom," he said.

And because of the increased student retention rate, much of which is concentrated in the sophomore and junior classes, next year's freshman class may experience a cut in admissions, as will transfers, said Jones.

But UMass must avoid the "pendulum" effect, where "top heavy" enrollment in the upper classes causes the need for a "significantly larger" freshman class once the upper classes grad7ate.

BDIC providing alternatives

By KERRY McINTYRE
Collegian Correspondent

For those who wish to design their own major, the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) is a program which offers students at the University of Massachusetts just that chance.

The program "allows students to put together their own program of study in various fields, which complement one another," said BDIC coordinator Susan P. Machala.

There are more than 150 students currently enrolled in the program, studying such majors as dance anatomy, legal journalism, marketing communication, interpreting and international business, wood industry management and eating disorders.

"In a sense we have as many majors as we have students, because each student's program is individually tailored," Machala said.

Albey Reiner, professor of microbiology and director of the BDIC program, said he recommends the program to "anyone who doesn't feel like settling for a major that's less than what they really want."

"We have many programs at the University, but what we have are convenient subdivisions made by humans, and no matter how many of these you have, there are always areas that are not encompassed," he said.

According to Reiner the BDIC program isn't an easy way out. In addition to core requirements, students must complete 12 three credit courses in their area of concentration. Of these credits, nine each semester must be upper division courses.

Thelma Canale-Parola, the acting assistant director of BDIC said the advantage of the program lies not in the course load, but in the students' motivation towards their self-designed course load.

"Many students do better in the second half of their academic program while in BDIC, because they're more motivated than they would be by a traditional major," she said.

To be admitted to the program, a student must submit a proposal of the intended area of study. Peer advisors are available in the BDIC office to help with the proposals. Since BDIC is a four semester program, it is recommended that students submit proposals no later than the second semester of their sophomore year.

The BDIC office is located in 15 Bartlett Hall, and office hours are from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and from 9 to 12 a.m. on Fridays.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The guilt of a non-rapist

Recently, my hungry suitemates and I were tired of waiting for a friend of ours to finish doing her laundry, so we decided to walk over to Franklin D.C. without her. We left a note on her door saying to meet us there for dinner as soon as she was done.

We sat eating at Franklin, always watching the line, so we could call her attention to the table when she came. She never came.

Strolling back to Sylvan, my friends and I started wondering what could have kept her. The answer we came up with was fear.

"She doesn't like walking to the D.C. alone," said Tom.

"And she especially doesn't like goin' alone in the dark," added John.

Don Lipper

I remembered I once heard someone say that women can never forget that half of each day, the world is covered in a terrible darkness. I looked around the lighted path, seeing the small groups of people walking here and there, I didn't feel particularly frightened. "This place doesn't look too bad," I said. "I mean its got lights and stuff. And there are some people walking around. It's pretty safe, isn't it?"

"Yeah," said John, "it's safe for us."

I thought it must be horrible to be afraid of the dark all your life, having a fear that reason and age confirms rather than dissipates. I wondered what it must be like to be taught to live in such fear.

I started doing some research into women's psychological responses to rape. I went to some of the women's centers in the community to see if they had literature I could read on the subject. The women greeted me with tense suspicion, making me feel even more awkward than I did before.

I read the materials they had for a few hours. I then spoke with a rape crisis counselor about women's general reactions to rape. She was very helpful, looking over my notes, suggesting different facets of rape I had never even considered. She gave me the name of books I should read, but said that even an enlightened male such as myself would never be able to know what it is like.

After a while I had to leave. I asked the crisis counselor her name, in case I had to call back and check on some facts. She gave me her first name and when I asked for her last, she would only give me her initial.

I left in a bit of a shock. If I was a woman, I'm sure I would have gotten a warmer reception. That woman would have given me her last name. But I was a man. I was the thing in the dark that my friend feared. It could be me or it could be any man. There was no way to be sure. To a woman, any man (even her husband with whom she has lived with for years) can suddenly become her rapist. It was at that point that I felt, one half of human kind lived in fear of the other half.

I returned to campus, ashamed of my sex. I couldn't look any women in the eye as I walked to my dorm. I turned my face from them in guilt. I felt the heavy burden of a barrier that would forever separate me and more than half of humanity.

Don Lipper is a UMass student.

Editor's response to racism charges

As the Editorial page editor, and the person responsible for printing the cartoon "that screamed racism," two Fridays ago, I feel compelled to respond. Much controversy has erupted surrounding the printing of the cartoon and the events that followed.

Josh Meyer

Editors of the Collegian, including myself have been accused of being not only ignorant and insensitive in deciding what to print, but of being racists ourselves. I apologize that the intent of the cartoon was misread, and seen as offensive to members of the community. It was seen as a detrimental attack on Democratic nominee candidate Jesse Jackson and on those people starving in Africa. The national syndicated cartoon (which, incidentally was printed in many papers of all political bents) was not meant to be racist by the author, and I certainly did not intend on printing offensive, or even objectionable material when I decided to print the cartoon. There are many Africans who do suffer at the expense of American and European multinational corporations. That was why I printed the cartoon; because it raised questions about the legitimacy of political contributions from outside the United States. My interpretation was that the cartoon was not a negative stereotype but a reflection of someone genuinely concerned with the problem of starvation in developing nations. To me, the cartoon had political implications, and that was all.

The cartoon did present a lie in that Rev. Jackson did not accept campaign funds from the Arab league; the funds were donated to Operation PUSH (People United to Save Humanity), an organization Jackson had been director of prior to his candidacy. Being an internationally syndicated cartoon, I assumed the allegation to be accurate, and for that I apologize.

The response to the cartoon by members of the UMass Third World community was overwhelming, which leads me to believe that I made a mistake in judgment. To say, however, that I intentionally, or even ignorantly, printed the cartoon is to make an untrue and unjustified personal attack.

To be aware means to not make stereotypical generalizations. Unfortunately that ideal has been completely neglected in this case. No critic even mentioned all the strong anti-racism articles and efforts that have been undertaken this year by the Collegian staff as a whole, and by myself as the Editorial Editor. If anyone had bothered to ask, they would have learned that I spent a good part of last year co-authoring a book on racism awareness training for people of all races so that they may better understand and address issues of prejudice and oppression. On the basis of this, and other efforts I have undertaken, it would be unfair to accuse me of racial ignorance and insensitivity.

It is very hard for an editor to judge how something printed will be perceived by the public. UMass is diverse enough to generate controversy over any issue. But the issue of racism that has been raised this time is a particularly ugly one because there are no two sides to the problem of racism. While the laws of segregation that legally subordinated blacks and other minorities have been repealed, racism still remains a subliminal cancer that plagues the majority of American citizens, black and white. Racial prejudice and oppression permeate the fabric of American society so deeply that sometimes those who claim to be most aware of the problems are the ones who are least willing to confront them in society and within themselves.

I strongly believe that myself, and the Collegian as a whole has confronted the issue. We hope to eliminate the type of attitudes that prompt the printing of racist material, but we also understand that in order to eradicate or discredit racist viewpoints, the issue of racism itself must be confronted, and brought into discussion in a public forum such as the Collegian editorial page. But to bring up any subject matter concerning racism is to risk having your own attitude towards it misjudged.

Each year, similar conflicts arise between the Collegian and groups on campus who feel they've been subject to adverse press coverage and prejudice. This time, eritics have charged that the Collegian is helping to ignite "a powder keg" that will explode, presumably into a situation of increased racial tension. We hope that this won't be the case, and will do everything in our power to encourage positive dialogue and improved relationships between ourselves and those we have offended — something beneficial to everyone.

Josh Meyer is the Collegian Editorial Editor

Editor's note: Yadira Betances, Collegian Black Affairs Editor, was reinstated by a unanimous vote of the Collegian Board of Editors. The suspension was merely a procedural act, and never denoted a desire to do any more than assess the situation as a group.

Letters

The other side was missing

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to the article titled "Student Group Charged with Forgetting Role", (Feb. 17). The article reported a debate which occured at the weekly SGA Senate meeting on Feb. 15. The argument centered on the request by the Commuter Collective Organization for approval of a temporary CCO Board, as the current elected board had failed and dissolved. As I understood it, the new board would allow the organization to carry on their day to day business, and to study, create and outline the structure for future boards.

I am very displeased with the strictly biased reporting of this event and I write to point out the reporting injustice. I realize the reporter is only human, but he sure blew this one! Both sides had some valid points and though there was mention of a heated debate - what happened to the other view? One Senator was consistently quoted voicing objections to the formation of the new board, yet during the course of the meeting there were about 20 different people who voiced opinions for and against this issue. The above mentioned Senator wasn't even expressing the majority opinion, as is shown by the fact that the request was passed.

The reporter is entitled to an opinion, but please save it for the Opinion page. This is the first Senate meeting I have sat in on and I now wonder how many other distorted articles have been printed. We count on objective reporting to inform us, as twenty thousand students can't feasibly attend each Senate meeting. I would like to thank the Commuter Collective for the services they provide and wish them luck in their transition period.

Editor's note: the reporter did quote two people supporting the resolution and tried to quote a third supporter, a quote omitted due to space limitations.

And Legal Service for all...

To the Editor,

The Legal Services Office at UMass is a free-service law office for all students who pay the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) or Graduate Senate Tax. The office is not only funded by student monies, but is also controlled by students through the undergraduate and graduate students who form the LSO Governing Board. This Board sets policy for the office and monitors its progress towards achieving the goals that it sets. As a board, we are committed to providing the best legal services possible.

The following then, is something we feel you should know as students, especially in light of the relative news black-out we've had in Massachusetts regarding the event. On February 9, 1984, the Legal Services Office Governing Board unanimously passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, the Legal Services Office at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has provided a major defense effort on behalf of Yvette Henry;

AND WHEREAS, the staff of the Legal Services Office in providing this defense has employed painstaking investigative efforts and worked substantial overtime hours, as well as otherwise vigorously pursuing and securing the cooperation of other University and state officers;

AND WHEREAS, the results of these actions by the Legal Services Office on behalf of Yvette Henry culminated in the successful defense for Yvette Henry against both criminal and University disciplinary charges;

AND WHEREAS, the Legal Services Office Governing Board recognizes that the staff of the Legal Services Office has diligently and unwaveringly represented the interests and rights of Yvette Henry to the fullest extent.

BE IT RESOLVED THEREFORE that the Legal Services Office Governing Board supports and commends the Legal Services Office for its effort on behalf of Yvette Henry, and hereby expresses its deep appreciation for the outstanding services provided by the Legal Services Office in this case; and for the dedication the Legal Services Office consistently demonstrates to the protection and furtherance of student rights, in accord with the mission and goals of the Legal Services Office and with the broader principles of justice.

Although we hope you are n victim[illegible] legal situation, let alone one of th[illegible]s of some comfort to you to know [illegible] there, there is a place to turn for high quality - and free - legal help.

Dakin N. Ferris, Chairperson
LSO Governing Board

Black Affairs

Cartoon's content clarified, suspension questioned

On February 16, 1984 Yadira Betances, Editor of Black Affairs Department of the Collegian was suspended from her position. I am happy to see that she has been reinstated. However one must question the circumstances surrounding this issue. I was once under the impression that Mr. Joel Myers, Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian and Mr. Josh Meyer, Editor of the Editorial-Opinion page were among us who consider themselves non-racist.

I have, in the past, respected these gentlemen, I now however, have lost confidence in them as fair individuals. My reason being on February 10, 1984 both of these gentlemen had the audacity to print an outright lie.

A cartoon stating that the Rev. Jesse Jackson had accepted campaign funds from the Arab League is completely untruthful. To set the record straight: a contribution was made to PUSH, People United to Save Humanity, a foundation Jackson worked with during the 60s. Secondly, Jackson has not accepted any kind of funding from foreign sources. Thirdly, it is illegal and punishable by prison if he were to do so.

So I ask you Mr. Editor-in-Chief, how come Mr. Meyers has not been suspended and terminated. Has he not done "a performance of official duties in a way to be injurious to the best interests of the newspaper", is it not the purpose of a newspaper to print the truth?

Editorial

As a result of this cartoon Ms. Betances, felt it necessary to voice her opinion on the racism the cartoon obviously contained. I question if Mr. Myerson is aware of Article I 10 of the United States Constitution which states "Congress shall make no law ...abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." Cases in Constitutional Law by Robert F. Cushman states "the liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every free man has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press..."

I interpret this as stating, one has the right through the press, to voice disagreement with an issue. I stress, with an issue, for I feel Ms. Betances did not maliciously attack the Collegian but was attacking the issue of racism. Racism, as long as it exists, will be a controversial subject. I do however dare to say that as long as the Collegian permits cartoons and or racist articles it will consequently continue to create animosity.

Editors, if you are planning to make a career in the journalism field I sincerely quest your credibility. Perhaps you should take another look at the value placed on your name and reputation since that is how your bread will be buttered.

Afro-Am: 15 years later

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Correspondent

To fulfill a lack of cultural education then existing at the University of Massachusetts, a group of graduate Third World students developed the Department of Afro-American Studies in 1969.

Ernie Allen, Associate professor and chairperson of the department said, the department first began as a program taught out of Herter Hall and became a separate department in 1970.

The department merged out of political and academic reasons. During the Civil Rights Movement, Black Americans began to struggle for desegregation, better housing, jobs, etc., he said.

The Afro-American conscience was raised in the process in terms of what was being taught in the schools, Allen said.

He said students realized what they were learning was not relevant to what was happening on a daily basis. "There was a great disparate between what was being taught at the University and what was happening in real life," Allen said.

"Blacks in American history were simply invisible," he said. What you have are the post Civil War stereotype images of blacks, he said. "You may get a blurb of the more well know Black Americans such as Booker T. Washington, George Washington Carver, or perhaps W.E.B. DuBois, but no real sense of Black Americans; who they are or where they came from," Allen said.

"It is in response to this, across the board, meaning the social sciences, the performing and graphic arts, history as well as literature, that led to the development of the department," he said. "There was a vacuum that had to be filled."

Black graduate students who are now professors in the department such as Ester and Eugene Terry, Michael Thelwell, and Ernie Allen, worked with a number of sensitive administrators and faculty members in establishing the department, he said.

The department suffered due to economic reasons in the mid 70s, Allen said. "Just recently, we have lost a number of faculty persons and have not been able to fill their position. As a matter of fact, that is what we are pushing for now," he said.

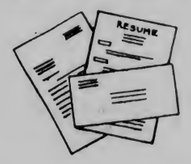
"But the department is not in any trouble," he continued, "the majority of the department is tenured. We are as secure as any department on campus," he said.

The Afro-American Studies Department is beginning to utilize advance technology in the classroom, Allen said.

"Video can be utilized in a much more wide spread way than ever in the past because of the dropping of cost," he said. "We are utilizing that now within the department and intend to do more in terms of intergrating that into existing courses as an audio-visual aid as well as developing new courses which will essentially revolve around that," he said. One example of this is the popular course "Racism in American Television" taught by professor Chester Davis, he said.

Sheila Wilkerson of the Governor's office will be presenting a proclamation for the naming of February 23 as W.E.B. DuBois Day in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts today at 3:30 in room 805 at the University of Massachusetts.

The ceremony will be attended by a representative from the Chancellor's Office, and by UMass professor David DuBois who will also be speaking.



There will also be a showing of a new film by UMass professor Homer Meade entitled Another View: Berkshire County's Black Revolutionary Patriots.

Sisters of survival- art that informs

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

A visit to the Student Union Gallery, located just a few steps away from the Earthfoods cafe and the Cape Cod Lounge, may change any previous conception you have had of art galleries as stuffy, inaccessible rooms in Boston filled with three Grecian urns, two 13th century paintings and hordes of screaming, bored grandbrats dragged around by red faced old ladies, exposing them to classical culture even if it killed them. Strolling through this gallery is painless and, in the case of some shows, extremely provocative.

The present show's theme, averting a nuclear holocaust, is just about as topical as you can get. The over 300 pieces of artwork that comprise the show were created and compiled by the anti-nuclear, anti-war group, Sisters of Survival (S.O.S.) from which the exhibition gets its name. According to the literature available in the gallery: "S.O.S. is not an order of Catholic nuns. Rather, we are a group of feminist artists who use the nun image symbolically.

We are indeed a sisterhood, ordered around nuclear disarmament and world peace. Clothing ourselves in the colors of the rainbow, our imagery is intended to evoke hope, humor and the celebration of diversity."

The main problem of the show is that it tries to do too much. Here, more is less. By having so many pieces in the show, the overall intention is clear, but the sharpness of its most effective pieces is blunted. The majority of the large color photographs seem to chronicle the organization's various efforts around the world and would be fine in their headquarters but are strikingly out of place in an art gallery.

The contributions of artists from various countries seem to indicate each country's collective perspective on nuclear war. This can easily be seen by comparing the contributions of the U.S. and Germany.

The view of nuclear war of U.S. artists appears, in this show at least, to be more abstract than that of the European artists. U.S. contributions include: photos of brightly clothed nuns running between crosslike shovels, sketches of mushroom clouds turning into flowers and ice cream sundaes (which I personally believe to be the product of a diseased mind,) and cute little banners saying "I love LA, I love SF, I love NY. Stop the Arms race!" Am I to be shocked and horrified by a fallout fashion show in California (where else?), where women parade around in plastic and cellophane spacesuits? My general reaction is, "Cute, when you start to get serious, give me a call."

Some people may think that it is unfair to compare the art of the U.S. and Germany, who many consider to be about 50 years ahead of us, graphically speaking. I think the comparison shows how terrifyingly evident the threat of nuclear obliteration is in the minds of the German people. The art also shows how it is the United States, and specifically Ronald Reagan, and not the Soviet Union, that is thought to be the source of this evil threat.

Although the general meaning of the art can be understood by Americans it is a pity that the Sisters did not translate the German of some of the pieces. For example, there is a poster with Reagan striking a conductor-like pose as an atomic fireball explodes overhead which reads (in translation): "Symphony #1 (the last) by Ronald Reagan." There is also a burnt Hiroshima corpse in the foreground of a nuclear reactor in one piece which reads (again, in translation): "Is this the future of our children?"

The most haunting displays in the exhibit are the postcard-sized pieces from Germany which feature a helmeted skeleton. In one photograph, the glowing silhouette of the helmeted skeleton is superimposed over a war monument. In another very chilling black and white photograph, the helmeted skeleton stands on a devastated plain, and with a sweep of his arm, is seen dropping swastikas like seeds, while gas-masked nuclear war survivors tiredly carry corpses in the smokey grey distance.

A very telling piece shows a helmeted skull with the international symbol of radioactive material for a face and "U (swastika) A" sketched on the helmet. That some of the German people equate the "Peacekeeping" missiles of the United States with the fearsome tyranny of Nazi Germany may give some students an occasion to question what sort of messages our government is sending to the people of the world.

Models on the rise

NEW MODELS
Thursday, Feb. 16
Bluewall

By JIM FEIN
Collegian Staff

Synthesizer bands.

Seen one, you've seen 'em all, or so I thought until last Thursday night at the Bluewall.

Enter the New Models, a three year old trio from Boston. Like most synthesizer bands, the infectious beat contained in their music makes one want to head for the dance floor immediately. Aside from this similarity, however, the New Models have little in common with their synthesizer-based counterparts. In fact, if you ask anyone who was among the moderate size crowd that night, they'll most likely refute the label "synthesizer band."

The main reason for this, undoubtedly, is that the synthesizer sounds are generally overshadowed by the more mundane sounds of guitar and drums. Steven Thurber's deft yet restrained use of synthesizers to create rhythms, melodies, and bass riffs denotes a proper utilization of the instrument that modern music needs more of. Brother Matt Thurber's strong, concise drumming, which occasionally breaks into steady, rapid-fire outbursts, contrasts nicely with the calculated synthesizer sounds. At the forefront of the band though, both visually and audibly, is lead guitarist and vocalist Casey Lindstrom.

Lindstrom provides the spark and energy punk rock bands are known for, and which synthesizer bands so often lack.

On stage, Lindstrom might best be described as a human dynamo. When not singing, Lindstrom, whose guitar playing adds both melody and spice to the music, was often found scooting about the stage, seemingly possessed, and occasionally kicking a leg high into the air, reminiscent of Stiff Little Finger's Jake Burns. In addition, his rapport with the crowd between songs was most interesting.

The New Models played two sets, each of which kept the dance floor area, immediately in front of the stage, crowded throughout the evening. Many of the songs they performed have already been put to vinyl. "Permanent Vacation," (one of their best) and "Shattered Windows" are the two songs from their debut single, which was produced by Rick Ocasek of The Cars. The song "Future Assassins" is a cut on the 1982, Live at the Metro album, a compilation of Boston's best bands. Throughout the course of the evening, the New Models also played four of the five songs from their quality e.p. of last year, Sight and Sound. These songs were: "Say What," "Just a Motion," "Looking for a Reason," and "Strangers in Disguise," a song for which they made a video which is in MTV's possession (though rarely shown.) Other memorable as-of-yet unrecorded songs were "Say it Again" and "Blind Ambition."

The only disappointment of the evening was the band's failure to include my favorite song from the Sight and Sound e.p., "Listen," in their repetoire. The slow paced song, which uses effective lyrical imagery set to a spacial background atmosphere, would have been a nice deviation from the band's generally faster paced material.

The band will soon enter Boston's Synchro Sound Studios (the Cars' recording studio) to record some more material. When and what type of a record release will result from this session is, as of now, uncertain. However, I was informed by the band that they have been negotiating with major record labels so a breakthrough on the national level is a very real possibility in the future.

Devil's Bag could be the next super horse

By BRIAN NOYES
Collegian Correspondent

The wait is over. A rare breed of dedicated fans have been frustrated by inconsistency each spring over the past few years. This has now all come to an end.

Now, not only will horse racing fans anxiously await the Kentucky Derby, Preakness Stakes and the Belmont Stakes. The rest of the world will also follow this great horse race as well.

This three-year-old colt is named Devil's Bag. Not since Secretariat has a horse attracted so much attention. Devil's Bag has raced only five times, all as a two year old. Yet, it is in the way he has won these races which has earned him his claim to fame.

Devil's Bag first raced at Saratoga last August and won by 7½ lengths. Then, he ran an allowance race at Belmont and won easily.

In his next two races, the Cowdin Stakes and Champagne Stakes, he set speed records with faster times than Secretariat or Seattle Slew had done as two-year-olds. In the Laurel Fururity, Devil's Bag last race to date, he was challenged for the first time and he responded by pulling away for an easy win.

Devil's Bag is the son of Halo, the sire of 1983 Kentucky Derby winner Sunny's Halo. Devil's Bag was purchased for $325,000 by James and Alice Mills, a mere drop in the bucket to what he is worth today.

The horse was recently syndicated for $36 million at a million a share. Each person who bought a share can breed one mare to him. Now you know why horse racing is the "Sport of Kings."

Hall of Fame trainer Woody Stephens knew he had an exceptional horse after Devil's Bag ran away from 1983 Kentucky Derby runner Chumming during one morning workout.

Devil's Bag is scheduled to run an allowance race this month and on March 3 he should be run in the Flamino Stakes, a major prep for Derby contenders.

From there it's on to New York for the Gotham Stakes on March 31 and the Wood Memorial on April 21. The Derby awaits him on May 5.

But horse racing isn't always that easy. Many horses have been injured and destroyed. Let us not forget Timely Writer of the ill-fated Ruffian. Both were hailed as future champions.

Devil's Bag limits are unknown, though. You should certainly hear more about this super horse in the next few months.

UMass opens their 1984 campaign on March 17 against the University of Wyoming.

The Minuteman Basketball Network is looking for the "Minuteman Basketball Network" banner that used to hang under the radio table in the Cage. It's a red and white banner. If anybody has any info on its whereabouts contact Tim Ashwell at WTTT or WHMP-AM radio.

The intramural wrestling tourney is beginning to heat up with some rivalries. BLT III is being challenged by an upstart Madmen club, who are out for revenge. BLT II beat the Madmen by one last year for the title.

The intramural duel will be on March 5.

"I'd like to make it," smiles Morrison. And after this — next year? "I hope to go to the Milrose Games in New York City and run in the 200 meters." And? "And, I'd like to go to the Olympics in '88," she says seriously, then laughs — "of course, it's only a dream."

Minutewomen hoop splits over the weekend

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts womens basketball team remained at .500 in the Atlantic 10 as they split two conference games over the weekend to bring their Atlantic 10 record to 3-3.

The women hoopsters fared well on Monday afternoon as they came from 16 points behind at halftime to defeat Duquesne 61-59.

The Minutewomen found themselves on the short end of the stick in their venture to Morganstown and their clash with the Mountaineers of West Virginia by a 77-64 count, on Saturday.

"I felt as though we played very well. It was a close game all the way through. But they are a good, solid, deep team," said UMass coach Barbara Stevens, on the Mountaineer loss.

UMass stayed in the game thanks to the play of freshman Karen Fitzgerald, who started at center and took the place of injured forward Karen Damminger, and Jerrie Bernier, a regular starter at the forward position.

Fitzgerald, who played her best game so far this season according to Stevens, scored 21 points and pulled down 13 rebounds against a bigger front line. Bernier, who Stevens calls the steadiest and most unsung player on the team, contributed 16 points and seven rebounds.

The Minutewomen utilized a press that was very effective, causing 31 turnovers during the game. But, unfortunately it was not enough to contain the likes of Olivia Bradley, who dominated inside by pouring in 19 points and yanking down 17 boards, as well as blocking three shots. Kim Houser contributed 22 points to the West Virginia effort.

"I'm pleased with the overall play of the team. We got into foul trouble, and the bench did not contribute as much as usual, but I don't think that West Virginia thought they had it until the end," noted Stevens.

Against Duquesne, it was a different story.

In the first half, UMass could do nothing right. They shot 6 of 35 (13 percent) from the field, while Duquesne shot a little under 50 percent and opened up a commanding 36-20 lead.

"They came out fired up and ready to go, and got going very quickly. We played run and gun with them in the first half and did some stupid things. I told them at halftime if we want to get back in this, we have to slow the pace down," said Stevens.

The Minutewomen responded by scoring the first eight points of the second half sinking four of five shots. They settled down and slowly got back in the game and about halfway through the half, UM took the lead 49-48.

It was pretty much a seesaw battle for the rest of the game as UMass effectively slowed the pace down using a man-to-man defense and playing a half court game as they held on for the win.

"I told them to take their time and that everything is not going to come at once. Wendy Ward was our clutch player. When we needed a basket she scored, and she also pulled down some big offensive rebounds at the end of the game. It's nice to win number 10," added Stevens.

Rebecca Kucks played a strong game to lead the Minutewomen with 17 points. Barbara Hebel added 12 points (11 of those came in the big second half) and Jerrie Bernier played another good game and ended up with 10 points.

UMass' record now stands at a respectable 10-14, which is twice as many wins as last season. They travel to Rhode Island on Thursday for another important Atlantic Ten clash.

Speedy runner Kayla Morrison with talent yet to be tapped

By M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Staff

"It was like stumbling on a jewel."

That's how University of Massachusetts women's track coach Kalekeni Banda describes his introduction to freshman running sensation Kayla Morrison. "At first, I didn't think she could be very good," says Banda, "or I would have heard something about her."

What a difference a year makes. Eighteen-year-old Morrison is now a standout on a talented UMass squad, is ranked among the best sprinters in New England, and has a shot at making it to the NCAA Championships.

Morrison was born in Brooklyn, New York and moved at an early age to Hartford, Connecticut where she began to run in a loosely-organized track league. "I was twelve when I began running," says Morrison. "I was fast — I used to beat the boys," she laughs.

She competed at the high-school level, winning some, losing others. She was fast all right — but something was missing.

"When I saw her run," recalls Banda, "it was the icing on the cake. She had raw-talent but wasn't a properly-trained runner; no technique."

Others saw that raw-talent. Morrison was actively recruited by the universities of Rhode Island and Connecticut, Penn State and Howard University.

"When I heard about those other schools, I just about gave up," says Banda. "I couldn't compete with the offers they made."

"Banda laid it on the line for me," admits Morrison. "He didn't fool with me like the others. They wanted me but wanted to make it easier for me to go there. I didn't like that."

"She decided to come because she is academically-oriented," agrees Banda. "The other schools seemed more interested in her running than academics. We didn't take that approach."

"She's a goal-oriented person," says Banda. "She has leadership qualities, is always willing to help people, and seems like she can do anything she wants.

"We are now teaching her how to practice. It's tough but she's not complaining. She's very coachable."

"The 200 (meters) is my favorite," says Morrison. "I accelerate and hit my top speed around seventy meters and I feel strong enough to hold on past that. I have to work on my technique, though, especially indoors on the turns."

"She's almost too fast for the 200 meters," says her coach, noting that, because of her rough technique, Morrison almost ran through a turn at the Budweiser Light Invitational in Boston last week.

"As she gets better, technically, the 200 may be her event. Right now, I think she will excel at the one-hundred meter dash outdoors."

While indoors, Morrison has specialized in the fifty-five meters sprint, an event that she now holds the school-record in.

"It's what I mean by raw-talent," notes Banda. "She came back after almost a month without a race; back from Christmas, New Years, and all the trimmings; back without a practice — and she ripped off a 7.20 in the fifty-five meters. That's fast."

Fast enough to earn a spot at the New England Championships coming up in two weeks, the "Eastern" a week later, and about two-tenths of a second shy of qualifying for the NCAA Indoor Track Championships to be held in Syracuse, New York March 9-10. continued on page 15

Minuteman baseball team practice underway

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Correspondent

There still may be a little more snow before we're through. It's also the middle of February. But that hasn't stopped the University of Massachusetts baseball team from gearing up for the upcoming Spring season.

The pitchers and catchers have been going at it for the past week under the watchful eyes of Head Coach Dick Bergquist, in his 18th year of coaching. The remainder of the squad started practice last week.

Bergquist, who will be looking to improve on last year's 20-17 mark, is excited about this year's schedule, which includes a West Coast swing at the University of New Mexico Turqoise Tournament.

"This is the largest schedule we've ever had to play," Bergquist said. "We are a member of the Atlantic Ten Conference this year and that gives us a few more games to play." Last year, UMass was a member of the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC).

UMass has a number of players returning from last year's squad including senior third baseman Andy Connors and senior pitcher Tony Presnal. Connors and Presnal will be acting as captains and will provide leadership for the team." UMass also returns junior catcher Todd Ezold, who is currently in contention for a spot on the United States Olympic Team. In all, thirteen lettermen will be returning.

Although UMass has some seasoned veterans returning, Bergquist is cautious about this season's outlook. "It's still too continued on page 15

DuBois day proclaimed by Governor

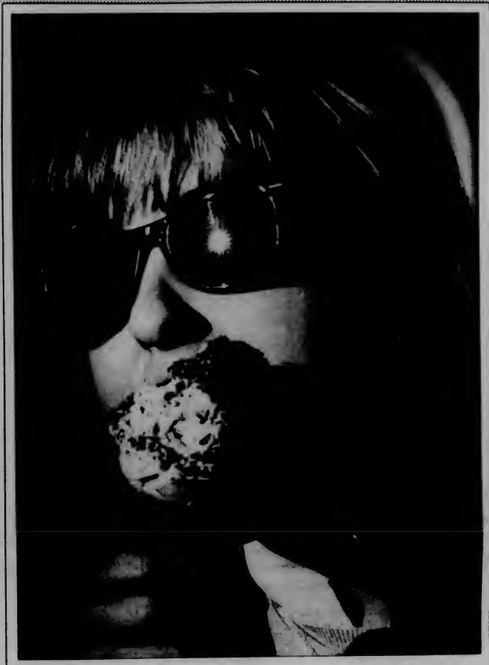
By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

In honor of the founding father of the Civil Rights Movement and America's Father of Sociology today has been proclaimed "W.E.B. Du Bois Day" by Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis.

A proclamation reading yesterday at the University of Massachusetts by Sheila Wilkerson of Dukakis's Western Massachusetts office and the first showing of "Another View: Berkshire County's Black Revolutionary Patriot," marked the proclamation in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Born in Great Barrington, Mass., on this date back in 1868 Dr. Du Bois was a scholar, prolific writer, government servant, novelist and a world traveler.

David G. Du Bois, a visiting professor in the Department of Afro-American Studies and Department of Journalistic Studies and Dr. Du Bois' step-son said Dr. Du Bois stands high on the list of historical figures whose "contribution, impact and influence has extended far beyond the shores of this nation, to the world at large."



Du Bois said his step-father's major contribution to America and the world were his prophecies. Alluding to the fact that three fourths of the earth's inhabitants are peoples of color and that "these people still suffer from the devastating effects of economic exploitation, political domination and great power chauvinism.

"In our own great nation, that seems incapable of guaranteeing for its own citizens of color, its own Third World community justice, equal opportunity and the pursuit of happiness," he said.

Du Bois said the proclamation of W.E.B. Du Bois day in Massachusetts as well as the 1979 designation of Du Bois boyhood home, a National Historical landmark in Great Barrington are "important beginnings in recognition of the enormous contribution of W.E.B. Du Bois to his country and to the world," he said.

However, Du Bois said W.E.B. Du Bois' recognition should not end with these actions. He said there are national and international forces that would overcast Dr. Du Bois' works "beneath a mountain of falsehoods, distortions and scorn."

"We must guarantee that this proclamation becomes a living expression of our conviction that in our time, in our own place, the legacy Dr. Du Bois has left us, lives and is passed on to succeeding generations," he said.

Businesses may fund bus service

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

A Hadley businessman is leading a drive to raise money to help pay for the Pioneer Valley Transit system in that town.

Charles Bowles, President of Carbur's restaurant, and a part owner of Interskate 91 in the Hampshire Mall, said he had "verbal agreements" with other business establishments on Route 9 to donate $5,000 to the town. PVTA busses shuttle some 3,000 students daily along the six mile stretch of Route 9 through Hadley.

"I think the bus provides considerable business interest in the town," Bowles said. "I think businesses, in general, are willing to make some financial support." Bowles said he was the chairman of the Transportation Committee five years ago when they were considering joining PVTA.

Selectman Donald Pipczynski said Bowles told the board Friday that he could raise up to $7,000 but added that he would have a definite figure at the town meeting next month. Pipczynski said any donations would be put in the town's General Fund.

The transit system cost Hadley $14,500 this fiscal year. The total assessment for the town is $135,000 but the town is reimbursed by the five college system which receives state and federal subsidies.

Pipczynski said the board decided Tuesday to put a warrant article about the town's PVTA membership annually in the town meeting. He said state law requires a town to hold a special ballot vote before it can legally withdraw from a transit system. The consent of a majority of town meeting members is required to put the question on a ballot.

Pipczynski said the town will still be in the transit system until June, 1985 at the end of the fiscal year. He said the warrant article is "basically a safeguard article" to protect the town from unexpected costs.

Last year amid discontent with the transit service, the town voted to withdraw from the system, but the decision was illegal because the town did not follow the procedure required by state law.

SGA in uproar over campaign

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

After an unusually active two hour debate, the Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to allow a SGA presidential hopeful team to campaign under fabricated names.

Gumby (Paul) Gosselin and Camel (Jim) Murphy said they "want to address important issues which may be overlooked by the other candidates."

Senate members opposed to the motion that legitimized the candidacy challenged whether the use of ficticious names is in accordance with SGA campaign rules. Some senators questioned the seriousness of the campaign and the use of a $250 student activities grant given to all presidential tickets. Several senators also pointed out the candidates' status as seniors at the University, questioning their ability to serve in office if elected.

"The senate does not have the power to limit any candidacy," said Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan. The use of a different first name does not violate any bylaws, Sullivan Continued on page 7

Chinese press educates its readers

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The primary function of the press in The People's Republic of China is to educate the Chinese society, said the director of the Culture and Education Section, Home News for Foreign Service, at Xinhua, the state news agency in China yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

"The press is a mirror and a conscience of a society," said Rui Yuanru at a lecture sponsored by UMass International Programs. Yuanru said that the press in China is not based on free enterprise as it is in the United States.

"The press informs and educates people to mobilize, and form national goals," Yuanru said. One major media (including newspapers and television) campaign in China is to control population growth and teach strict family planning. The government currently provides families with 30 percent of their children's expenses through age 16. It is the media's responsibility to reveal this and expose other concerns, difficulties, ideas and opinions of the nation, she said.

The news in China also "talks" to its readers in a language they understand, Yuanru said. The level of education of the community reading a story dictates the style in which the story is written. Journalists "communicate an idea, a sense of necessity...that will benefit our people."

Yuanru said that through journalism she "shares the lives and feelings of many of my people," and the press reflects China's socialist society in ways that "work in the interest of the people."

"If China fails in a national effort, the Chinese people fail as well," Yuanru said. China fought for political, economic and cultural independence, and while it welcomes helpful efforts from other nations, it must "rely on its own efforts to continue socialist modernization," she said.

"Socialist modernization is not necessarily Western modernization," Yuanru said. To understand this and other concepts better, journalists from China and the Western nations must learn from one another and encourage "friendship and cooperation on an equal basis."

Reagan defends withdrawal; claims US has not 'lost yet'

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan last night defended his decision to withdraw Marines from Beirut, saying, "we are not bugging out, we are just going into a little more defensible position."

"I don't think you can say we have lost as yet," he said at his first formal news conference of 1984.

In a long answer to a question whether the United States had lost credibility during the recent turmoil in Lebanon, Reagan referred to the Marine withdrawal as "redeploying" and said American forces couldn't just "stay there as a target, hunkering down."

"But as long as there's a chance for a peaceful solution...we're not bugging out, we're just going into a little more defensible position."

Some 1,300 Marines are being withdrawn on Reagan's orders from Beirut to U.S. Navy ships offshore as Lebanon's government and army are battered by Syrian-backed rebels.

Reagan said his decision for a "redeployment" did not represent "surrender" or a "cut-and-run" policy of any kind. He said the Marines could be sent back into Lebanon if that would "improve the possibility of carrying out their mission."

"I don't see their mission as being over yet," he said.

He labeled as "disgraceful, frankly," speculation that Secretary of State George Shultz might resign because of the failure of American attempts to work out a solution to the Lebanese crisis.

PULL OUT: Washington — Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, a democratic presidential candidate, announced he has introduced legislation that would require immediate withdrawal of most American troops in Central America. He said the US in that region is "a bully looking for a fight."

Askew's campaign strategy hinges on New Hampshire primary results

DERRY, N.H. (AP) - Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew said yesterday he may drop out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination if he doesn't finish in the top four in New Hampshire's state primary Tuesday.

The determining factor, Askew said, will be how Sen. John Glenn of Ohio fares. He said a poor showing by Glenn would make room for another Democrat to emerge as the alternative to front-runner Walter Mondale in several southern contests March 13, and he doubts the more liberal Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado would fill the bill.

"There's no question if I don't do as well as I think I should do in New Hampshire, it becomes another period of assessment," Askew said during a taped interview with television station WNDS. "I'd like to finish in the top half."

In hitching his star to his rival from Ohio, Askew is hoping Glenn's setback in the Iowa caucuses will spill into New Hampshire and breath new life into his own longshot candidacy.

Askew finished ahead of only Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina in Iowa, a contest Hollings sat out because of limited resources.

"I'm going to have to, obviously, have a better showing in New Hampshire than I did in Iowa in order to get into super Tuesday," Askew said of the March 13 contests.

He attributed his back-of-the-pack Iowa finish to the caucus system, which Askew said makes it possible for one group to dominate the turnout and pick a winner.

Mondale's first place - which put him 3-1 over second-place finisher Hart - was credited largely to his organization and the efforts of organized labor.

'Bubble boy' dead of heart failure after a lifetime of sterile isolation

HOUSTON (AP) - David, the 12-year-old "bubble boy" who spent his entire life in sterile rooms because he had no immunity to disease, died last night at Texas Children's Hospital, spokeswoman Susannah Moore Griffin said.

Death was attributed to heart failure, Griffin said. David's family - mother, father and 15-year-old sister - were in the room at the time, she said. The boy's family name has never been disclosed.

"The cause of the heart failure is unknown," his doctor, William T. Shearer, said in a statement released by the hospital.

About 6 p.m., he developed irregular heartbeats. At 8 p.m., the heart failed, Griffin said.

Besides his parents and sister, the boy's grandparents and cousins were at the hospital. Griffin said she did not know whether any heroic measures were taken to restart the heart.

The death came just 33 hours after he went on the critical list and less than 12 hours after he was placed on a breathing device.

He was unconscious from the time he went on the breathing device, first with sedation and later because he became comatose, she said.

New strain of AIDS reported in Central Africa

BOSTON - AIDS is spreading in central Africa, and unlike most U.S. victims of the deadly disease, people there may be getting it through heterosexual contact, researchers conclude.

The doctors found 23 cases of AIDS among Africans who were treated in Belgium. Some of the cases dated back to early 1979, about the same time that the mysterious outbreak was first spotted among homosexual men in the United States.

"We believe that AIDS is a new disease that is spreading in Central Africa," the doctors concluded in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

They suggested that people from Equatorial Africa be considered to be another group at high risk of getting AIDS.

Most documented cases of the incurable illness so far have been in the United States, where AIDS is largely confined to male homosexuals and abusers of needle drugs.

Haitians, hemophiliacs and people who get blood transfusions are also at higher-than-usual risk.

Female sex partners of male victims have gotten the disease, but heterosexual spread of AIDS in the United States appears, so far, to be rare.

Police and firefighters union urges amendment to prop. 2½

BOSTON - Morale among Massachusetts police and firefighters has plummeted and some contract disputes have dragged on for years due to a ban on the use of binding arbitration in contract talks, union leaders and yesterday.

The union officials urged the legislature's Public Service Committee to amend Proposition 2½ and allow some form of "closure" on contract disputes to force cities and towns to bargain in good faith with their public safety employees.

But municipal officials said the bill, which died in committee last year, could result in an arbitrator awarding a contract amount that the city or town couldn't raise due to constraints of tax-limiting Proposition 2½.

Trimester abortions 'justifiable' in extreme cases, doctors say

BOSTON - In rare cases, abortion is "morally justifiable" during the last three months of pregnancy, but only if physicians are sure the fetus is certain to die or have no mental awareness, a group of doctors contends.

Abortions are frequently denied after 24 weeks of development, the point at which the fetus may be able to survive on its own outside the womb.

In its landmark decision in 1973, the Supreme Court said specifically that abortions are permissible during the last three months of pregnancy "to preserve the life or health of the mother."

A report in today's New England Journal of Medicine argues that these third-trimester abortions are also permissible if the fetus is so badly deformed that it is sure to die within a few weeks or is "characterized by the total or virtual absence of cognitive function." In addition, it said, physicians must have foolproof tests to spot the problem.

The doctors were able to identify just one disorder that fulfills these guidelines, a fatal brain malformation called anencephaly. But as prenatal tests get better, they said, a few other defects may also qualify.

The report was written by Dr. Frank A. Chervenak of Mt. Sinai School of Medicine in New York and experts from Yale and Georgetown universities.

Jackson office hit by vandals

SPRINGFIELD - Two plate glass windows were smashed at the downtown campaign office of Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson, a campaign aide said yesterday.

Office manager Ann Bailey said nothing was damaged inside the office and there was no money kept there to steal.

"It's just ordinary vandalism. We feel the motive was robbery. Had it been someone out to be mean, there were plenty of expensive machines here to damage," she said, noting the office is equipped with electric typewriters, a television and a $2,000 copying machine.

Commission on rent control meeting tonight

By MICHAEL MEAGHER
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Rent Control Study Commission will hold a public hearing to gather data about living conditions and rent levels in the town at 7:30 tonight in the Bangs Community Center.

The commission, created at the Fall town meeting, is designed "to study the housing market to determine whether there is a need for rent control in Amherst and to report its findings to the town," Kenneth Mosakowski, chairman of the commission, said.

Mosakowski said the seven-member commission includes representatives from the Board of Assessors, the Housing Authority, the Fair Housing Commission, the Landlord-Tenant relations Committee and two at-large appointments.

We know what all the arguments are (on rent control). It's been going back and forth for a while — Kenneth Mosakowski, chair of the Rent Control Study Commission.

Mosakowski said the commissioners share an expertise in the housing field, while each has a specific area of interest.

The question of whether or not the town should have a rent control ordinance has been debated for the past 10 years, Mosakowski said. "We know what all the arguments are. It's been going back and forth for a while," he said.

Mosakowski said he hopes the hearings will bring forth new information about living conditions in Amherst.

"We're trying to collect information that the town meeting can utilize to decide upon whether or not the town of Amherst needs a rent control ordinance," he said.

Mosakowski asked that residents wishing to be recognized at the hearings provide written documentation of their presentations and that any oral presentations be limited to factual information.

In 1974 a similar commission's study of the issue concluded that there was no need for rent control in the town at that time.

Mosakowski said the 1974 commission didn't adequately cover the issue. "At this point the commission has collected twice as much data as the original group," he said.

The commission is expected to make an interim report of its findings at the first session of the Spring town meeting in May. A final report, including any recommendations is scheduled to be released in September.

A second meeting will be held March 1st at the Town Hall.

Lesbian Union offers weekly discussions

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Since 1976, the Lesbian Union (LU) at the University of Massachusetts has been offering gay women, and those who think they might be gay, a chance to meet with other women and discuss the experiences of lesbian living.

There are currently 20 active LU members participating in weekly discussions and social functions, including backpacking trips, canoeing, and volleyball.

Susan Ethier, a junior theater major and LU member said women who are "coming out," or discovering they are lesbians, can find help and support at the LU.

"A lot of people only know about the People's Gay Alliance (PGA) and the men in that organization can be intimidating," she said.

According to Kathy Gendrop, an LU member and a junior history major, the Northampton area communities have the largest lesbian population in Massachusetts but the predominant population of gay men is centralized in Provincetown, Mass. on Cape Cod.

"A lot of women come in and out of the LU office, but because Amherst and Northampton are such positive communities for gay women to live in, many of them go to other groups in the area," she said.

The discussions held in the LU office in the Student Union Thursday, focus on specific topics relating to Lesbians' experiences with family, friends, discrimination and relationships.

"We talk about different topics, such as coming out, how your high school friends are dealing with you, or how your family treats you," Gendrop said.

Ethier said although gay and lesbian issues appear in the media more often today, "some people treat you different" when they find out you are gay.

"All the interpersonal problems relate to sexual preference," she said. "The problems in a heterosexual relationship are the same in a homosexual one. People still fight, just change their names."

Gendrop said today's generation of gays is "less intimidated by society."

"We're healthy gays today. In the old days, gay people were in the closet, and religion made people feel guilty. They were forced to live double lives," she said.

According to Ethier, if a woman finds out she is gay, "she doesn't have to change."

"Being straight isn't the only way to be, and being gay isn't the only way to be either. You've just got to be yourself," she said.

Students can seek town meeting seats

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students interested in local government and issues affecting students and the campus can become Amherst Town Meeting members.

Articles raised at meetings range from street lights and bus zones to the school budget. Rent control, last year's main issue, was resolved when several town meeting members, both students and tenants, had a rent control commission succesfully approved. However, Tom Ahern, co-president of the Student Government Association (SGA) said rent control may become a major issue again by next Fall. Another important issue this Spring will be a proposed nuclear freeze.

To become a town meeting member, Ahern said, a student who has registered to vote must pick up nomination papers at Amherst Town Hall and obtain signatures from 10 other registered voters in their precinct.

Amherst is divided into eight different precincts, some more competitive than others. The Orchard Hill area which is designated precinct three has the fewest town meeting members so the competition to become a member is less severe.

Nomination papers are due next Tuesday by 4:30 p.m. at the Town Hall, with the 10 signatures.

"If students are there running for office, then other students will be prompted to vote," Ahern said. He also said it is very important for students to know their local government because it's the government body closest to them.

The town meetings include approximately 242 town meeting members, and a finance board and a select board which can each give its opinions on the articles raised.

William F. Field, Dean of students at UMass and Town Meeting moderator said it is the right of any citizen to get a petition form concerning an issue and get a specified number of signatures.

Students who are interested in becoming involved or want to find out more about the town meetings can attend an informative meeting next Monday from 7-9 p.m. The next town meeting is on Wednesday, February 29th where the rent control commission will give a current report.

US, Poland face political uncertainity

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

The future political relationship between the United States and Poland remains uncertain, appointed ambassador to Poland John Scanlan said last night at the University of Massachusetts School of Management.

John Scanlon; appointed ambassador to Poland.

Scanlan, who in late 1982 was appointed, by President Reagan, to the post of American ambassador to Poland, is still waiting for the Polish government's decision regarding the acceptance of his post.

Describing the present relationship between the two nations as at "a time of impasse," Scanlan said, there is no clear indication of how this relationship will be in the future. Both nations have a lot to gain and a lot to lose by whichever way the relationship turns, he said.

He stated the reason for the delayed response from the Polish government on his appointment was nothing more than a strictly political refusal.

"It has nothing to do with me," he said.

Scanlan's 28 years of experience in the U.S. Foreign Service have primarily been devoted to the Soviet Union and the Eastern European nations. He served eight years in Poland, spent several years in the Soviet Union, and also served two years in the Yugoslavian embassy.

"The Polish government sees us in a very bad light. From their point, our relationship is very weak and they therefore find it very difficult to respond to us. They are upset with our reporting of Polish events and incidents, calling our media 'inaccurate journalists'," the diplomat said.

Scanlan emphasized that the United States and Poland have traditionally had a very special relationship, dating back to the American Revolution when two Polish generals fought and died for America.

Scanlon stressed that in the past as well as in the present, U.S. foreign policy towards Poland has been marked by periods of differentiation.

"We look to see to what degree they pursue their internal and external policies with regard to the Soviet Union. If they alter their policies from their Communist neighbor and respond to our policies with greater openness, we will reward them with friendlier and more cooperative behavior," Scanlon said.

According to Scanlan, the relationship between the two takes a spiral-like form. He said that presently, with the revocation of martial law and the release of political prisoners from Poland, the spiral appears to be in a downward direction.

Early morning fire being investigated

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Police responded to a report of a suspicious fire at 2 a.m. yesterday in Cashin dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area.

The fire, in a second floor stairway trash can, was found and extinguished by students, according to UMass spokeswoman Anne Wood. The building was evacuated and police, Amherst Fire Department and UMass Department of Public Safety officials responded, though there was no damage or reported injuries, she said.

"We are checking it out and investigating it as a fire, and the cause has not been determined," said UMass Public Safety Director Gerald T. O'Neil, who said he felt the fire was "not related to last semester."

Wood said, "I don't think there's really any way to tell at this point" if the fire is connected with last semester's series of more than 40 suspicious fires, which occurred in trash cans and on bulletin boards.

The investigation into those fires is still open and investigators are scheduled to report to the Grand Jury on the case sometime this month, according to Northwestern District Attorney W. Michael Ryan.

The district attorney and state fire marshal are involved in the investigation of yesterday's fire as well, Wodd said.

In other police action:
Police received a report of annoying behavior shortly before 4 p.m. Tuesday. Police said a woman was followed from her dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area to Hasbrouck laboratory. Police have a description of the suspect and the case is under investigation.

A pair of pants and a wallet, valued at $55, were reported stolen from a locked locker in Curry Hicks men's lockerroom. Police received the report of breaking and entering and larcency shortly after 4 p.m. Tuesday. Police said there was evidence of prying into the locker, and there are no suspects.

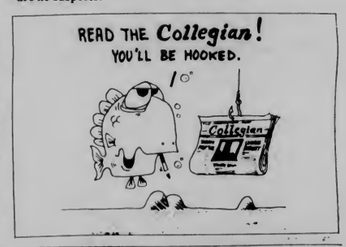
Dairy farming seminar concludes today

By KATE PUTNEY
Collegian Correspondent

Dairy farmers from all over New England are coming together at the University of Massachusetts today to discuss problems of overproduction in the United States dairy industry.

The Massachusetts Dairy Farmer's seminar is entitled "Marketing and Management: The Challenge of '84" and is being held through today in the Campus Center auditorium.

The featured speaker yesterday was Dr. Lew Mix, an economist for Agway, Incorporated. He emphasized the importance of "trying to improve output per cow rather than total herd size." He discussed the federal government's attempts at helping the farmer through the "dairy diversion program," and how these efforts are still falling short of the required cutbacks in production needed to make any impact on the surplus.



Mix said the next two years will be a critical time for dairy farmers calling it, "truly a period of the survival of the fittest," but also said that "by 1986 things will turn around."

John W. Denison, director of the Stockbridge College, said he felt having the seminar at UMass is a "great blessing" because the faculty of Stockbridge likes to see representatives of the farming industry come to the campus because it gives students an opportunity to join in discussions.

Dr. Mix is probably one of the most knowledgeable people around in regard to dairy problems. It's very important for local dairy farmers to keep aware of the situation," Russ Davenport, a dairy farmer from Shelbourne, Massachusetts, said. Davenport owns a herd of 90 registered holstein cows.

Bill Tomlinson, a North Attleboro dairy farmer, said he did not think small dairy farmers in New England and on the East Coast should have to pay for the excesses of large Western dairy conglomerates. According to Mix, New England's milk production accounts for approximately five to six percent of the excess in the country.

The seminar will continue today from 9:30 a.m. to 3:10 p.m. Lectures will include topics such as health care for cattle and dairy farm management.

Ombudsofficeaides community through mediation,persuasion

By BOBBI GUILLERM
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Ombuds Office resolves grievances between members of the University community by using "the power of persuasion," according to Assistant Ombudsperson Phyllis Foster.

Foster defined a grievance as "a situation where a person has done everything they can do," but "there's been some violation of procedure and the system has not worked according to the way it should have."

According to annual reports issued by the Ombuds Office, over 500 grievance cases a year are recorded, and there are also hundreds of informal inquiries. Undergraduate and graduate students utilize the services most often for academic problems regarding issues such as credits, waivers, grades and degrees, and for nonacademic problems including fees, financial aid, housing and the meal plan.

She said that when the staff investigates a grievance, they begin by collecting data from both sides.

"There's always two sides to a story," she said. "Our philosophy is to try to deal with problems in the most informal way and at the lowest level. We find that's the most effective way."

After the necessary data is collected, a resolution is recommended, Foster said. "There's an understanding that the University and its offices will cooperate with us," she said.

The Faculty Senate document, which established the Ombuds Office, states that "all members of the University community are expected to cooperate with the Ombudsperson."

Foster, who has worked in the Ombuds Office since shortly after its inception in 1971, said the term "ombudsman" is an Americanization of a Swedish word meaning "troubleshooter." The term originally referred to an impartial person who collected fines in cases of disputes between families, and later came to refer to a person who represented "the will of the people without governmental interference," she said.

Foster said the UMass Board of Trustees conceptualized the idea of an Ombuds Office as a result of student unrest on campus in 1969. Students were striking as a protest to Vietnam War, and the Board of Trustees asked the Faculty Senate to set up a task force to study and resolve problems related to heightened awareness of and concern about the war, civil rights and related issues.

The Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on the Ombudsman recommended that a permanent Ombuds Office be set up. In February, 1971, Ellsworth Barnard, a member of the committee, was appointed by the Faculty Senate and the University administration as the first Ombudsman.

said. Not allowing the team to run the senate would have "restricted the basic, fundamental laws of democracy where everyone deserves to run," he concluded.

Reuben Carlyle, a Greek Area senator, said he opposed the motion that allowed Gumby Gosselin and Camel Murphy to run because "they are making an entire mockery of the political process."

"There is such a thing as freedom of speech, and if candidates can run why can't issues run?" Murphy, former SGA President asked in response to the criticism.

"This is not a joke," he said. "I am concerned that (the) student government is taking a conservative turn," and this does not reflect the student body "which I feel is progressive."

Some of the issues Gosselin and Murphy said need to be addressed are international issues, students' role in deciding administrative policies and the SGA constitution.

Gosselin former Chair of the Public Policy Committee said his return to the University depends upon the election results. "Just because we are seniors doesn't mean we are graduating," he said. Murphy added that he could "easily finish a second degree."

When asked if he will support the recently approved candidacy, current SGA co-president Tom Ahern said "I'd rather endorse Mr. Ed."

A few words say a lot

Some funny things are going on across town at Amherst College. Besides a student hunger strike waged to protest what they see as a lack of student input on the important issue of the future of Amherst fraternities, there are strange utterances from the Trustees themselves.

Josh Meyer

An "Interim Report of the Ad Hoc Trustee Committee on Campus Life," was recently released. It was designed to assess how Amherst can become a better, more prestigious school than it already is, and to show how well it's doing so far. This is all well and good. But the way in which the assessments and suggestions were offered is what is objectionable.

"Amherst College has many virtues. These include a faculty of the highest scholarly accomplishment, with an unrivaled desire and ability to teach; a student population of the most genetically gifted, circumstantially priviledged, and academically accomplished young people in America..."

A student population of the most genetically gifted...If I think hard enough, the last time I heard that phrase being bandied about was in Nazi Germany. After all, doesn't "genetically gifted" mean inherently superior in some trait to others of our species of ape? It certainly seems so. The whole argument of "nature versus nurture" is brought under the spotlight once again. In writing this, the Trustees refused to acknowledge the importance of environment, family relationships, roles models, and all other contributing factors that make up the mental emotional and physical of a person. At worst "genetically gifted" suggests the belief in something inherent in a person that is the cause for their success in life, and it also suggests that there are "genetically deprived" students who might as well as give up in their quest for a good education and a happy, rewarding life. At best it smacks of elitism.

While this attitude may be stretching the significance of their unfortunate choice of words, it couldn't have come at a more opportune time for students. The report was a preliminary recommendation on how to approach the "problem" of fraternities and the conflict they have caused at the college over the years. The report states that Amherst is lacking in the quality of students' social life. This may or may not be so. But whatever the final recommendation may be from the Trustees, they should be more careful, lest they appear too elite in their attitudes.

Students deserve a great deal of input into the decision to leave the fraternity system intact or abolish it, and the more the Trustees open themselves up to criticism, the more bargaining power students will have, should they choose to take advantage of the situation.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Reject Dr. K's recent report

At best the Kissinger Commission Report on Central America is a rubberstamp to continue support for corrupt military regimes. The recommended program for a massive influx of U.S. economic and military aid (at least $8 billion over the next 5 years) to reduce social unrest in the region is unworkable. Like solidarity activists have asserted for years, aid experts in and out of the Reagan administration now acknowledge that unless major economic and political change takes place first the aid package will only serve to artificially prolong the lives of the dying regimes. At this point, even the major media are reporting widespread corruption in El Salvador, where a large portion of U.S. economic aid is diverted into private hands of the ruling elite and sent to foreign banks (a good share now rests in Miami).

Steven O'Halloran

As far as economic reform is concerned the Salvadoran Constituent Assembly has done its best to block any program for land reform. Last December it voted to increase the maximum permissable acreage one family could hold from 240 to 605 acres, while a provision was included entitling corporations to hold more. In effect, land reform has been completely gutted and the landless majority in El Salvador increases. The basic problem in El Salvador is that the ruling elite and military establishment continue to rape the country for their own self-interest and the government has little legitimacy.

In Guatemala, government sponsored terrorism is widespread and growing. According to Amnesty International, Guatemala is now the number one human rights violator in the world. However, the Reagan administration contends that human rights have improved. The 500,000 refugees and the 20,000 people killed over the last year contradict this assertion. The recommended aid to this brutal military regime will only feed the hand that kills.

Dr. Kissinger's support for the U.S. backed Contras (operating out of Honduras and Costa Rica) who seek to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, is the clearest indication of his politics. The Contras are well known in Nicaragua as the brutal remnants of the Somoza dictatorship. They use the same tactics as they did under Somoza to terrorize the people of Nicaragua: burning villages, abducting people in the night, maiming women and children, and killing peasants. The Contras have no popular support in Nicaragua and they certainly are not concerned about democracy.

It appears that Dr. Kissinger shares this lack of concern for democracy in the region. In 1983 he said, "it is time we stopped arguing about how much democracy there is in El Salvador and began to understand that American strategic interests are at stake." In effect, the Kisinger Commission is not interested in the welfare of the people in Central America. The Report addresses itself to how to maintain "U.S. interests" in the region and therefore justifies Reagan's militaristic policies.

We need to stand by democracy and oppose these policies. The people of Central America have the right to self-determination and the right to create their own societies as they see fit. I urge you to write to your Congressional representatives.

Big Brother is coming to campus

Looking for a job is fun and exciting. Reading the Collegian the other day I read an ad by NSA, a really neat sounding, official-type place. They're coming March 1st to recruit, and since "U.S. Citizenship is required," I still have a chance to get a job there.

"NSA offers you a heavy-hitting career opportunity." Great, so far. Hitting is fun. They say they have a great mathematics program.

Steven B. Cooke

"You'll work on diverse agency problems applying a variety of mathematical disciplines." Like pinpointing mass pockets of resistance to our own American ideology, which is right, and bombing them when they misbehave.

NSA also offers computer science and electrical engineering, including "very complex interactive systems involving large numbers of microprocessors, mini-computers and computer graphics." After all I've heard about the intense surveillance and sabotage of the personal lives of political activists in the 60's, I can't even wait to learn how well we can spy on peoply today. Technology is an amazing weapon.

We may not have two-way mirrors in every room, but who knows - we probably don't need them.

NSA is the National Security Agency, of the United States a government agency so powerful in its authority and technology it can warp the ideals of freedom to dissent and democracy we supposedly hold so dear. It dwarfs the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). They have the power to use their awesome capabilities for the internal and external benefit of our country. But so far they have spent their time and money spying on those within the "system" who believe that to be a true patriot is to say what you feel, even if it goes against our national policy. Those who succeed in voicing legitimate (and potentially damaging) criticism of the policies of our government are watched some by computer interfacing, and some ever personally.

When NSA comes to campuses, those hotbeds of leftist political dissent so dangerous to our National security, one wonders if they come just to interview potential good Americans. They'll probably have a good lookaround- you might even see one roaming around your dorm. They might even tell prospective employees to see if they can find out anything about their peers that merits NSA attention.

When NSA comes to UMass March 1st, carry signs outside their interviewing offices if you want. As for me, I'm signing up for an interview, so I can waste their time, and ask as many questions of them as I can. I want to find out exactly what it is they want from us college students.

When being single sounds good

Today's complaint is not a new one. However, as I move closer into the age of marriage and children I begin to see how hard it will be and, if I listen to television, how totally incompetent I am in my present state. How am I supposed to raise fine, responsible children and take care of a husband and a home when I don't know what is the best paper towel to use? Should I use Bounty, extra-strength Bounty, or new improved Bounty? The regular kind is definitely out. I would have to be new improved. After all I want the best for my family.

Amy Kaplan

According to advertisers, I should rise very early — around 6 a.m. (before the baby awakes, of course) and shower with the smallest soap in the house while letting Calgon take me away. Now, after I'm through I should "take time for myself" and douse myself with several forms of feminine protection and hygiene. I'm now ready to get dressed. Of course, this would not be complete without my Sheer Energy to give me a little spunk during the day.

As I glide into my kitchen haven I am ready to begin the breakfast ritual. A Flintstone vitamin for each of the children: God forbid they should begin the day without the vitamin C of 4 oranges! Next it's on to a well balanced meal to begin the day. A nutritious bowl of Total for each member of my family and of course — instant Brown-N-Serve sausages so they shouldn't have to wait. After lovingly kissing my family good-bye I look forward to the satisfying task of cleaning up the kitchen. Washing the dishes in Lemon Joy and mopping the floor with Mr. Clean is an exhilarating experience. Now I can look forward to tackling my oven with Easy Off and Shouting all that dirt out of the laundry.

As I awake from this nightmare, I look around my typical, cluttered student apartment and thank anyone who might be listening that the biggest decision I'll have to make at this hour of the morning is whether or not to go to my 10:10 class! Somehow, single never sounded so good. This is going to be a great day.

It's an attitude problem

To the Editor,

According to an article printed in Monday's Collegian, Prof. Howards was disturbed by the condition of the campus. It seems the professor was irritated about mud around UMass. I would like to know just what mud he is talking about. There doesn't seem to be a great quantity of mud on the hundreds of tarred paths on campus. These 'hardened' areas are there for students and professors to walk on and keep the surrounding areas open for grass. This university puts in walkways constantly, and maybe the solution of too much mud would be to tar over the whole campus. I believe there is a better solution for everybody visiting and attending this campus. This would involve more respect and responsibility in our university by walking on the walkways and keeping the 'mud' available for grass and trees.

Holding your car hostage

To the Editor,

Besides waiting in line at the Bursar's office, Dining Commons or a local bar, I can't think of anything more frustrating than having your car towed.

You can curse, kick, scream, and even have a fit in the middle of the street and Amherst Towing will still leave you standing in the dust. The truth of the matter is that when you get towed at UMass, Amherst Towing has you in the palm of their hands and there is little you can do but pay the outrageous fee to have your car released from being held hostage. Needless to say I don't think Amherst Towing has too big a fan club, not among my friends anyway.

One of my guests in particular, who has been the victim of the red and white A.T. trucks twice in the past semester, would rather thumb up to UMass and risk frostbite than hand Amherst Towing any more money. He reasons that doctors bills aren't half as bad as towing fees. I think I'll send my kids to mechanic school.

So hats off to Pete Zakon for researching the UMass parking and towing syndrome (Tuesday Feb. 7 Collegian). I now know where and how to appeal a parking ticket and exactly what the winter overnight restrictions are. I've already hung one copy on my bulletin board and sent several more to my weekend guests who were debating whether or not to apply for charge cards at Amherst Towing.

A superior comic strip

To the Editor,

After reading the "Letters to the Editor" for a long time (2 years) I am surprised by two things: One, the number of letters against the "UMass Zone" and two, the fact that I have yet to see one letter in support of the strip. Whatever happened to unbiased journalism, or has the "UMass Zone" never gotten a letter of support? I seriously doubt the latter.

The "UMass Zone" is a great strip, compared to most of its Collegian contemporaries. It not only ranks high, but possibly superior. What cartoon is as rich in sophisticated subtleties of humor? What comic strip so consistently gives us four frames of a joke that makes sense?

The importance of W.E.B. DuBois

Today, February 23 has been designated W.E.B. DuBois Day in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, by proclamation of Governor Dukakis. This is a significant and positive step in recognizing the contributions made by DuBois to our state and national heritage, and in recognizing the important achievements in Black History in general in the overall history of the United States.

Dr. William Edward Burghardt DuBois was born over a hundred years ago in nearby Great Barrington. His writings, philosophy, and activism in promoting the cause of civil rights are universally acknowledged. DuBois was one of the original founders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. But the process should go one step further, and closer to home. The Library Tower contains the W.E.B. DuBois library, the most extensive collection of his published works and letters and it should be dedicated in his name as well.

While this is something administration officials have seemed to support, nothing has been done yet. If the Trustees of the University have to approve it, then we recommend submitting the measure for their approval. If the Tower has to be fixed first, then this is but another reason why that problem should be addressed too.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Letters

Furthermore, what comic strip dares to make us laugh without relying on the "cute smiles" of characters, nonsensical illustrations or dialogue, or other innane ploys used too often by the other Collegian cartoonists? And finally, what comic strip dares to make us laugh in this oh-too-conscious-of-isms UMass world? The answer is the "UMass Zone" and I think it does a pretty good job. Everyone is entitled to one's own opinion in this instance; to like or dislike the strip. Let's chalk up this "Letter to the Editor" to the "UMass Zone" side. It certainly needs it, and it certainly deserves it.

Constitution controversy

The SGA constitution, which has been tabled to the Area Governments for passage is a monument to the democratic process. Earlier this year it seemed that there could be no constitution which would address all the concerns of the various interest groups in the Senate, but now that hurdle is behind us. About two weeks ago the Senate unanimously approved of the constitution it tabled to the Area Governments.

The present controversy surrounding the document appears to be whether or not the SGA leaders chosen to negotiate the details of the constitution, with the University's administration, are able or even willing to defend the different interests represented in the document.

There are those in the Area Government assemblies who would deny passage of the constitution, not on the basis of its lack of merit, but on the basis of the negotiation team chosen by the Senate to deal with the administration. I cannot assert that the Senate has chosen the best or the most representative negotiators possible, but it is my firm belief that the persons chosen are both able and willing to defend all the interests represented in the constitution. Area Governments must not deny passage to the constitution because the administration has set a limit of four persons for the team of negotiators, and the Co-Presidents of the SGA, and the Speaker and Treasurer of the Senate have been chosen by virtue of their positions. If passage of the constitution is denied it must be because of its lack of merit.

I strongly urge the Area Government assemblies to pay attention to my admonishment: There are greater victories, than the addition of an Area Government representative to the team of negotiators, to be won; there are greater things, than the breakdown of the democratic process, to be lost. Vote with this in mind!

The readers right to know

There have been some serious accusations made in these pages regarding the visit of the Rev. Jesse Jackson to the University of Massachusetts; specifically the coverage the Collegian gave his visit, of which I played a major role.

Peter Abraham

I had not felt, until now, it was necessary to answer my detractors. But after reading the editorials and letters to the editor of the past week I feel compelled to present to the readers the actual account of what happened.

A charge has been made that the Collegian did not permit Black Affairs Editor Yadira Betances to attend and cover the Jackson speech in the Fine Arts Center. Obviously, if the people charging this read the entire paper, they would find this is not true. Yadira covered, for the Black Affairs page, the cultural and social implications of the speech relating to Blacks and specifically Black History Month.

My role in covering the speech was to write on the political ramifications of what Jackson had to say. Jackson is running for the Democratic presidential nomination and in our opinion, that was the news event. One writer, due to tight deadlines, was not able to write both stories, so two staff writers covered the event, in area's editors they were qualified to report on. Both were solid stories.

A few days later I discovered that funding for the Jackson speech was provided through student funds with only $1,000 of the $2,250 coming from an outside source, Afrik-Am. A news analysis I wrote about this fact has been since much maligned.

Charges have been made that I failed to attempt to contact the parties involved. Specifically John Ruddock, the president of Students for Jesse Jackson, the Student Government Association, the Student Affairs department, or Afrik-Am. This is not true.

On February 7th I spent from 1:00 to 5:30 p.m. chasing down Ruddock in the Student Union Building. I left messages where he works, with associates of his, and in the SGA office. I left both a phone number and the message that I would be in the Collegian offices. He was given my message by a friend of his, but he failed to contact me.

As for Afrik-Am I checked in the Student Affairs office for a phone number and called every ten minutes for three hours without an answer. The story in no way mentioned that group to begin with, other than to say that they contributed $1,000. I wanted to contact them only to confirm this fact.

If I did not contact the SGA, as has been charged, then where did I obtain the list of costs for the Jackson speech? From the SGA Treasurer's Office that's where. I was given a complete list of costs and another list telling where the money came from, thus the focus of my story. The figure of $2,250 did not materialize out of thin air.

Finally it has been said that I failed to talk to anyone in student affairs. Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson and I talked at length on the 7th about the speech and the funding. If he does not know anything about Student Affairs I may have even a bigger story and want to thank people for pointing this fact out.

The analysis article was not on Jackson the man, the candidate, nor was it an attack on him or any racial group. It was what every newspaper should strive to do, report to its readers when it discovers wrongdoing. It is our job.

I will admit, we did editorialize in the article by raising questions about the irregularities present. If so, I apologize. I do not, however, feel sorry if I ruffled any feathers by pointing out this discrepancy in school policy. People who deal in public funds should always be ready to be scrutinized by the press. The SGA, Afrik-Am, or any student who controls expenditures should have nothing to hide. As for a student's status, it is a matter of public record at state universities.

The speech of George McGovern, also a candidate, was according to all sources, not paid for by student funds in a way similar to Jackson's speech. Madson said that security money was spent to be sure that participants were protected. The money spent on Jackson for the same reason is warranted as well, even more so due to his crowd appeal.

This university must formulate a clearer policy for funding candidates when they choose to come to UMass. It should not be up to student groups such as the SGA, to decide which candidate will be given money for hall rental, lights, and publicity. Either all candidates must be given the same amount of money or no candidate should receive a dime from student funds. Possibly a separate fund could be set aside on election years to provide this support, so that everybody's candidate gets equal, unbiased support from UMass.

The intent of the analysis was to report on what we thought was the misuse of student funds. The job of a college newspaper, any newspaper, is to keep readers informed when it discovers these facts. Hopefully this will set the facts straight.

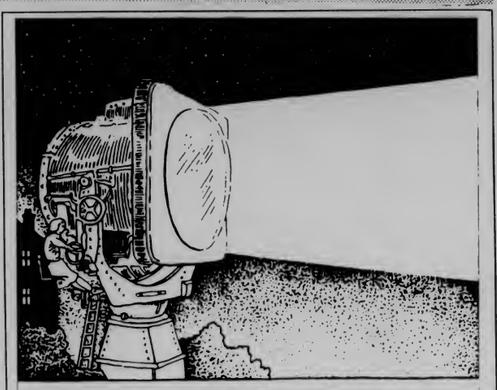
His Life is a riot

His Life
The Years of Struggle
by Glen Baxter
Hardback $13.95. Knopf

By DAVID TAYLOR
Collegian Staff



Sooner or later it was inevitable that the master of eccentric parody, Glen Baxter, would turn his hand to 'autobiography.' Here is his offering, "the unexpurgated chronicle of the early years...the compelling and poignant tale of a young boy growing up in a terrifying landscape of deprivation, humiliation and alliteration somewhere in Baxter shows the ludicracy in both the Baxter shows the ludicracy in both the subject and the medium by means of an irrationality and wit that surpasses such elements to become the subject itself.

Even for those not familiar with his technique Baxter's quiet insanity drives the comic points straight to their mark. The book is broken into six loose sections--The Arrival; The Neighbours; The Annual Holiday; School Days; Relatives; The Departure--and probably the most entertainingly nonsensical bibliography I have ever read, its only connection with the book being the fact that it deals exclusively with writers called Baxter.

The format for the volume is one or two pages with a few lines of text followed by an ink-line or watercolor drawing. The comedy is that of the absurd--the absurdity arising either from the juxtaposition of text and drawing, or from the illustrations themselves. Baxter would be at home among the Monty Python team, his undercurrent of anarchy now channelled by the confines of the genre. If his 'funnies' ever lacked context or direction Baxter now has the discipline to allow every element of his comedy to be enjoyed. The coherence of the natural chronological organization of autobiography runs to great effect against the nonsensical subject matter in the book--it reads like an intense Woody Allen movie.

Baxter is English, and the background environment for His Life is essentially and delightfully English. But the parody still stands without knowledge of those elements peculiar to England. If anything, the distancing intensifies the absurdity of the situations. Baxter's hero is the 'Everyman' who typifies the culmination of every autobiographical cliche, but who could never really exist.

Baxter's ability to cram detail upon detail into his drawings makes the book the sort you want to keep and pull out to cheer up another rainy Massachusetts day. His Life is a winner, the concentration of a superbly sharp but anarchic wit, and a joy to read again and again. Buy it--your only regret will be that your friends will want to borrow it all the time.

Leslie Stainton, Linda Amendola and Andrew Dolan discuss Stainton's script of Lorca: Poet in New York, which will be presented through Saturday in the Curtain Theater. Performances are at 8 p.m. and tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office. For further information, call 545-2511.

A Sister speaks out

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

In a film on art in the sixties at Mount Holyoke College earlier this month, Andy Warhol was asked about the future of art, a question to which he replied, "it is not film...it is political art." The current show at the Student Union Gallery bears out both sides to Warhol's somewhat contradictory statement.

The Student Union Gallery is showing a large exhibition of political art entitled End of the Rainbow. Displaying more than 300 pieces, End of the Rainbow includes artwork from all over the world and was assembled by a feminist anti-nuclear collective, Sisters of Survival, or S.O.S.

The show is the culminating phase of "a call to arts" (instead of arms) against the arms race. As a result of travelling and performing in the United States and Western Europe, S.O.S. has amassed an extraordinary collection of anti-nuclear art, from which no submitted artwork was rejected. While this may frighten off purists, it does give a glimpse of the artistic diversity and creativity being generated around the nuclear issue. For End of the Rainbow is indeed a rainbow of style, approach and medium, with an emphasis on inexpensive reproduction (such as photography, color xerox, posters, postcards, banners, buttons, etc.) laminated in plastic for easy handling and shipping. So far, its world tour has only cost two thousand dollars to produce, a sum which the Sisters raised themselves from the wages of their "regular" jobs.

S.O.S. was founded in 1981 by Anne Gauldin, Cheri Gaulke, Sue Mayberry, Nancy Angelo, and Jerri Allyn. Its purpose is to generate a dialogue between Europe and America in response to the deployment of nuclear missiles to Europe. Their effort has been made in three phases: performing and collecting in the United States, performing and collecting in Europe and putting everything together and presenting it in this exhibit.

At a slide presentation on Friday evening, one of the Sisters, Jerri Allyn, elaborated the importance of art and politics by saying that "we still have a choice between war and peace," and that "art will play a vital role in making that choice collectively." Allyn said that the rainbow signified "the end of a storm and the pot of gold we can find at the other end: a new beginning."

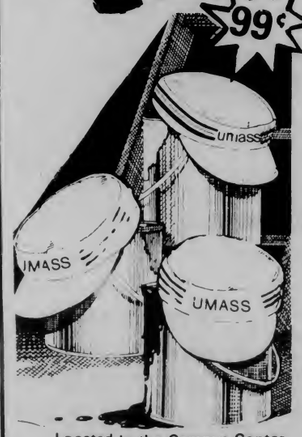
While placing S.O.S.'s concern with political art in a historical context of a growing movement of art activists over the past century, Allyn traced political art to such pre-modern origins as the shamans of pre-historic times and said that there have always been political artists. According to Allyn, it wasn't until the advent of capitalism that art was perceived as a "contentless product" and the artist as an "eccentric alone in his garret."

Allyn then reviewed the Utopian-Anti-utopian movement in art over the twentieth century, citing the influence of the Mexican muralists on American painters in the Thirties, particularly those involved with the W.P.A., when social consciousness flourished in American art. However, it wasn't until the social unrest of the '60s that an art of social concern re-emerged, only to flounder in the last decade, although still playing a vital role in the feminist movement, if not the art world, and mushrooming again in the '80s.

Allyn spoke of her own emergence as a political artist as "a coming of terms with herself." A New Yorker, Allyn was exposed to marches and struggles as well as a strong sense of neighborhood in the city. As a young woman, she began doing neighborhood theater with other women. They even assembled the All City Waitress Marching Band, with pots and pans as instruments.

After a move to the West Coast, Allyn met Suzanne Lacey at the San Francisco Arts Institute. She then collaborated with Cheri Gaulke in attempting a performance art with a "new aesthetic, beyond theatricality, based on networking, ritual, and female spirituality." This led to several shows centered on social issues such as lesbianism, violence against women, incest, and finally with nuclear war as a womens' issue. Allyn related that "S.O.S. was born out of a year of shared sisterhood."

I found Jerri Allyn's lecture to be telling and fore-telling. Certainly, her outlook on the re-emergence of political art in the '80s is demonstrated by such recent major shows as the Terminal Show in New York, Dreams and Nightmares in Washington, and Social Concern in the 80's in Boston. Like the others, I found End of the Rainbow at the Student Union Gallery to be not only visually stimulating, but also mentally stimulating. And I think almost anyone would.



Jerri Allyn said it this way: "When one is making anti-nuclear art, one is demanding that their audience rethink the way that they live. (For the artist) the formal thinking of art becomes a life as art, compounded by social concerns."

The show closes this Friday. Don't miss it!

Correction: the Rocky Midnight Experience will be performed this Saturday night at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. in Worcester Dining Commons.

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

What are you going to do this weekend? Go to the midnight movie again? No! This Sunday Fred Frith, the man who singlehandly reinvented rock music will be playing at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Not only that but the Weather Girls are playing in Springfield.

Fred Frith reinvented what? Fred Frith redefined the basic ideas of modern music. Mentor of that Eno guy, Frith revolutionized music by introducing the idea that instead of just changing notes when you play you should change the one or texture too. In this incarnation Frith will be playing with Tom Cora under the guise of Skeleton Crew. Frith plays guitar, violin, and other things, Cora plays the cello and other things. Frith has been playing a guitar with four bridges that is built into a table. Cora gave up the guitar to play the cello.

Does Eddie Van Halen like them?

Skeleton Crew will be playing at the Iron Horse Sunday night at 7 & 10 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door. Also now.

The Weather Girls will be playing at The Frontier Lounge tonight. The Women, formerly known as Two Tons of Fun, will follow in the tradition of Big Ed and others by appearing in the Frontier which apparently is quite the bar. In case you forget, oh how fashions change, the Weather Girls big hit was "It's Raining Men" which was cowritten by Paul Shaeffer of Saturday Night Live and more importantly David Letterman fame. If you're lucky maybe he'll show and play "Bermuda."

If you want two kinds of entertainment at once you can go to Smith College, laugh at the students and see Lou Miami and the Kozmetics all at the same time. The "Metics" will be playing at the Davis Student Center, Friday night.

Saturday, Jonathon Edwards will be playing at Danny's in Holyoke. And I forgot, the realest man in show business, Thor, will be playing (doing) the Agora Friday night. Shows start late so remember, come early and spend alot of money.

Before you buy Lou Rawls tickets, you might want to consider whether or not he deserves your money considering his attitude towards registration. That's right Registration, yep he's for it, but it is registration for the draft that he's for.

Skelton Crew, featuring Fred Firth and Tom Cora.

A man who's not for that; clown, comedian, San Francisco's version of Dick Gregory, Wavey Gravey will be appearing at Hampshire College Saturday night at 8. They're trying to get a live band to go with him. If you're lucky he'll show you the Hog Farm Film and teach you how to become a human kazoo.

And if you're not burned out from all that entertainment you can go see Koko Taylor at the Iron Horse, Monday night.

TRIVIA: Who sang "Live Wire." This doesn't include Don't touch me I'm a real Live Wire. Bring the answers down to the Collegian arts desk and we'll look at them.

Watch for Andy Gordon's TRAILERS every Friday!

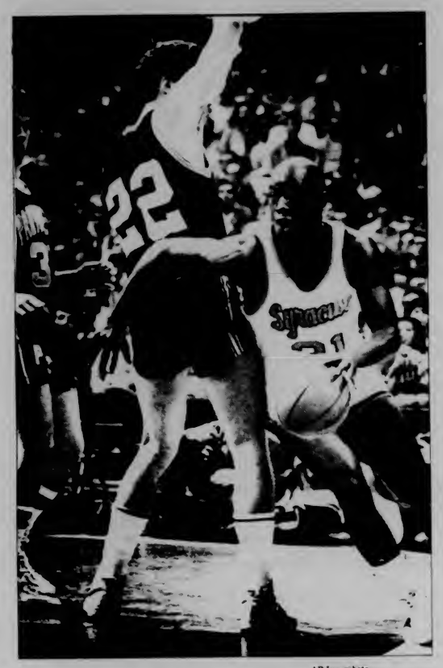
Sports Log

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

Just a few thoughts...

Well, the Olympics are over and the U.S. did pretty well, especially in the ski competition, where we obtained more medals than in any other Olympiad...Leading the way was Bill Johnson, the first true Valley Guy to win the gold...Also when you consider the fact that the luge and bobsled are practiced in this country as often as the Red Sox win the pennant, we did OK...A couple of questions remain: Why do interviewers always ask the same questions after someone wins the gold--"How do you feel?" How do you think he's going to feel? "Well, frankly I'm crushed"...How many people remember the name of the mountain the skiers skied down?...What does Dick Button do the other three years?...For 1988, is Calgary, Canada worth the 309 million ABC already put down? I think so, because the Olympics are simply the best.

Olympic hockey players are already in the NHL as the Minnesota North Stars and Hartford Whalers have signed players to contracts. We should see more in the next few days...One has to wonder how the team would have been had Tom Barrasso and Bobby Carpenter opted not to jump to the NHL...I also wonder with this Olympic "hiatus" if we don't see those obnoxious commercials as products boast of being the "official whatever of the 1984 Olympics."...Lets see if Ed McMahon will be the official blooper of the Olympics.



On to college hoop: North Carolina is still no. 1, easily defeating NC State and Maryland. But do they have the guts to come to the cage?...UMass-Temple Monday night should be a beaut. The question is, can we stop Terence Stansbury, who is leading the Owls to an undefeated record in the Atlantic 10...Nothing all that different in the NBA, so I won't mention it.

Football's almost underway, yes, football. The USFL is starting its sophomore season with 6 new clubs and a host of ex-NFL stars...This season is key for the USFL, as the novelty has worn off...In case you forgot, defending champs are the Michigan Panthers, who beat the Philadelphia Stars...Nickerson field no more team, as the Breakers went down to Bayou country. Now, that was an exciting club, as Joe Walton led them to a few last-second victories...The question remains for the networks: Can the USFL compete with baseball and the NBA and NHL playoffs?

This winter thaw puts us all in the mood for baseball, but the Mets will be sans Tom Seaver, who skipped over to ChiTown. With 3 20-game winners coming back, Chicago looks mighty good...Yogi Berra is back at the helm for the Yanks. He and Steinbrenner should make a good situation comedy.

Quote of the week, and perhaps the decade: There are 3 things people can't resist watching: a babbling brook, a roaring fire, and a Zamboni machine cleaning the ice (maybe Dick Button drives the Zamboni in his off-years)...Thanks to good ol' Charlie Brown for that quote.

No more need be said.

Minutemen hobble to West Virginia

Injuries hamper UMass for key league game

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The battered and bruised University of Massachusetts basketball team heads down to West Virginia tonight to face the streaking Mountaineers in an important Atlantic 10 game.

Forward Horace Neysmith and his 13.7 point average are questionable for the contest. Neysmith is still hobbled by a sprained ankle he suffered in Saturday's 80-62 loss at George Washington.

Things get worse. Sixth man Bobby Braun lost two teeth in practice Monday and is back home in New Jersey having oral surgery. The junior forward will dress for the game but has missed the week of practice. Forward Skip Connors, the likely sub without Neysmith and Braun in the lineup, still hasn't recovered from his lingering ankle woes.

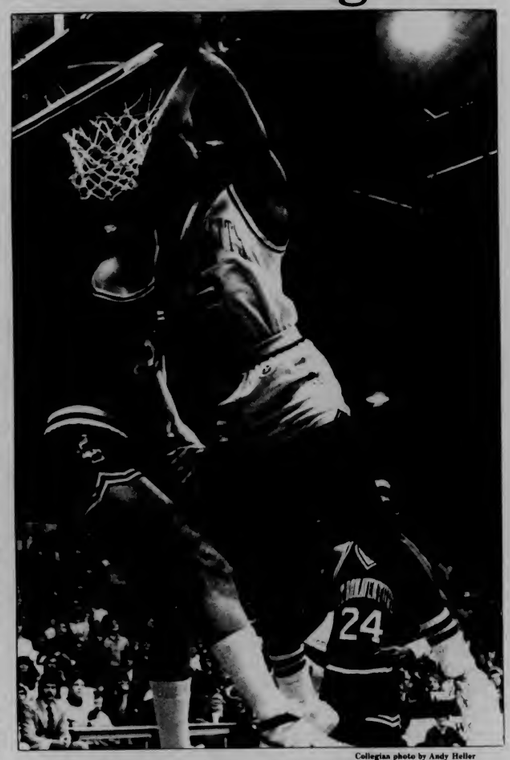
"Basically we have three forwards hurt, and that hurts the team," understated UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "Horace will see how his ankle reacts in practice and decide if he can play, he has yet to run on it and if he's not 100 percent OK he will not play at all. I hope that Bobby will be able to see a lot of action and Skip is still on a day-to-day basis."

Should the bandaged trio ride the pines the fifth starter will come from either George Ramming or Tom Emerson. That duo has scored, between them, nine points and have played only 62 minutes all season. If Gerlufsen stays consistent with his substitute patterns the start will probably go to Ramming.

"Obviously we have to get all the rest of the starters to pick up the slack if Horace and Bobby can't play," said Gerlufsen. "We will need at least ten points from Edwin Green to win." That may be a problem. The 6-7 center has scored only 15 points in the last two games. He does average 13.6 a contest but has slumped as of late.

Green will face, as he often does, a center with a height advantage. WVU will send bulky Tim Kearney, all 6-11 230 pounds of him, against Green.

UMass downed West Virginia 71-60 in a good defensive effort over Intersession at The Cage. John Hempel scored 18 for the Minutemen with Neysmith gathering 10 boards to go along with 19 points.



"We'll stick with our pressure defense and hope to cause turnovers and get into the offensive transition," said Gerlufsen. "We have to stop their perimeter game and especially (Lester) Rowe."

Rowe, the A-10 player of the Week, is coming off of a 21 point, 12 rebound performance against Penn State. He is fifth in the league with 7.3 rebounds a game. Neysmith is fourth with 7.4

"If we shoot well, which I expect to, we can win," said Gerlufsen. "This game is important in our goal of a winning season."

UMass is now 11-12, 6-8 in the conference, and with a battle coming up against nationally ranked Temple on Monday this game looms as a must-win if a winning season is to be had. The Mountaineers are a space ahead of the Minutemen in the league at 7-7.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Point guard Carl Smith needs only five assists to reach 179 handouts and tie the UMass and Atlantic 10 record for assists in a season. Pretty impressive for a freshman. Neysmith leads the league in field goal percentage at .629. Green is still the top shot blocker with 56. Edwin needs 36 points to climb into third place for the UM all-time scoring list. The Doctah is second with one point more (1370). He did it in two years. Hempel is up to 15.9 points a game, Donald Russell is now at 11.7. Smith also leads the team in steals with 38 swipes. The starters will be Green, Smith, Russell and Hempel and whoever is healthy. UMass is 9-1 at home and 2-11 on the road. The top six teams in the league will receive byes in the Atlantic 10 tournament (also at West Virginia). The Minutemen set their season-high for scoring in the St. Joe's game with 93 points. Hempel also had his season-high with 29 as did Russell with his 21 points. West Virginia is hot, they've won four in a row and defeated tough Virginia Tech at VPI. Gale Catlett's squad won the league last year with a 23-8 record.

OUTTA MY WAY — Junior forward Horace Neysmith drives against St. Bonaventure. Neysmith is nursing a sprained ankle as the Minutemen travel to West Virginia to take on the Mountaineers.

Gymnastics home final

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team is hosting Southern Connecticut tonight at 7:30 in Boyden Gymnasium.

It is the Minutewomen's last home meet of the season and marks the last home appearances in the careers of seniors Robin Low (left) and Barbara Lord (right).

Low holds the UMass record score with a 9.55 in the floor exercises event and has been a top all-around for the Minutewomen most of her career, while team captain Lord has been a standout in her specialty, the balance beam event.

Southern Connecticut figures to give the Minutewomen a tough meet but the Minutewomen figure to improve on their 7-6 record.

Duffey's okay needed to fill new vacancies

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrative vacancies will no longer be filled without Chancellor Joseph Duffey's approval.

"Effective immediately and continuing for an indefinite period, I am instituting a procedure for executive review and approval of all position vacancies, both professional and classified, regardless of the source of funding," Duffey said in the memorandum, distributed to the four vice chancellors last week.

Prior to Duffey's memorandum of administrative vacancies, Personnel Administrator James H. Coopie said, applications were submitted to the departmental supervisors and then to Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse.

"Now it must go to Duffey for final approval," he said. "If positions critically need to be filled, we've got to make a plea all the way up the line."

Duffey said in the memo that "the review will reflect all current and future vacancies including vacancies which have already been advertised for filling."

Coopie said the hold on filling position vacancies will help "focus on (and) get a grip on the amount of money in the budget that is spent on administration."

"If there are vacancies not needed or if they are needed, this will justify just that," Coopie said.

Coopie said DeNyse told him the money saved may be put toward academic purposes because academic needs "are greater now than administrative."

Coopie said procedures for the approval of filling vacancies "are not yet clear."

"DeNyse said that procedures would be forthcoming," Coopie said.

Administrative Assistant Joan Forman questions why the hold "has not been applied to other staff" outside of Whitmore.

"People are upset," Forman said.

Because of the new procedure, a present vacancy in the personnel office will go unfilled, she said.

"It is difficult and is an extra burden to other employees. An office can't function properly (because) one person means a lot. What if people are sick and there is no one to replace them " Forman said.

H. S. Overing, director of the office of employee and labor relations said he is also distressed.

"We're in a position that will not allow us to hire critical positions that need to be filled," Overing said.

Fraternity members hope to see trustees

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Four Amherst College fraternity members are in New York City today hoping to meet with the school's trustees before their scheduled vote this weekend on the abolishment of the greek system at their school.

Meanwhile, eight other members continued into a third day their fast protesting what they feel to be a lack of student input in the decision.

The General Secretary of the College, John Callahan, agreed to bring the four students to New York yesterday after the school's Interfraternity Council sent him and the trustees a statement requesting 15 minutes at the meeting "to present our case."

Also one of the nine students who Tuesday began a four-day fast to protest what they feel has been inadequate student input in the trustee deliberations, quit yesterday because of a cold.

Two others said they are considering abandoning their juice-and-water-only diet if students are actually allowed to meet with trustees.

"What we are protesting is that they are making an uninformed decision," said 20-year-old Peter Neuberger of Middlebury, Vt., a member of Psi Upsilon, explaining why he and another fraternity member may now end their fast.

But others still plan to go without food until tomorrow, saying their protest has no specific demands and that one meeting with trustees now is too little too late.

"And all they (the trustees) have just paid lip service to students," said 20-year-old Christopher Bragdon of Byfield, a member of Alpha Delta Phi. "You can't make up for three months of neglect in a day. The lack of due process still exists."

However, in their statement to the trustees, fraternity members said, "If the IFC (Interfraternity Council), represented by three to five members, is granted 15 minutes by the trustees to present our case and answer questions, we will feel that due process has been carried out."

Three members of the Amherst Student newspaper including two of the fast participants, have now quit the paper after an editorial Monday criticized the fast and the sit-in at the office of college President G. Armour Craig.

In the editorial, signed by "senior members" of the paper's editorial board, the "hunger strikers" were criticized for implying their cause was as important as apartheid, civil rights, or the nuclear arms race.

The move to abolish fraternities began last year with a "white paper" issued by former president Julian Gibbs before his death.

Amherst clubs getting by with capacity limits

By SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondent

Most students' idea of an ideal weekend night out is not waiting in line in front of their favorite club, but many are forced to do so because the Amherst Building Commissioner says the clubs must stay within their capacity limits.

"We are mainly concerned with the safety of the people. Exits must stay clear in case anything happens," said Commissioner Chet Penza. "The police can ride by and tell just by the parking lot if the club is overcrowded."

Club capacities are determined by the state building codes, amount of parking space, fixed or loose seating, and the town's zoning by-laws, Penza said.

Club crowding is an occasional problem, but the Amherst Police Department usually checks the clubs on busy nights, mainly Wednesday through Saturday, said Amherst Police Lt. David Jankowski.

"We try to keep a high visibility on licensed establishments, and I think they appreciate it also," said Jankowski.

Jankowski said area club owners are doing a good job keeping within their limitations.

Warnings have been issued, but no clubs have been shut down in the past year, Penza said.

"Usually a warning is sufficient, and the club complies with regulations," said Penza. "When a club is too crowded they have to make people leave to get back within it s limit."

Clubs are required to use a hand-held counter at the door to keep track of the number of people, Jankowski said.

Local nightclub managers say they try to get by with the restrictions.

Justin Ryan's, which has a capacity limit of 280 people and was issued a warning the first weekend of the spring semester, is currently seeking to increase its capacity limit, said manager Doug White.

More people can fit into the building than is currently allowed but the capacity is limited due to parking problems, he said.

White said a hearing is scheduled for March to hopefully resolve the problem.

Barselotti's, which has a capacity of 62 people, has a clicker at the door, and three bouncers are on duty for busy nights, said bartender Sean Eagan.

"When we reach our limit, we usually put a sign on the door, and people who want to come in will wait until others leave," said Eagan.

Senator suspended after shoving match

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Because of a shoving incident between two members of the Undergraduate Student Senate at Wednesday night's meeting, the senate has passed a motion temporarily removing one of the senators involved.

A motion which expels any senate member from the meeting after disorderly conduct was passed after Bill Collins, a Southwest Area senator, instigated a brief shoving incident with Robert Teixiera, a Third World Caucus member.

Collins was ruled "out of order" by Chris Sullivan, Senate Speaker, after he siezed floor time to criticize SGA president Tom Ahern and his administration.

Teixiera called for an apology from Collins for his "personal attack" on Ahern.

Collins responded, "don't go near me at this time." Teixiera approached Collins who then yelled "I'm goint to attack you in a second," and a brief pushing exchange ensued.

Collins left the meeting before the motion to temporarily remove him from the senate was voted on. According to the motion, he will be allowed to return to the senate in one week.

Collins could not be reached for comment about the incident or his future plans as a senator.

A motion to appoint a sergeant-at-arm to the senate meetings was considered and dropped last semester, after former Third World Caucus member George MacKenzie also siezed the floor "out of order."

STRIKE CASUALTY -- An unidentified woman driver is aided by three French truckers after her car slammed into a truck which was part of a blockade by independent truckers in France yesterday.

Big Dan rape trial begins

FALL RIVER (AP) - A young woman who entered a bar to buy cigarettes was raped and battered on a pool table for nearly 90 minutes while onlookers in the bar shouted "Do it! Do it!" prosecutors told two juries Thursday.

"She was begging for help that never came," said Bristol County Assistant District Attorney Raymond Veary. "This is a story without heroes."

"They were cheering like it was a baseball game while she continued to scream and cry for help," said Robert Kane, another assistant district attorney also prosecuting the case.

Veary's description came in opening arguments in the trial of two men charged with the March 6, 1983, gang rape at Big Dan's, a bar in nearby New Bedford.

Earlier in the day, Kane presented opening arguments in the trial of two others who are being tried separately on the same charges.

Defense attorneys reserved their right to opening arguments for a later date.

Kane told the jury how the victim's celebration of her child's birthday turned into a nightmare as she was assaulted again and again by four men while two others stood watch. When the woman finally ran from the bar, Kane said her attackers went back to the bar, "smiling and laughing and ordering drinks."

Victor Raposo, John Cordeiro, Virgilio Medeiros and Jose Mederios, all 24, are being tried on charges of aggravated rape in trial sessions held each morning. Daniel Silvia and Joseph Vieira, both 27, are being tried in the afternoon.

Judge William Young separated the trials to avoid the possibility of several defendants incriminating co-defendants. The trials are being held in tandem to prevent the publicity from one trial affecting the other.

Kane said the two Medeiros men, who are not related, helped drag the woman to the pool table and stood watch. When the bartender, Carlos Machado, tried to help the woman, the two men clocked his way.

"Virgilio Medeiros put his arms out and asked, 'Where do you think you're going,'" Kane said.

Kane said the woman had been celebrating her eldest daughter's birthday when she went down the street to buy cigarettes.

FBI joins hunt for fugitives

KINGSPORT, Tenn. (AP) - Troopers authorized to shoot to kill scoured the snowy Smoky Mountains of eastern Tennessee for two escaped convicts yesterday - and the FBI joined the search after reports that one of them threatened to kill his stepfather in Virginia.

Police said the two fugitives - who have vowed not to be taken alive - already killed a 59-year-old man and took his wife hostage on a dash across Tennessee earlier this week.

Despite rain and snow, Tennessee state troopers used helicopters to search the mountains around Bluff City, about 15 miles east of Kingsport in far eastern Tennessee.

"Investigations revealed that there's a good chance they are in that area," said Lt. Jennings Strout of the Tennessee Highway Patrol. "There are some relations there."

The fugitives are Ronald Freeman, a 41-year-old former church deacon serving 198 years for murdering his wife and stepdaughter, and James Clegg, a 30-year-old former motorcycle gang member serving life as a habitual criminal. U.S. Magistrate James H. Allen in Memphis, on the other end of the state, issued federal arrest warrants after authorities said Clegg had vowed to kill his stepfather in Virginia and Freeman planned to flee the state with a girlfriend.

Campaign cleared of theft

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department said yesterday that an eight-month investigation had left it stumped as to how the Reagan campaign obtained debate briefing materials and White House documents from the Carter administration in 1980 but concluded there was "no credible evidence of a crime."

In a three-page report, the department also said it had found no evidence of "any plan or conspiracy by Reagan election officials to obtain the Carter briefing materials or any other confidential, internal Carter documents."

Justice Department spokesman Tom DeCair said criminal activity had been discounted because the briefing materials were not government documents and contained no classified information. The internal White House documents also contained no classified information, DeCair said.

He said that despite inconsistent statements by top Reagan campaign aides-appointees about the materials, no polygraph tests were administered because "no investigative purpose would have been served since there were no legally significant inconsistencies."

Auto industry sales climbing

The auto industry yesterday said sales were still soaring, and the government reported that orders to U.S. factories for durable goods rose 1.1 percent in January.

The major auto manufacturers said sales in mid-February jumped 73.3 percent above the year-earlier rate. It was the industry's best sales performance for the period since the boom year of 1973.

The six major manufacturers built 225,260 cars in the Feb. 11-20 period, up 73.3 percent over the 129,996 delivered to dealers a year ago.

Among the Big Three, Chrysler Corp. led the way with an 85.1 percent increase. General Motors Corp. was up 76.2 percent and Ford Motor Co. gained 64.8 percent.

In a related development, Chrysler reported that it earned a company record $701 million in 1983 - including $118.3 million in the final three months - on a 31.5 percent jump in sales.

Dead body found in AIC fraternity

SPRINGFIELD - A freshman pledge was found dead early yesterday in a fraternity house at American International College, police said.

Detective Captain Ernest Stelzer said fraternity members discovered the body of James E. Lenaghan, 19, of Watertown, in a room at Zeta Chi House about 12:15 a.m.

An autopsy performed by Hampden County Medical Examiner Loren E. Mednick revealed no immediate cause of death and further toxicological tests were to be undertaken to determine whether alcohol or drugs had been involved, Stelzer said. He described the tests as routine.

Stelzer said police were still attempting to piece together what may have happend and were "interviewing students who were with him earlier." Asked whether hazing was involved, Stelzer said "We are trying to determine that. It doesn't appear so, but there were numerous fraternity members around the house that night."

Epilepsy may cause impotence

BOSTON - The discovery that a bizarre form of epilepsy may be a major cause of impotence strengthens the growing belief that male sexual problems often result from physical disorders, not mental ones, researchers say.

A new study, released Thursday, shows that a disease called temporal lobe epilepsy diminishes the body's production of sex hormones and lowers sexual drive.

"It looks as though we have yet another physical cause of impotence, and individuals who have been plagued with this problem in the past probably will no more be immediately shunted to the psychiatrist," said Dr. Richard F. Spark. "Now perhaps their family doctors will begin to look into this problem with some precision to see what can be done to help them."

Carsons agree on support figure

LOS ANGELES - Although Johnny Carson and his estranged wife Joanna have settled on a financial support arrangement, it's nowhere near the $220,000 a month she had sought, says a spokesman for the host of "The Tonight Show."

"The agreed upon figure for temorary spousal support was close to the amount suggested by Mr. Carson's lawyers, which was approximately 10 percent of the amount requested by Mrs. Carson," spokesman Jim Mahoney said late Wednesday, reading from a statement.

Mrs. Carson's request to Los Angeles Superior Court had amounted to about $2.64 million a year from her 58-year-old husband.

She had based the monthly support claim on such items as $37,065 a month for jewelry and furs, $3,955 for clothes, $12,625 gifts to friends and relatives, $1,400 for groceries and $88,000 for personal expenses.

Groups complain about Big Dan jury selection

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Some women's and community groups throughout Massachusetts are questioning the predominance of male jurors and the televising of the court proceedings in the Big Dan gang-rape trial.

Last spring, six New Bedford men, who are all Portuguese immigrants, were charged with gang-raping a 21-year-old woman on a pool table in Big Dan's Bar while dozens of other customers cheered them on.

Elizabeth Bennet, a spokeswoman for the Massachusetts Coalition of Rape Crisis Services operating out of the New Bedford Women's Center, said there are definite problems with the predominatly male juries and how they were selected.

"In questioning the jurors, the judge said he was looking for bias relating to anti-Portuguese attitudes. No questions were asked about people's understanding of rape or bias agianst rape victims or views on sexism," she said.

Two separate juries, selected from 600 possible jurors, are hearing the case because, according to newspaper accounts, several of the defendants are expected to make statements incriminating other defendants. A morning jury is comprised of 12 men and four women and after noon jury selection is not yet complete, but so far consist of eight men and six women.

Sally Borden, a victim-witness assistant for the District Attorney's Office in Northampton who assists victims of sexual violence during court procedures, said on the surface the jury composition "does seem unequal," but in some cases "there is not necessarily a correlation between the number of women and men on the jury and the outcome of the trial."

"Televising the rape case will raise the issue of is it entertainment or is it educational? There's no way of knowing," she said.

In a telephone interview Bennet said the judge hearing the trial made a decision to allow a local cable television station to cover the trial under the conditions the victim's identity not be televised.

"The big problem we're angry about is the fact that this trial will be televised and the victim' name will be mentioned in the courtroom. The cable TV station, with 40,000 viewers, won't show her picture but will reveal her name for the first time in a year," she said.

Dale Melcher, staff assistant in the UMass Women's Studies department, said she thought there was "potential for enormous abuse" with a televised trial.

Melcher also said the publicity and televising of the trial gives the community a chance to "come together and make a public stand that says this is intolerable and totally unacceptable behavior the community won't allow."

Kathy Alexander, counselor advocate against violence against women at the Everywoman's Center and a member of the State Rape Crisis Coalition, said members of the state crisis programs are going to be watching the trial with "intense interest and intense concern" for the victim.

"We are keeping a close eye on it and it will be a concern of women throughout the state that justice come about."

Rape coverage seen as detrimental

By MELISSA K. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts said they believe the televising of the Big Dan gang rape trial could be harmful to both the victim and the defendants.

In an informal poll conducted yesterday, most students agreed television coverage by a New Bedford-based cable network would be interesting, but probably would not be viewed seriously enough.

"If I knew it was going to be on cable, I would view it for entertainment," said Todd Macomber, a psychology major from Newton.

"Newspapers do enough damage without seeing everyone's reactions," said Robert Love, a 21-year-old geology major. "The situation is definitely being exploited."

Many students agreed they would like to see the trial. Debbie Moreau, an undeclared major from South Hadley said, "I always hear that they harass the girl and now I could find out if that is true or not."

Several students also remarked on the motives behind those televising the case.

"It's just taking advantage of such a publicized event and exploiting it for good ratings and money rather than to see justice and the truth found out," Peter Laurent, a psychology major, said.

Although some students said they believed cameras in the courtroom would make no difference in the trial itself, a large majority of those questioned said a camera would put "undue pressure" on all involved in the case, and thought it could even affect their testimony.

As one woman from Vineyard Haven put it, "it just doesn't seem right somehow."

Weather brings students outdoors

By TRACI MARRINO
Collegian Correspondent

Sunny skies and temperatures in the 50s brought many University of Massachusetts students outdoors yesterday to enjoy an early glimpse of spring.

Students came out in droves to sit around the Campus Pond and on the steps of the Campus Center. Lindsay Stromgren, a College of Arts and Sciences major from Amherst, said he "thought about blowing off my classes," on such a day.

And although he thought that we'll be "nailed in a week or so by cold weather," this is the kind of day that, "gets you through until spring break."

Maria Mpelkas, the UMass Women's Crew coach, said she was enthusiastic about the weather because it means that she won't have to "sit and freeze in the launch," at practice.

Mpelkas also said that this is the "earliest we've been out on the river," because of the warm weather.

Craig Sable, a first year undeclared major from Randolph, said he likes the weather because he could "go outside and study," instead of staying "cooped up in the dorm."

A group of women seated on the Campus Center steps said they liked the weather so much that "we blew off our classes, and will probably do the same tomorrow, if it's like this."

Frank McLaughlin, a first year Stockbridge School of Agriculture student, said it was "nice to just sit around" in the sun, while he was studying for a quiz.

With weather reports promising another nice day today, many more students may be able to take advantage of this touch of spring before winter has a chance to come back again next week.

Eight hopefuls debate against Reagan in NH

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

MANCHESTER, NH - In what could be the last chance for all eight democratic candidates before the Presidential primaries, strong leadership in the party was emphasized in a debate last night at St. Anselm's College.

During the debate, sponsored by the League of Women Voters five days before the New Hampshire primary, all candidates stressed that the overriding concern is to beat Ronald Reagan in November.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale said, "Next Tuesday, you, in New Hampshire have the chance to elect the most powerful citizen in America. We need a President of leadership. Mr. Reagan, whether it's Lebanon or arms control, does not know what he's doing. I know what I'm doing, from experience."

"Mr. Reagan, whether it's Lebanon or arms control, does not know what he's doing. I know what I'm doing, from experience.

- Presidential hopeful Walter Mondale

Mondale stressed a program of social justice as a way to define leadership.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., called himself the only alternative to front-runner Mondale.

"We are presented with a choice," Hart said, "a choice for America's future or our past. We need new leadership, new ideas, new proposals. There is something more important than winning, and that's telling the truth and being honest. I hope I can do both in this election."

Experience is the key to a successful candidacy, said Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

"As a Marine and a businessman, involved in science and research, I have the experience needed to become President," Glenn said. "We need more than politics."

The other five candidates concentrated on insight rather than experience.

"There's no better guide than principle," said George McGovern. "I stress the same thing I did as the Democratic nominee in 1972, and that is 'Come Home, America.'"

The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson emphasized the hardship minorities in this country face. He recalled his upbringing, remembering the days of segregation and called for Americans who feel the injustices of government to join him in his "rainbow" candidacy.

But for Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the issue of peace is the main concern in the 1984 election.

"As we become closer to war, all the candidates here say they are committed to peace," he said, "but I was the first candidate committed to peace. A vote for me would make this message understandably clear."

SGA candidates attack conservatives

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Former Student Government Association President Jim Murphy has decided to run again, but this time under an assumed name.

Murphy and his running mate, Paul Gosselin, a former student senator have asked that their names appear on the election ballot as "Camel" Murphy and "Gumby" Gosselin. The name change was the cause of controversy at a heated senate meeting earlier this week.

The candidates, both seniors, said they chose the names "out of thin air" in order to emphasize issues and show that "names are not important."

They said their use of ficticious names would not affect how their candidacy is perceived by the student body.

"I think running under ficticious names and running a joke campaign are two different things," Murphy said.

The candidates said they were concerned with the conservative ideology of some of the senators in the SGA and criticized them for not taking strong activist stands on national and international issues such as the Grenada invasion.

Last semester the senate passed a resolution condemning the invasion following a heated debate.

Issues like the Grenada invasion and the recruiting efforts of United Technologies Corporation at the University of Massachusetts are important, the candidates said, because of their ultimate effect on students.

The recruiting efforts of United Technologies on-campus were condemned in a resolution passed by the senate last semester because the company did not publicly disclose their contracts with the university, the candidates said.

"For students saying we shouldn't work on national issues is saying that we're just here living in a bubble," Murphy said. "My fear is a relatively passive student government. I would personally like to see the area governments being a little more active," he said.

Murphy said the student judicial system "is currently a mess' and criticized the governments for not taking action to correct the situation.

He said that when housing arrangements were reorganized "the area governments just sat back."

The candidates attacked the conservatives in the student senate, saying they were less concerned with student rights, social issues which affect students and student advocacy.

Murphy said senators, students of the community, have a "responsibility to act" and should work on "anything that affects students regardless of where it comes from."

"The students pay rents on this place," Gosselin said, pointing to the Campus Center as an example, "and students should have a right to say what goes on here," he said.

Amherst Rent Commission meets with little response

By MICHAEL MEAGHER
Collegian Correspondent

An Amherst apartment complex owner told the town's Rent Control Study Commission last night that rent control should be dealt with as a social rather than an economic issue.

Raymond Campbell, owner of East Amherst Village Apartments, said at a commission hearing if society wants all citizens to have safe and sanitary housing, then society should pay for it.

"One segment of society (the landlords) should not have to provide housing," he said.

The first of two public hearings to help the commission study the volatile question of whether Amherst should have a rent control ordinance produced a mere whisper of response from residents.

Steven Puffer, part-owner of Puffton Village, and a woman who is a tenant at Colonial Village Apartments were the only people who joined Campbell in making statements at the hearing.

Ken Mosakowski, chairman of the commission, said he didn't think the light turnout reflected a lack of public interest on the subject of rent control.

"I don't think it indicates that there is a lack of interest. It's been the subject of hundreds of hours of debate over the past 10 years," he said.

Campbell said taxpayers, rather than landlords, should subsidize rent control.

"Let's not have someone in the private sector who happens to make his livelihood from owning property subsidize it (rent control)," he said.

Under rent control landlords will be hesitant to make improvements in their units because there would be no return on the investments, according to Campbell.

"It will substantially diminish my willingness to upgrade or put anything into the apartments," he said.

"The gray hair on the top of my head indicates that I'm aging. Aging ownership won't take risks," Campbell said.

Steven Puffer expressed a concern that many landlords might decide not to rent property under rent control because they would have to do so at a loss.

"There is a possibility of landlords deciding not to rent under rent control when they would out of it," he said.

Mosakowski said that he hoped more people would participate at a second hearing to be held March 1 at the Town Hall. Residents may also mail information to the commission at the Town Hall, he added.

Charred newspapers found

University of Massachusetts Police responded to a report of charred newspapers and magazines in front of a second floor elevator in Cashin dormitory Wednesday at 10:13 a.m.

Police said the items were found by a dormitory resident, and the incident has been labeled suspicious. It is under investigation.

UMass Spokesman Art Clifford said that no one saw anything burning, but "somebody called (the police) and reported they had found a magazine that was burnt."

While "nobody has been able to attribute a cause to the magazine being burnt," Clifford said "it's conceivable" that the burned material was refuse from a fire early that morning in a trash barrel in a second floor stairwell. There was no damage in that incident.

In other police action:

Shortly before 5 p.m. Wednesday, police received a report of an assault and battery. Police said the complaintant was walking through the Campus Center Concourse when he was approached by another male, who made a threatening remark and swung at him with a knife. -MARY ANNE BEEN

Data Processing Center handles UMass' information

EDITOR'S NOTE: This article is part of an occasional series on computers at the University of Massachusetts.

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

Handling the flow of information at a large institution is a monumental task, but at the University of Massachusetts, it is done by only one department.

The Data Processing Center in the Whitmore Administration Building serves nearly everly UMass administrative department on the Amherst, Boston and Worcester campuses more than 400 computer terminals, said Center Director Martin A. Smith.

In 1954, the Data Processing Center was established, when electronic accounting machines were used for payroll and student records.

By the 1983 fiscal year, the center's data processing budget was $3.1 million--1.77 percent of the entire University budget, and an IBM compatible National Advanced System computer was running 24 hours a day, seven days a week, said Smith.

The center now processes up to 100,000 transactions a day for administrative departments requiring data about student and faculty payroll, housing, course scheduling, student records and more, he said.

On the Amherst campus alone, the center coordinates more than 143 systems on a daily basis. This, with the "exponentially" growing demand for additional service puts the center in "an incredibly difficult situation" requiring the careful budgeting of computer access, Smith said.

At night, the Data Center computer takes care of "batch runs," Smith said. The computer prepares the 12,000 weekly pay checks, sends out the bills, and runs financial programs.

"It's a huge effort every night," Smith said.

Manager of budget and administration for the Data Center Norman Menegat said the center runs through 50 cases of paper every week. This does not count special forms, and the millions of paper labels used every year.

Demand for access to data is greatest during the day, Smith said, when the center strives to keep about 10 billion bits, or pieces, of information on line.

The consolidation of this information into one central data base and the comparatively simple format the system requires have lead to problems with access to the computer, Smith said.

With over 143 departments running systems, every single department would like every single thing that they want done, done yesterday. At a certain point in time we've got a finite number of people to make those changes," he said.

To meet the booming demand requires additional larger computers, and more microcomputers for access, Smith said. "But the bottom line it always comes down to is dollars and cents," he said.

Yet the Data Center will continue to increase and improve its services, Smith said, pointing to the implementation of a new centralized student data system in the fall of 1983 as the first phase of a plan to improve the registration process at UMass.

The second phase will be the acquisition of a new course scheduling system, probably in two or three years, costing from $50,000 to $250,000, he said. The present 12 year old system has become outdated, he added.

Group wants UMass video

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

A Union Video Center staff member has applied for a $1000 grant from the Board of Governors to make a film that would enhance the University of Massachusett's image.

Charles Sennott, who wasn't present at last night's meeting, had a proposal presented by BOG treasurer Jeremiah Quill, which said due to unfortunate happenings such as the series of Southwest fires the university is in dire need of some good public relations. A film which would stress the strengths of the university "could be just what the doctor ordered," Quill said.

According to the proposal, the video would be entitled "University Review", and would have a magazine format produced as a two part series.

Each part will be an hour long with four seperate features. The films will also stress some of the interesting programs and faculty that UMass has to offer.

"We have some of the finest programs in the country including polymer science, chemistry, literature, and anthropology. And I haven't heard of a really weak program here," Quill said. "Now it's time that people -- especially in Massachusetts -- realize just how great of a state university they have. It's tough when you have such stiff academic competition in the state."

In opposition to the original proposal was BOG Director William Harris, who said the statement had no depth, and that it "obviously needed much cleaning up before the board should pass the motion."

"We don't want to give away $1000 to anyone who hands the BOG a page and a half proposal. If we did that, we'd find ourselves losing a lot of money," Harris said.

In defense of the project, Quill said that Harris' comments were minor problems to be worked out, but that the initial idea is an excellent one.

"The Union Video Center is an excellent group of people. This is their baby, and we should show a little trust in them. We really can't be an over-zealous watchdog on this project, because making a good film takes freedom and creativity," Quill said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Women need better treatment

The sexual objectification of women recently achieved new heights on this campus. Pi Kappa Alpha, a UMass fraternity, has posted advertisements for the movie, "Spring Break" throughout dormitories and the Campus Center. The advertisement portrays an incredibly violent message toward women.

Rebecca Thatcher

The advertisement is a photograph of a portion of a woman's body from the naval to the middle of her thigh lying on her side, facing forwards. She is wearing a very skimpy string bikini, basically naked. Standing on her hip are four men holding the shaft of a flag which they are about to push into her flesh. The men are in the classic war-time position of conquerors. It is a blatant image that depicts gang rape as (I quote the poster) "the most fun a couple of bodies can have."

Considering that images like this are prevalent and widely accepted in our society, it is not surprising that violence against women is increasing.

People should know better than to put this sort of poster up all over the campus. But there are two problems.

One is ignorance and the other is simply that while society condemns rape, it condones the images of violence against women that lead to rape. One of the men to whom I showed the poster said, "Why don't you call the fraternity and ask them if they had any choice as to using that particular poster?"

That kind of attitude is simply not acceptable. It is akin to saying, "It is okay for them to portray a gang rape as a fun thing if that is the only advertising poster the movie company sent them." Men and women have to learn to condemn the portrayal of violence against women vehemently as they condemn the act of violence against women.

Hopefully Pi Kappa Alpha will learn from this, but just to make sure that their consciousness is raised; think of something else to do Saturday night. There are plenty of other movies playing in the area, and I doubt that the movie is worth seeing if, as is usually the case, the poster says something about the subject matter of the movie.

Don't reward Pi Kappa Alpha with your dollar for doing something so rash and unthoughtful. You will be doing both the fraternity and yourself a favor.

Lookout ABC Saga is here

I've quit watching Dynasty on Wednesday nights. I've switched to a steamier, more dramatic and intricate nightime soap. It's called Saga.

Set at a large public University in New England's fertile Pilgrim Valley, Saga goes behind the scenes to show the battle for control of a multi-million dollar University. Each week the action is centered around the meeting of the board of directors of the school, Duffy University.

Jim Finkle

Currently the main controversy is surrounding the election of a president of the corporation that runs Duffy University. An election became necessary after former president Tom Thumb was run over by a shuttle bus carrying students from the University campus to a local supermarket.

Although it would not be possible to provide readers with an adequate summary of what has happened on the show up to now, I have compiled the following Saga Guide to Action (SGA).

Four people vying for the presidency of Duffy's parent corporation have divided the University's Board of Directors. At a recent meeting a violent dispute broke out between two members of the board during a discussion over whether or not one candidate, Slim "Whitman" Murphy, could run for the presidency. Evidently the company has a mandatory retirement age of 65. Whitman will turn 65 in May. The Board of Directors decided that Whitman should be allowed to run so that the stockholders of the company would have the chance to judge whether or not the mandatory age was equitable.

During the coming weeks before the election, two characters on the show will have the burden of keeping the rest of the cast honest. Chairman of the Board Christopher Speaker and Secretary of the Corporation Melinda Wrongway will be in charge of making sure that chaos does not break out before the election. Wrongway will supervise collection of proxy votes while Speaker will have to contend with an untrustworthy, deceptive and often unruly Board of Directors.

Speaker's job will be especially difficult because Duffy University has been mandated by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) to rewrite its articles of incorporation. Although the officers of the Corporation had written a new set of articles of incorporation, the stockholders voted them down at the request of Univeristy Advisory Council (UAC), a puppet organization of presidential hopeful Reindeer Dooley.

Program Producer String Beanie has announced that the cast has taped an upcoming episode in historic Boston where the show's characters will testify behind-the-scenes in a series of top secret government hearings. The remote trip raised controversy at Saga's network headquarters because of cost overruns brought about by the accumulation of huge parking fines. Beanie has refused comment.

Perhaps the most exciting episode of the season will take place on the occassion of the 1000th meeting of the Board of Directors of Duffy University. To celebrate the occassion, Chairman Speaker has made arrangements to host a huge anniversary party. The program's producers have spread rumors that cameo appearances will be made by such celebrities as Henry Kissinger, the widow of late chairman Mao, former Corporate President James Collins and his wife, Joan.

But, the entire celebration is contingent upon the success of the program. If the show's writers do not choose an adequate storyline and allow the stockholders to elect an adequate president for Duffy University, then viewer interest will certainly lag and the show will be cancelled. It's all up to the writers.

Why 'Fall' failed

To the Editor:

My friend R. Miler tells me that someone wrote to your paper wanting to know if any other comics had been submitted this semester. I think it only fair to point out that, indeed, at least one other strip was submitted. It was one that had appeared in your paper before--one or two of your readers may remember it. It was called After the Fall, and it pretended to tell the story of my extended visit to UMass. I say "pretended" because Mr. Miller shamelessly exaggerated many events in my life--but that's another story.

While I don't go in much for academia anymore, I am saddened to hear that Mr. Miller has been unable to continue my story in print. I don't say this out of mere vanity, or even out of honest appreciation of his work. I say this because he paid well.

But what I really want to say is this: Mr. Miller failed because he was careless. He accidently forgot to write about keg parties, hangovers, drunken brawls, and drug overdoses that are so central to college life. He also forgot to make sure his strip was as sexist, racist, and classist as possible. (I admit he was a little closer to the norm in these respects, but he should have been more conscientious in insulting women and gays.)

I will conclude with a paraphrase of a line from a poem I read in the one class I attended regularly at UMass. Mr. Miller's most consistent fault was that, from time to time, he would "deviate into sense."

Sylvan defends itself

To the Editor,

As Co-Presidents of the Sylvan Area Government, at this time, we feel it is necessary to make a statement addressing the status of our body. In a front page Collegian article, February 22, the public was misinformed of the action of the Sylvan Area Government. It was reported that the Sylvan Area Government rejected the Student Government Association (SGA) Constitution. In actuality, our body chose to table the document for a period of one week, allowing all of our members to review the document more thoroughly. Sylvan Area Government in no way vetoed the consideration of the SGA Constitution.

We are a newly formed area government, due to problems beyond present executive control, but now we are well on our way as a strong and unified body. We are members of United Areas Council and we felt obligated to bring their recommended resolution to our body, but Sylvan Area Government, as a whole, chose to approve its own resolution. In Sylvan's Resolution, we also expressed distress over the lack of residential voice on the SGA appointed committee to deal with the constitution. However, we do not feel that vetoing the constitution is the proper vehicle towards achieving this goal.

We have, therefore, taken a firm stance, in the appeal for the appointment of a residential voice on this committee. Sylvan Area Government is growing rapidly and is developing new ideas and broad perspectives. Our meetings are open to the public and are held on Sunday, at 8:30 p.m. in Cashin suite 02. We would like to encourage all those interested in finding out what really goes on, to attend the meetings of Sylvan Area Government.

Students must aid CATE

To the Editor,

As the new Course and Teacher Evaluation, C.A.T.E., coordinator I inherited a rather difficult job. The position demands not only the organization of a direct mailing to all undergraduates with their evaluation forms, overseeing the writing of the C.A.T.E. guide which is distributed each fall, but I must also continue our ongoing attempt to involve a greater number of students in the evaluation process.

The major criticism leveled at the C.A.T.E. project is the relatively small number of students submitting evaluations in comparison to class size. One important factor surrounding this apparently low response rate is the misconception that evaluations filled out in class are those used by the C.A.T.E. project. In fact the evaluations filled out in class are protected by state law from public review. From our direct mailing last year we received an 8 percent reply rate. If this seems low, just consider this represents a 20 percent increase over the previous year.

This year we would like to continue this positive trend. To this end, I appeal to you, the students, to fill out and return your evaluations as soon as they arrive in your mailbox shortly after spring break. With your contribution this year's C.A.T.E. guide will be the most respected and helpfu source of information yet.

David B. Wigdor
C.A.T.E. Coordinator

When you're in a tight spot, good friends will help you out.

When you pulled in two hours ago, you didn't have this problem. And with a party just starting, the last thing you wanted to do was wait around another two hours.

Neither did the rest of the guys. So when they offered to give you a lift, that's exactly what they did, proving not only that they were in good shape, but that they were good friends.

So show them what appreciation is all about. Tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Parents urged to protect children

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (AP) — Parents should accompany children to school until police apprehend whoever has sexually attacked four girls, the youngest 8 years old, in the past month, School Superintendent Jerome B. Jones urged.

Two suspects were questioned Wednesday, a day after the 8-year-old was raped, "but there's nothing concrete," said police Maj. George Hydar. He said patrolmen today would begin to "saturate the area," a section of northwest St. Louis dotted with abandoned buildings, where the attacks have occurred since Jan. 24.

Authorities said the latest assault was probably unrelated to the others, in which a 15-year-old and a 16-year-old were raped and another girl was the victim of a rape attempt.

Alumni reminisces about his school years

By MARILYN BOU
Collegian Correspondent

He strolled back to his seat while staring at the 6 o'clock news on television. His charisma and warmth overflowed his friend's livingroom.

Steven Moore, a distinguished member of the Third World community, is in the Pioneer Valley visiting.

Moore, a native of Greenville County, South Carolina, is a UMass graduate with degrees in education, sociology and literature. After leaving the Pioneer Valley, he has travelled throughout the world and has received various literary awards.

Before coming to the University, Moore was extremely active in the Civil Rights Movement.

Moore said, "the Civil Rights Movement for me ended with the Orangeburg Massacre where three students were killed by state troopers while having a bonfire on their campus." From there on Moore involved himself in search of truth.

Moore came to the Springfield, Mass. area in the Spring of 1968.

He said he joined the United Christian Foundation and helped combat the housing problems the community faced then.

In the Fall of '68 Moore enrolled in the University through the Committee for the Collegiate Education for Blacks and Other Minorities (CCEBMS).

Moore said he came to UMass after being expelled from Orangeburg State College in Orangeburg, South Carolina. He said the reason the Orangeburg administration gave him for his expulsion was that he had lost too much time in his classes because of his political activism on campus.

However, he said the real reason for his suspension was his involvement in making the black community aware of themselves. He said this action was making the white community uncomfortable.

Moore explained the Afro-American studies department at the university was then operating out of the English Department. Throughout his remaining years at UMass, he said he became internally active in establishing a separate identity for the department.

"The support I received and the people I had the honor of being in contact with while a student enabled me to do what I had to do and assisted me in the choices I had to make," Moore said. "The minority students here at UMass are lucky in the resources which they have available to them. However they need to make full use of them."

"The leadership the faculty provide is very critical in both the educational and personal experience of a student," Moore said.

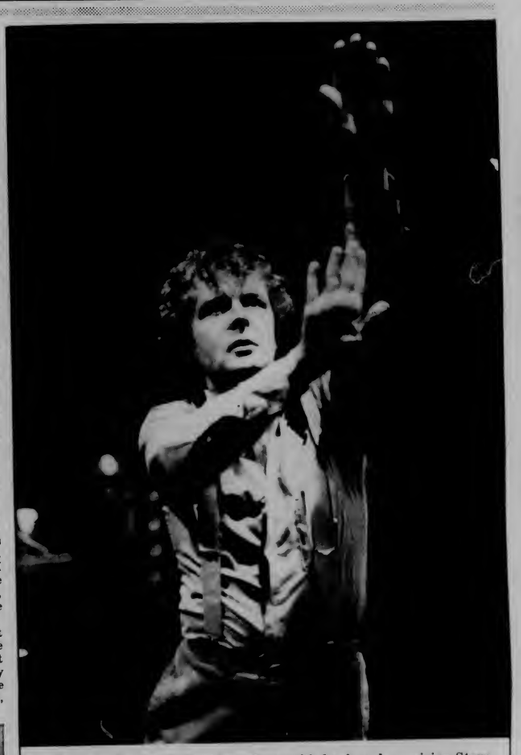
Trailers goes to Rocky

No TRAILERS this week, I opted to get cocked and go see The Rocky Midnight Experience at the Blue Wall instead. The following is my impression of the show. Several points must be noted: I've seen The Rocky Horror Picture Show at least a hundred times; the first twenty or so voluntarily at New York's Eighth St. Playhouse, the remaining as an usher and projectionist at Natick's Sack and Boston's Exeter St. Theatre. Week after week. Month after month. While I've come to understand and respect the show, I've also come to hate it.

The other point I'd like to make concerns the UMass Music Theatre Guild. At the onset I'd like to say that the Guild is perhaps the most successful and important arts group on campus. Their record is impeccable if you include Seesaw, Pippin, Godspell, Hair. These productions were amazing. This disclaimer, if you will, out of the way, I'm free to rag.

The evening began with what couldn't have been designed better to ruin one's evening. One was at first greeted by a Guild "bouncer," searching for rice and squirtguns. About the last person I ever want patting my inner thigh is a "guy" from the Guild. It's beside the point, but rice and squirtguns could do nothing but improve the "Rocky experience." After finding a table at the rear (the Guild cordially reserved all the good tables for themselves), one sat in on the cast's physical and vocal warm-ups—pointless and unprofessional; they should have been done backstage or downstairs. This, of course, was far, far more entertaining than what came next. Peter Mankin, a production assistant, read the program, which at this late stage in the show's run had become a rarity. Amidst cries of "Get off the stage, you fuckin' idiot," Mankin stretched the program into a 35 minute torture session. Many people walked out. Rightly.



Finally the show began, and it became clear what we were there for. Christine Wong and Greg Spisack opened with "Science Fiction," a great tune made greater. Wong has been in every show I've ever seen and keeps getting better, if that's possible. Actor/producer/director/set designer Spisack may have spread himself thin in some areas but his role as Riff-Raff was certainly impressive. Ditto on Mary Jennings as Columbia. Memorable in last year's Godspell as well, Jennings is seductive as hell here, and drove one fellow at my table half mad. Brad West displayed vocal talent as Frank N. Furter, but failed to convey the control the character demands; a failure the show, and many Guild shows, can't avoid.

The UMMTG does musical and production numbers as well as if not better than anyone, and often rivals even professional companies. But they have not been able to maintain any sort of narrative, which is why near-plotless shows like Godspell and Hair work so well. If you don't know what Rocky Horror is all about, you won't get a clue from this production. The dialogue sequences serve little purpose outside of a chance to hit the bathroom. Which is sad; the show has so much to say. Those who haven't seen it won't pick up the messages, much less feel them. And those who do know what it's about will, like Pavlov's dogs, respond for the sole reason that they've been trained to do so. The Rocky Midnight Experience is entertaining, but is by no means an experience.

I've got "band excellent" all over my notes so I really should make special mention of them. Carolyn Oakley on keyboards, Rich Hill on bass, Mike Dolan on guitar, Pete Levesque on sax and, of course, the unbeatable Lloyd Henley on drums deserve much of the credit for the shows' successes. When the band cooks, they really cook.

Likewise the cast, but too often they rely on imitations of established characters rather than creating their own characters. Other picky criticisms: Lighting—not bad considering extreme limitations. Props—lame. Real lame. Where was Riff's pitchfork laser? Costume—fantastic. Choreography—nonexistent so far as I could see. The stage was folded up by the men's room instead of in the Blue Wall, elevating the performers to a height where shey could be seen.

I wouldn't want my criticism to imply that this or any other Guild show should be avoided. Some are better than others but they all should be seen. Rocky will play tomorrow at the Barracks D.C., for the final performance and if you haven't seen it, what the hell, go wild.

Mime artist Marck Morrison, along with keyboards musician Steve Sinkowitz (not shown), will perform at Hampden Theatre this Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are available at the door.

Vertigo returns

Vertigo
Starring James Stewart, Kim Novak
Directed by Alfred Hitchcock

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

Vertigo, rereleased after being shelved for more than 20 years, is a fascinating film about fear, death, and frustration, all done in the grand Hitchcock style.

The plot revolves around Johnny O (Jimmy Stewart), who after retiring from the police force because of his fear of heights, is asked by an old friend to trail his wife whom he believes to be possessed by the soul of her great-grandmother. So starts Johnny's job of trailing Madeline (Kim Novak), a stunning blonde with a soft English accent, and a definite identity problem.

She leads Johnny through a graveyard, a museum gallery, an old Spanish town, and a boarding house, assuming the identity of Carlotta Valdes, who committed suicide in 1859. After Madeline/Carlotta tries to take her own life, she is rescued by Johnny and the two do the predictable thing, they fall in love. However, the double personality crisis persists, and try as he might, Johnny cannot break her out of the double life she leads. The parallel existences are too much for Madeline, and as she climbs the steep bell tower steps, Johnny's condition--vertigo--prevents him from trying to stop her self-destruction.

Johnny is shattered, and aimlessly wanders old haunts, staring at every blonde in sight, and then....Enough said, anymore would spoil the fantastic ending, suffice to say your spine will tingle, and your face become flushed.

The scenery, set designs and costumes are beautiful, the restaurant for example with shocking red velvet walls, and Madeline's green evening dress. San Francisco is a splendid backdrop for Johnny and Madeline's first kiss complete with the symbolic waves crashing into the shore.

But as one might guess, it is Hitchcock's directing that gives the film its ultimate power. He suspends the action for a while, gets the viewer comfortable, almost bored, in the tailing scenes for example, and then slaps the viewer in the face with some twist of plot or incredible event that gets the blood going full blast. The special effects are also there, the spiraling staircase is a classic. The acting is powerful, and special mention goes here to Barbara Bel Geddes (Miss Elly from Dallas) who plays Johnny's devoted girl friend who must suffer through his increasing infatuation with Madeline.

Vertigo is playing at the Academy of Music in Northampton through March 1st.

Stewart stars in Vertigo.

In the arts this weekend...

On Saturday, February 25 at 8:00 p.m. the Jerusalem Band will present a concert in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium. The concert is a Jewish Arts Festival event sponsored by the UMass Hillel and the UMass Arts Council. Admission for the cabaret-style concert is $1.50.

Most noted for his wood engravings and sculptures, Baskin has examples of his artwork in the National Gallery in Washington D.C., in the Museum of Modern Art, and in the Vatican Museum in Rome. Both shows will run until March 16, and will share an opening reception on February 27 from 7-9 p.m.

The Five College Choral Festival will perform on Saturday, February 25 at 8:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. The festival is free and open to the public.

★ UMass bowling

UMass faced WNEC in the tourney final and for the conference title and ended up on the short end, losing 17-10.

The men's team also faced WNEC in the tourney's final match but the Minutemen trailed by 15.5 points in the standings so it didn't really matter, as WNEC crushed UMass by a 18.5-8.5 score and won the conference title by 25.5 points.

Ken Mokan was the leading bowler for UMass as he bowled a 1233 to take individual honors in the tournament.

Individual league standings were also released. MacDonald had the second highest average in the women's division with a 175 average, only two points behind champion Susan Kenney of Lowell.

Amy Freedman tied for third with Kenney with 37 match points. Freedman and Joanne LaPete of WNEC were chosen as the Most Improved in the Mass. women's conference.

The Tri-State league, founded in 1967 with four teams, has now grown to 16. The conference season is over but the collegiate bowlers still have some more action.

There is the Individual Match game tourney on March 31 and the YABA Collegiate Division Sectionals to be held in Westfield at Town and Country on April 5-6. Entrace is limited to those invited, such as conference champions. Bowlers from this sectional and ten others from across the nation will determine the field for the National Collegiate Bowling championships in San Jose, Calif. on May 4-6.

Minuteman gymnasts face Temple in Philly on Saturday

Jimmy Corbett shows off the moves he hopes to use when UMass takes on Temple Saturday.

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team prepares to head down to Philadephia to challenge a rebuilding Temple team on Saturday afternoon, it may be without the services of top all around Bert Mathieson in some or all events.

Mathieson sprained his thumb in practice Wednesday while doing his high bar routine and coach Roy Johnson said he is not sure if Mathieson will be able to compete or not.

"I think without Bert it might be a little tougher (to beat Temple). We may water down his high bar routine," Johnson said in the case that Mathieson should perform.

The Minutemen found no trouble in defeating Temple last season as the squad had been hit with a barrage of injuries and had only four men to compete. Although Temple managed to send up at least one man in each event, it accumulated just 66.8 points for a team total.

This Saturday's meet will be different as Temple, 1981 Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League (EIGL) Champions, has gone through a rebuilding period and had a healthy team.

Bobby Fleming will be challenging UMass all around Willie Stevens, and Mathieson if he competes. Fleming's strongest events are the floor exercises and the high bar.

The key to a UMass victory will be each team member hitting his routine, according to Johnson. Massachusetts is gearing up for the EIGL's which are coming up in two weeks, after it travels to face Springfield next weekend.

Chris Lee, on top, has a very good chance to take the top spot in this weekend's New England championships at 126.

seeds. Earlier this season Burke defeated Beckwith who defeated Henikoff who defeated Burke. Predicting an outcome in this bracket would be as futile as figuring out that last sentence.

UNH's Dave Yale is heavily favored to hold on to the 158 championship he won last year. Brown's Kent Rollins, B.U.'s Pat Ianella, Maine's Brett Seamans, and UMass' Paul Hardy will provide the competition.

Although there are six wrestlers entered into the 167 pound bracket, the competition consists of only two. B.C.'s John Hanlon narrowly beat UMass Captain Scott McQuide 13-12 in a dual match earlier in the season. The rematch will undoubtedly take place during Sunday's finals.

Brown's Peter Hartung should be the top seed at 177 pounds. B.C.'s Dan Merner won the championship last year but hasn't performed up to par this season. Maine's Maynard Pelletier will be the dark horse. UMass will be represented by either Brian Shaughnessy or Vin McEntee.

At 190 pounds, B.U.'s Todd Giles, who is no stranger to the national rankings, will be the favorite. UNH's John Firelli, Maine's Tim Haglan, and UMass' Tony Gaeta will also do battle at this mark.

The Heavyweight competition will be between Maine's Ewin McHinnon and B.C.'s Tim Kaliff.

The preliminaries, semi-finals and consolations will be held Saturday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. The consolation finals will be Sunday from 1-3 p.m. and the finals will start on Sunday at 3 p.m. Tickets will be $2 for adults, $1 for students and free to UMass students with I.D.'s.

Women bowlers fall in finale

Special to the Collegian

Both the University of Massachusetts men's and women's bowling teams were edged out by Western New England College for the Massachusetts Conference titles in the Tri-State Bowling conference, Saturday February 18.

The women's team led WNEC 249 to 242.5 in the league match point standings going into the final tournament. At the end of the first event, WNEC led UMass in the standings by 1.5.

WNEC beat UConn 23-4 while UMass snuck past West Point 15-12. UMass captain Kelli MacDonald rolled a 510 (three games) and Liz Grossman rolled a 506 to lead the Minutewomen past the Cadets.

UMass squashed by the Mountaineers

The University of Massachusetts, playing without injured forward Horace Neysmith--out with a severely sprained ankle--was blown out by the red-hot Mountaineers of West Virginia by an 87-59 count before 7227 in Morgantown last night.

West Virginia led from start to finish and never gave UMass, now 11-13, 6-9 in the Atlantic 10, a chance to make a comeback. WVU opened up the game with a fine open court game that led to many easy layups and dunks.

Led by Darrell Blaney, the 6'4 sophomore guard, and his 12 first half points, the Mountaineers led by 19 at the half, 35-16.

West Virginia, now 15-9, 8-7, outrebounded the Minutemen 20-13 in the first half as the absence of Neysmith became painfully aware to UMass. Bobby Braun saw limited action in the game due to his recent injuries. Braun had two teeth knocked out in practice earlier this week.

UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said before the game that Neysmith's ankle was at about 70 percent. But he didn't want to risk further injury to Neysmith with three big home games coming up.

That fact just made West Virginia's job a little easier. WVU shot 51 percent (16-31) in the first half while UMass shot a weak 29 prcent (8 of 27) from the floor in the first half.

Massachusetts made its run early in the second half led by two Edwin Green jumpers to cut the lead to 48-34. But then the roof caved in on the Minutemen.

West Virginia proceeded to outscore UMass 22-4 and never looked back taking a commanding 70-38 lead. West Virginia led by as much as 34 points late in the game.

URI outlasts UMass women

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team took their 10-14 record to Kingston to face the WRams of the University of Rhode Island. Unfortunately for UMass, they were not able to improve on that record.

The WRams bulled their way to victory number 15 on the season, beating the UMass quintet by a four point margin, 89-85. In the Atlantic 10 conference, the WRams are now back at the .500 mark with a 4-4 record. UMass dips one game below .500 in conference play with a 3-4 showing.

In an otherwise lackluster basketball game, two highlights must be mentioned. For the WRams, it was sophomore Michelle Washington. Washington, who was last year's Atlantic 10 co-rookie of the year along with Kelly Ballentine of George Washington.

With last night's performance, her name will be etched in URI record books. Washington fouled out of last night's contest, but not until she had broken the WRam single game scoring record, pouring in 33 points.

For UMass, the star of the game honors must go to Karen Fitzgerald. The outstanding freshman scored 26 points in a losing effort. Fitzgerald's 26 points is the highest tally for any of the Minutewomen this year.

There was no celebrating after last night's game, however. This was a tough loss to take. The two teams battled hard for the first 20 minutes and both came up empty. At the sound of the buzzer the game was deadlocked, 39-39.

The second 20 minutes stanza is one the Minutewomen will not quickly forget. At the half, the game was up for grabs but the WRams were doing all of the grabbing at the start of the second 20 minutes. UMass fell behind early and never caught up with the WRams. URI led by as much as 10. UMass fought hard but was unable to close the gap.

Saturday is the game the women are keying on now. Tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. the Temple Owls will fly into the Cage to battle UMass in their last regular season game. It will be a classic Atlantic 10 showdown.

No one knows of these showdowns more than UMass senior guard Wendy Ward. The 5'4" senior will be playing in her farewell game as a member of the UMass squad. Captain Ward has been a main cog in the UMass machine for the past 4 years and will be sorely missed after this season.

Low. Lord shine in Minutewomen win

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team outclassed an overmatched Southern Connecticut team last night at Boyden Gymnasium, 171.3-165.2, in the final home appearances of seniors Robin Low and Barbara Lord.

Both Low and Lord lived up to the occasion by giving fine performances. Low earned a 9.45, first place, and a standing ovation in the floor exercise event with her electrifying routine. The super senior also won the all-around with a total of 35.5, the highest UMass total of the year.

UMass captain Lord executed a flawless balance beam routine to take first with an 8.85.

"Barbara Lord was scored extremely hard on the balance beam. I thought it was a great injustice. She did a 9.0 performance," said an upset UMass Coach Ken Anderson.

UMass dominated the meet from the beginning to the end, sweeping the top three spots in every event except the uneven parallel bars event and placing Low, Jennifer Pancoast (34.75), and Tricia Harrity (34.55) first, second, and third, respectively, in the all-around competition.

Starting off the meet on the vaulting event, UMass scored a season-high team total of 44.2 to take a lead they would never relinquish. Minutewoman Lisa Griffin took first with a 9.05, followed by teammates Low and Pancoast, who tied for second at 8.9.

In the uneven parallel bars event, Harrity (8.7) and Low (8.65) finished first and second. Cindy Smith of the Owls, took third (8.6).

The balance beam event featured the graceful Lord followed by Harrity (8.7) and Pancoast (8.65).

Pancoast (8.8) and Harrity (8.75) switched places in the floor exercise event to finish behind Low and her majestic show.

"I thought they did well. I don't think the score was indicative of how well they did, but that's the politics of gymnastics," commented Anderson.

Tomorrow, the Minutewomen travel to New Haven to compete against Yale at 1:00 p.m. UMass will be more concerned about earning a high score than the remote chance of being upset by Yale.

"Yale is a decent Ivy League school. They have scored as high as 167," said Anderson. "We're looking for another good qualifying score."

Robin Low moves on the balance beam in her last home meet last night as UMass beat S. Conn.

N. Englands at UMass

By JOHN BADGER
Collegian Staff

The 11th annual New England Division I wrestling championships will be held at Boyden Gym this Saturday and Sunday. This will be the first time UMass has hosted the event since the tourney's first year, 1973, when the Minutemen won the crown.

Competing this year with the UMass wrestlers for a spot in the NCAA championships are wrestlers from Boston College, Maine, New Hampshire, Brown, and defending champion Boston University. UMass lost to all these teams except Maine.

Massachusetts isn't favored but individually, several wrestlers have a good shot at the New England crown.

At the 118 pound weight class, New Hampshire's Dave Beaulieu is heavily favored to walk away as champion. B.C.'s John Zogby and Maine's Roger Baldacci should battle for second. UMass has no entry.

Brown's Scott Parlee is the favorite at 126 lbs. Minuteman Chris Lee should be right in there, though. Parlee defeated Lee twice this year, 7-6 and 9-6. Both matches were decided in the final seconds.

B.U.'s returning champion Mike Enzien should have no problem defending his title in the weak 134 division. Although not serious competition for Enzien, UMass' Phillipe Durant could place and score some points for the home team.

The 142 pound weight class promises to be a dogfight. Three freshmen, Nate Burke (BU), Wes Beckwith (UMass), and Brown's Troy Henikoff, will be the top

Committees seek to fill vacant positions

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Lack of student participation on University of Massachusetts committees is a growing concern which calls for immediate attention, said Mindy Ordway, Student Government Association (SGA) elections coordinator.

"Over two-thirds of the committees do not have (students) sitting on them," Ordway said.

Although Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern attributes the deficiency of representation to "lack of student interest," Ordway sees the problem as "lack in communication."

"I wouldn't say it's a lack of interest. If they (students) knew about the committees, they'd want to get involved," Ordway said.

Ordway said there are many boards and committees within departments and organizations that allow student participation ranging from the fine arts and athletic councils to search committees and budget programs.

The Space and Calendar Committee is one such committee that lacks student participation, Chairman and industrial engineering professor Klaus E. Kroner said. Since the committee "particularly relates to calendars and schedules which significantly affects all students, student input is crucial," Kroner said.

According to the committee's annual report, "until the very last meeting of the year not a single student representative appeared at its meetings, though the senate by-laws stipulate that five students sit on the committee."

Kroner said there is one undergraduate representative on the committee but "it's not right that there is only one."

"I would welcome students to fill the positions because the vacancies are there. I sent a letter to the student government and no one even got back to me. It's very discouraging. We try to communicate with them and you meet a stone wall," he said.

Kroner said that until the 1970's student participation on commites did not exist until the students petitioned for representation.

"It was created and now, where are they? It's very disturbing," Kroner said.

SGA co-president Tom Ahern told the Faculty Senate at its last meeting to "hold on" because plans are "in affect to reorganize the system."

"Some committees are worse off than others. It's the inadequacy of the office," Ahern explained.

S.G.A. candidates violate campaign rule

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

While no formal charges have been filed against them, Student Government Association co-presidential candidates Tim Rudolf and Donna Dooley have violated two campaign guidelines, according to the SGA elections coordinator.

Elections coordinator Mindy Ordway said the candidacy used Collegian graphics equipment to make campaign posters, which violated guidelines mandating that no funding other than the $250 in SGA funds granted each candidacy be used on campaign efforts and that candidates "must at all times provide their own materials for their campaign."

Ordway said the correct procedure for printing posters is to bring the poster down to a print shop, and the SGA will send the business a promissary note.

"Everything must have a purchase order," she said.

Rudolf said a Collegian graphics employee working on his campaign was responsible for using the equipment "without the knowledge of the campaign rules or expressed consent of the Collegian." The amount of $7 will be deducted from the campaign fund to pay for materials used, Ordway said. 'It was a misunderstanding," she said.

Since these violations, the Central Area Government has published a newsletter endorsing the Rudolf/Dooley candidacy, which Ordway called "a gross misappropriation of student funds."

The newsletter, which stated in part "We will be seeing a lot of Tim in the very near future and we hope you will support him," also contained Rudolf's letter of resignation from the area government, a necessary action for presidential candidates. This publication was also composed using Collegian graphics equipment.

Rudolf said neither he nor Dooley knew about the contents of the newsletter before its publication.

The Collegian employee responsible for both these incidents, has since been informed that Collegian staff may not use office facilities for their personal projects.

Amherst votes to abolish its 8 fraternities

By PAUL BASKEN
and ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The 160-year-old fraternity system at Amherst College will come to an abrupt end effective June 30, the school's trustees decided Saturday.

The system has suffered in recent years from complaints over rushing and hazing activities and its role as the sole place of social gatherings on campus, and membership has declined while school population has increased.

The Board of Trustees voted unanimously to accept the recommendation of an adhoc committee which found "the quality of the social and residential life of the college has become inadequate to the needs of the college and its students."

Fraternity members, who during the past week staged a 200-person sit-in demonstration and a fast to protest what some feel was a lack of student input in the decision, Saturday met the expected news in small and subdued groups in their houses.

Fraternity members posted mock "for sale" signs outside their houses and hanged and burned in effigy the College's Acting President G. Armour Craig and Acting Dean of Students Kathleen Deignan to protest the action. Craig revived discussion of banning fraternities with his recirculation this summer of a critical "white paper" written by his predeccessor, the late Julian Gibbs. Craig will be replaced in June by President-elect Peter Pouncey.

While the trustee decision was explained to be part of an overall plan to improve student life on campus, and includes a promise to begin construction of a campus center, fraternity members were still unconvinced and angered by the decision process.

"I'm very upset--I find fraternities to be a positive factor at the college," said 20-year-old John Brinitzer of Psi Upsilon fraternity. "They should've done it (abolish the fraternities) on a phase-out plan."

"They have left us with a social/residential environment that is going to be in a state of limbo for the next few years. In the mean time, we're all paying $12,000 to come to this school."

Most of the eight students participating in the planned four-day fast last week quit after the board agreed to meet with four members of the Interfraternity Council before their vote was taken at their meeting in New York City.

"They listened to us attentively," said one of the four, senior Daniel Franzese of Bethpage, N.Y., vice president of the IFC. "They do care about the student vote. They really do."

"The way they (the trustees) handled it was really bad," said sophomore Ellen Mager of Oyster Bay, N.J., insisting that students, who other than the four could only contact the trustees through letters, were not fairly represented.

"The majority of the students didn't want this decision."

The faculty of the college voted 90-29 in November that "the fraternity structure has outlived its usefulness" and should be abolished. During the past 14 years the number of fraternities at Amherst College has declined from 13 to eight while the student population has increased from 1,200 to more than 1,500.

Amherst now joins two other New England liberal arts colleges in banning fraternities. Colby College in Watervile, Maine abolished fraternities last month, and Williams College in Williamstown eliminated theirs in 1962.

Highway laws change for trucks

BOSTON - Double 28-foot trailer trucks and single 48-foot trucks, once banned from most state highways, could be cruising through Massachusetts, mostly west of Route 495, before the year ends.

The state, under a federal order to work out a plan to allow the huge trucks on interstate and major state highways, has submitted a limited plan to the Massachusetts Legislature.

If it passes, the rigs, banned by state law from all but the Massachusetts Turnpike, for the first time would be generally allowed on Massachusetts roads.

"We've been mandated by the federal government to allow these on the highways," David Reilly, assistant to the public works commissioner, explained. "The federal government, on the roads involved, paid 90 percent of the cost of constructing them."

long-delayed decision on how much their insurance rates should increase for 1983-84.

Insurance Commissioner Peter Hiam was expected to decide this week on whether to heed recommendations that he increase the cost of coverage by 50 to 163 percent to help insurance companies pay for a growing number of jury awards over $1 million in malpractice cases.

"We're shooting for a decision late in the week," said Michael Sabbagh, first deputy commissioner under Hiam.

Computer raises income tax refunds

BOSTON - State revenue officials, using a new computer match system for the first full year, say they expect to keep $1.5 million in income tax refunds from people who owe money for court-ordered child support payments.

The program has already discovered 134 early filers who owed $25,287 in child support payments and had the money removed from their 1983 income tax refund checks, officials said.

The remaining money will be generated as April 15 approaches and more returns are received, said Revenue Department spokesman Harry Durning.

Democratic candidates fight hunger

CONCORD, N.H. - Jesse Jackson, George McGovern and Ernest Hollings agreed yesterday that Ronald Reagan must be replaced to end the suffering of the hungry and poor in America, but disagreed on who should replace him.

"I know it is said that Mr. Reagan is a nice guy," McGovern said. "I don't think there is anything nice about allocating $40 billion to an MX missile that we don't need and then knocking three million hungry kids out of the school lunch program."

Jackson said that under the Reagan administration, people living under the poverty level are living in "desperation and destitution" and that there is "more hurt, more ache and more pain."

Hollings, said cuts in food programs by Reagan, "as silly as he is and as conservative as he is" may be saving food program money, but they are costing more through medical payments and in jailing people who began as hungry children and grew up to be mischievous and turned to crime.

Walter Mondale, Gary Hart and John Glenn sent representatives to the forum at New Hampshire College. Reubin Askew and Alan Cranston were not represented.

The forum, sponsored by a group that has studied hunger in New England and found that it is a serious and growing problem, was not a debate, merely a chance for the candidates to say what they would do about hunger.

The key, the candidates said, is to feed children and expectant mothers.

Hollings, who wrote a book about hunger in 1970, said 10 million of an infant's 13 million brain cells are developed during the first five months of pregnancy.

McGovern won long and loud applause when he said he wished the government would put as "half as much zeal" into catching rich tax cheats as it does tracking down women who undereport income to get more food stamps.

"Doubtless there are a few (food stamp cheaters). Any time you deal with human beings in the millions there are few people who are going to cheat. That would be true even with Ronald Reagan's rich pals when they come to make out their tax returns.

Changes made to ensure gas safety

BOSTON - One public official likened it to activating a time bomb - every time a contractor digs underground without checking to see where the gas pipes are.

Gas companies reported almost 900 instances last year when excavators failed to determine first the locations of the gas mains.

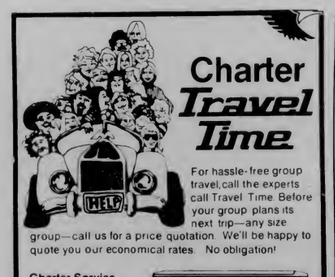
Since Christmas, five homewrecking gas explosions have killed two people and injured five others.

The Massachusetts House soon, possibly as early as this week, is due to tackle a bill that backers hope will defuse more explosions before they go off. The legislation would give state regulators the power to punish violators of the Dig Safe Law and other gas safety regulations.

"In a sense," Public Utilities Chairman Paul Levy told a legislative commitee last month, "these violations are like time bombs. You don't know when or if they're going to explode."

Levy asked the Legislature's Government Regulations for the power to impose tough new penalities when gas safety rules are disobeyed, and to enforce existing fines when the law governing excavations near gas pipes is violated.

House Committee Chairman Rep. William Galvin, D-Boston, said Friday his committee will report a bill out early this week to do just that, and to tie local building permits to meeting Dig Safe requirements.



"The recent tragedies unearthed there were some gaps in the law regarding safety regulation," he said. "Also, a short history of accidents in the last four years showed violation of the Dig Safe Law was the single greatest cause of these accidents."

With the proposed changes, he said, "I think we will awaken concern on the part of any contractor and they'll be more careful to check with utility companies."

Church helps in Central America

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — The report of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America is a "mishmash" which should be rejected by the American people, former Congress member and law school professor Father Robert Drinan said at Mt. Holyoke College last night.

"The Reagan administration is waging a war against the poor in Central America," Drinan said.

Drinan represented the fourth district in Massachusetts in Congress from 1971 to 1981 and is now a professor of law at Georgetown University specializing in international human rights and arms control. Drinan spoke specifically on liberation theology and the current United States policy in El Salvador and Nicaragua. He said that despite persecution amounting to over 800 priest and nuns killed and many more tortured, the church in Latin America has been working "heroically" on the side of the people.

The church is the only institution that speaks for the masses, Drinan said. "We have pledged to be the voice of the voiceless."

"Until recently the church was lamentably identified with some of the worst aspects of capitalism and authoritarianism — but that is not church doctrine," he said.

Drinan said church doctrine has been that capitalism must be regulated so workers have a share in the profits and control of the businesses. Regarding Nicaragua, Drinan said the revolutionary (Sandinista) government has made many mistakes, but they have broad popular support from both the church and the peasants.

"The happenings in Nicaragua agree with the spiritual and theological scripture of liberation theology," he said.

Drinan said the American citizens have to oppose U.S.-backed covert operations against the Nicaraguan government.

Drinan said the Reagan administration points to a drop in the number of bodies found in El Salvador as evidence of human rights improvements in that country.

But, he said, "there are only so many people there, of course the number is going to go down. People leave and become intimidated."

Drinan said the United States has spent almost $1 billion in El Salvador alone, with no improvement in the situation there.

"We woke up in Watergate and we woke up in Vietnam, and here we are asleep as our country is doing things that are illegal and, in my interpretation, immoral. We can stop this, it is our tax dollars that are being spent," he said.

Student runs alone

S.G.A. candidate is concerned

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

In the fourth SGA presidential candidacy announcement of this campaign, 27-year-old engineering student John Michaud last week pledged to provide a stronger emphasis on safety on campus, access for the handicapped, and student government sensitivity to student needs.

Michaud has no prior experience in student government, but said that six years spent working before entering college helped him gain the maturity necessary to handle the job of Student Government Association president.

"I don't think the SGA addresses issues of personal safety as much as it should." Michaud said after announcing his candidacy. Although there is now an excort service for students who do not want to walk back to their dorms alone in the dark. Michaud said that women still "feel unsafe all the time at night on the campus alone."

If elected, Michaud said he would push for better lighting and for more roving student patrols on campus.

Michaud, a junior electrical engineering major, also said the administration needs to recognize that "people are concerned about liberal arts as well as technology. Ideas and ideals are just as important as computers."

Funding for the University of Massachusetts library "has been cut back in recent years," he said and as SGA president he promised to combat this.

According to Michaud, campus buildings should be more accessible to the handicapped. The textbook annex should have a wheelchair ramp, he said, and there should be more entrances to the Campus Center complex.

Michaud said he believes that "the SGA doesn't make enough of an outreach to find out what the problems are. I think the SGA should be more involved with students' day-to-day lives."

Michaud said he does not think the SGA should be used as a political forum.

"Student government should involve itself only with student affairs," he said. "There are other RSO groups whose job it is to protest and hold forums on whatever they want. It's not that (world affairs) aren't important, that just isn't the SGA's job."

Michaud also said he would not involve himself with a more local issue, rent control: "I don't think it's possible to pass rent control in this town, so I'm not going to spend any time on it."

Michaud is the only candidate running without a co-presidential hopeful. Usually, one co-president spends more time with the Board of Trustees while the other works more with the student Senate, but Michuad said he is not worried that taking on both roles might be overwhelming.

"It's definitely more than a full-time job, but I think I can handle it because next year is going to be an easy academic year for me," he said. "I'm willing to put in the time necessary."

Athol man dies in auto crash

Amherst Police reported the death of an Athol man and serious injury to a University of Massachusetts student in two separate car accidents which occurred within minutes of each other early yesterday morning.

Rebecca Melvin, 19, a first year animal science major from North Andover, was struck by a car on South Pleasant Street near the main entrance of Amherst college at 1:05 a.m. yesterday.

Melvin was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where she was listed in stable condition last night.

Police said a Springfield man was the driver of the car which struck Melvin. Witnesses are being contacted and the accident is under investigation.

Police also reported the death of Gregory J. Levigne, 21, of Athol at the scene of an accident on Pelham Road in Amherst, near the Pelham border.

Police said the accicent occurred at 1:09 a.m. yesterday morning after Levigne failed to negotiate a curve and struck a tree on the driver's side of the car.

A passenger in the car, David Durkee, 21, also of Athol, sustained chest injuries according to Cooley Dickinson hospital officials.

Witnesses are being contacted and the accident is under investigation.

Students at the Blue Wall Happy Hour try the breathalizer

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Staff

Nine students volunteered to have their blood alcohol content tested by peer alcohol educators at the Blue Wall happy hour Friday, but none of them exceeded the legal limit.

The breathalizer test takes approximately six minutes, excluding time taken standing in line, said Ann Hynes, a junior enrolled in the peer alcohol educator program administering the tests. Participants take a deep breath into a tube connected to a small electronic box, in which a tiny ampule measures how much carbon dioxide and ethenol is in the breath fumes, Hynes explained.

If a person's level of alcohol in the bloodstream exceeds .10, the person is considered intoxicated under Massachusetts law. One drink is considered equal to 1 oz. 86 proof alcohol, 12 ozs. of beer or 4 ozs. of wine.

The breathalizer readings, are not 100 percent accurate. Food often slows down the absorption rate of alcohol into the blood stream and the time lapse between the last drink and the administration of the test will often decrease the accuracy of the breathalizer, said Carlene Richelli, coordinator of alcohol education. The best time for an accurate reading is about one hour after consumption of the last drink, she said.

The levels of the blood alcohol content of the nine students ranged from .015 to .07, although some of the students appeared more intoxicated than their readings indicated.

Brad Morse, 20, a sophomore business major from Manchester, said, "I just wanted to see what I get on on the test. I feel fine. I've only had five or six beers and I think I could drive like this." Morse was surprised at his level of .05.

Nancy Keough, 21, a senior psychology major from Tewksbury, was also surprised at the result of her breathalizer test. Keough said she hadn't eaten all day and had consumed between eight and nine beers and one shot at happy hour. Her blood alcohol content level read .06.

"I don't think the machine is accurate because I've taken this test before and it was much higher," she said. "I feel more drunk now than the last time and when it read .21, so I know the machine is wrong," she said.

Every other Friday, patrons leaving the Blue Wall are encouraged to take the test, administered by students participating in a three semester program on alcohol awareness.

"We don't push abstainance; we want people to be aware," said Jill Gelber, a sophomore enrolled in the program. "Responsible drinking is the key," she stressed.

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Two 7-year-old girls were approached Wednesday afternoon by a group of teenagers in a car and shown a handgun, Amherst police said.

Police said the girls were playing in front of their Chesterfield Drive home at about 3:30 p.m. when a station wagon carrying two white males and two white females stopped and the male driver displayed a gun. Police said the suspects drove off after the girls told them that their mother was in the house.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Trying to solve the deficit problem

Lately there has been much talk in the media concerning the size of the federal deficit, and the causes of it. Some members of Congress attribute these huge deficit increases to President Reagan's tax cuts. In fact, this belief is not true; the 1981 and 1982 tax cuts have left the average 1984 tax rate essentially the same as it was in 1980. In actuality, Reagan's tax cuts have been offset by the effects of higher social security taxes and indirect taxes.

Peter Dow

Now these same members of Congress are using the tax cut argument as a reason for increasing taxes. With this strategy, they are reinforcing the myth that the deficit is caused by lower taxes and not by higher spending.

As future taxpaying Americans, we should be questioning the motives of our big-spending Congress when they wish to increase taxes to offset the deficit. It is obviously in their best interests to blame the deficits on under-taxation, rather than on their own spending habits.

History repeatedly has shown us that what tax increases do is just finance more government spending, not decrease the deficits. In addition, we must remember that high tax rates destroy incentives for saving and investment and therefore severely harm future economic growth. As long as government spending (as a share of Gross National Product) rises, an increased tax rate most likely will not balance the budget.

Many respected economists believe we must cut spending to eliminate the deficit. Since Congress today almost completely controls the budget, this responsibility is given to them. But it is highly unlikely that Congress will make any significant cuts; each member has his or her own "pet" projects and future election plans, and they most certainly would not want to alienate their constituents.

So, that leaves the budget cutting to the President, who, at present, has virtually no power to do so. Congress, if they are really serious about cutting the deficit, should grant the President a line-item veto, to restore spending discipline.

Certainly, the Reagan Administration (and many Americans) want to cut federal spending, but, at present, they do not have the power to do so. This power (in the form of a line-item veto or a Balanced Budget Amendment), unfortunately, will most likely not be given to the Executive branch in the near future.

Sticky ideals and interviews

Interview: 1. A consultation designed to obtain information or ascertain certain qualities. 2. A scheduled meeting between two or more people to gain information about a person's true character and personality.

Mickey threw his ball of gum towards the basket. He missed. It bounced off the wall and lay quietly on the floor, awaiting the sole of a shoe.

"Michael Sulllivan," a melancholy voice called from the doorway.

Mickey started to attention. He reached for his genuine simulated leather folder and turned towards the man who called his name.

Ten minutes into the interview, Mickey dared not lift his arms for fear of freeing the odor captured tightly under them.

Lisa Stratouly

"What are the most important rewards you expect in your business career?"

What the hell do you think pal, money of course.

"The rewards I expect and yearn for are not material sir, but spiritual. I receive pleasure from helping those in need; struggling businesses that need professionals like you and your firm to manage and organize their finances correctly. If I recall correctly sir, doesn't your firm have one of the highest small business success rates in the country?"

"Why, yes it does Michael, how alert of you. Now, what do you think it takes to be successful in a company like ours?"

Exactly what it takes for any type of success, a kiss ass attitude that will charm your butt off.

"Integrity, understanding, patience, efficiency, sophistication, and intelligence are but a few qualities I've observed in this firm. I hope I'll be able to live up to the high standards set by you and your firm. In fact, I'd be ecstatic with only one of these qualities."

"What do you consider as your greatest strengths and weaknesses?"

"...and as for my weaknesses," he said, a bit out of breath from his list of strengths, "I think I may be somewhat extroverted or assertive, for I rarely let an opportunity slip through my fingers, and this will probably include clients."

Mickey slapped on his sheepish smile to add extra effect to his statement.

"I don't consider that a weakness at all son, but rather a strength."

"Really sir? Why thank you."

"What led you to choose this field Mike?"

"Well sir, I believe that accounting is the language of business, and I've always been insatiably interested in languages since they are our modes of communication."

"That's a unique perception Mike. Do you mind if I quote you in the future?"

"I'd be honored sir."

The interviewer smiled.

"Well Mike, our time's just about up..."

"Is it really sir?"

"Actually, we've been here for forty minutes."

"No!" Mickey exclaimed, with full knowledge of that exact fact.

"Have you any questions for us?"

"I've read the manual from cover to cover sir, and it is very clearly written as well as captivating. I would, though, like to express my sincere gratitude for selecting me for this interview. That in itself is an honor enough from a "Big Eight" firm as prestigeous as yours."

"Thank you Mike. I've learned all I need to know about you and I feel you are highly qualified for our firm."

"I can't thank you enough sir."

"No need to, Mike."

Mickey gathered his genuine simulated leather folder, which he confused with the one belonging to the interviewer, and left. He rode his success right out the door, floating on air, until something stuck his foot to the floor.

Dogs hound the Hatch

To the Editor,

Is there not a leash law in Amherst? Recently, while trying to enjoy breakfast at the Hatch, we were joined at our table by man's supposed "best friend." A haggard, salivating Irish Setter ran from table to table in a frenzied rampage, upsetting our and others' meals. This is not a unique experience. There was no owner in sight. Who owns these dogs anyway?

Though signs are posted at the Hatch entrance informing the ignorant masters that the presence of their canine companions is illegal, they pay no heed to these regulations. When approached, Hatch employees refuse to take action. Just as bad are the Hatch patrons who encourage these nomadic canines by feeding them and jeering at those who find the dogs offensive and unappetizing.

Not only are these animals a health hazard, they're dangerous. We have witnessed several vicious dog fights as well as dog attacks on students in the Campus Center. The Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center is a place to study, relax and enjoy a meal in a sanitary environment. Get the hounds out of there!

Campaign insults students

To the Editor,

After reading in the Collegian about 'Gumby' Gosselin and 'Camel' Murphy (Collegian 2/24/84), I was a bit taken aback at what they had to say. I was at the meeting when the issue of their candidacy came to light. Many senators, including myself, were insulted by their choice of names which appear grossly disrespectful of the same student body and student senate for which these two 'candidates' have so much concern. Their candidacy may be legitimate, but their cause, in my mind, is not. It appears as if these two students are going to take the $250 given by the campaign fund and spend it on what they feel is right. The article stated that "the 'candidates' were concerned with the conservative ideology of some of the senators in the SGA and criticized them for not taking strong activist stands on national and international issues such as the Grenada invasion.

The senate did not pass a resolution condemning the invasion of Grenada, as the article said. It was voted on twice, and lost twice, showing that the senate was not going to bend to the will of certain senators. The undergraduate student senate was not set up as a tool of foreign policy, it was set up to represent and serve the students, all students, of this university. As for not taking a strong activist stand, I and other conservative senators, did. We chose to let the federal government do its job, and the student senate attempt to tend to its own business.

Well, Gumby and Camel, it really is too bad that everyone doesn't agree with your stand on all issues (not even the Grenadian people). Since Gumby and Camel feel so strongly about certain issues, they should join another campaign which will work for these goals, or else run a legitimate campaign which is not designed to promote special interests, but to actually administer the office of the president and student trustee.

These two don't seem to realize that other points of view exist, on campus. It's all part of something known as the Democratic process, and until the purge of all the impure conservative senators, which Jim and Paul seem to advocate, democracy will thrive on this campus. Maybe students are starting to tire of and disagree with the liberal rhetoric which once spewed from the student senate. It could be that times are changing, people are thinking differently, and we're not in the '60s anymore. In the meantime, Gumby and Camel, please stop wasting student's money.

Painting should be removed

To the Editor,

Last Saturday I was studying in the Campus Center concourse when I happened to notice one of the paintings on the wall across from the top of the escalator, I was appalled by it's overtly racist implications and I find it hard to believe no one else has voiced a similar complaint.

The painting displays a large number of students, all talking with friends and faculty, dressed nicely in ties and skirts, looking content and preoccupied. While in the far right hand corner, away from the rest of the people, dressed in shabby plain clothes and a sandle-like pair of shoes is a depressed and alienated Black man, with his head facing the ground.

I find it extremely difficult to believe that this 1982 painting by Phillis A. Gardner is an accurate interpretation of the 1960's at the University of Massachusetts. In any case, it sure is not the story in the 1980's and I urge the Board of Governors to dispose of this racist painting immediately.

From Lou, with love

Lou Miami and The Kozmetix
Friday, Feb. 24
The Davis Center, Smith College

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

Try to imagine a cross between Iggy Pop and Pee Wee Herman set to a perfect mix of punk and surf music, and the result is Boston's Lou Miami and The Kozmetix. Friday night Lou and company played a 90-minute set of catchy-as-hell original and rarely-covered cover tunes to a small but energized crowd at Smith College.

Lou Miami, dressed in a headband, a white shirt and black pants with a rope belt, marched, twisted and swam around the stage leading the three Kozmetix through bonafide hits like Bobby Pickett's classic "Monster Mash," a calypso version of "Blue Heaven," and The Partridge Family's "Doesn't Somebody Want To Be Wanted." The most striking fact is how well the band meshes these cover songs, which at first glance would hardly seem to go together at all, with songs of their own.

Lou Miami: a strong frontman, a strong dance beat: What more could you ask for?

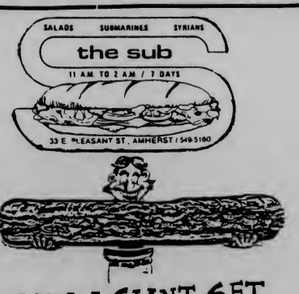
Lou Miami possesses the rare ability to mix a strong dance beat with meaningful lyrics. In "Dance With Death," a song Lou announced as one "about the late Jane Mansfield," somber words are placed over an infectious rhythm, and it works. In "New Romantix," present day politics are hooked up with modern music with lyrics like, "Everything sounds pretty/But oh not on my street/A bellyful of happiness/But I've nothing to eat...I can't deal with the New Romantix this year."

Of course, some tunes were just for fun, and with titles like "Voodoo Bride," and "Party Boys," the band served up exactly what was expected. What allowed Lou to psychotically prance around and best use his strong but limited vocal range were the Kozmetix, the perfect foil for his antics. Guitarist Jack Rootoo, Bassist H.P., and drummer Laurel Blanchard, played their roles well, making sure never to steal the spotlight from the front man.

For an encore, the band ripped through the old Kenny Roger's and The First Edition's number, "Just Dropped In To See What Condition My Condition Was In." Who else would cover that tune?

"I don't think of them as cover songs, I just think of them as good songs, and then we take them and make them our own," said Miami after the show. Likewise with his musical influences which include Eartha Kitt. "I just thing she's a great performer."

Miami explained the band's absence from the valley for the past year or so, as resulting from extended tours of New York and the Midwest. The band also just finished work on their third video for the song "Mack The Knife." "It's going to be filled with gangsters; kind of a 1930's type thing," Miami said.



Opening the evening were Boys Say Go, who started with some highly synthesized fluff, but got stronger when they turned off the drum machine and switched to the real thing, for the instrumental "Berlinner," and the humorous "Serious Cat."

You may remember him as the 7-up spokeman, but Geoffrey Holder, who will perform this evening in Bowker Auditorium, has done many more impressive things.

Characterized in Esquire Magazine as a "Renaissance Man," Holder was a premier dancer for the Metropolitan Opera. Holder has also been a Tony award-winning Broadway director and has acted in Annie, Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex and Live and Let Die.

Holder's will be a three part performance involving lecture, dance and audience participation. The show will start at 8 p.m. For further information, call 545-0920.

have four New England champions. The answer is simple. It's a lack of depth. Although Lee, Beckwith, Bossi, and McQuaide won most of their matches throughout the season, the rest of the team didn't. Forfeits also hurt. If UMass can fill in the gaps, they will improve. If not, they will remain a team of individuals.

Georgetown has a problem

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD - "I'm getting too old for this kind of stuff," said Boston College coach Gary Williams to the assembled media types after what must have been one of the worst weeks of his 38 years.

On Wednesday his Eagles defeated Syracuse 90-88 in overtime, but senior tri-captain Martin Clark, once the model of level-headedness exploded in the game, assaulting Williams on the sidelines and again in the locker room. He was suspended indefinitely.

Making matters worse the already-small Eagles had to face the powerful Georgetown Hoyas on Saturday in the Springfield Civic Center. A 62-62 tie with less than five minutes to go developed into a rout as the Patrick Ewing led Hoyas ran off 10 straight points on way to an 83-70 victory.

To top this week among weeks for BC basketball, a bench-clearing brawl instigated by a Ewing-Michael Adams skirmish with only 1:28 left was shown to the national T.V. audience.

"Sure it was a tough game for us," said Williams. "But they (Georgetown) didn't help matters any with their style.

The Georgetwon style, or lack thereof, has been eating at the members of the Big East since the inception of the conference. For coach John Thompson's team the attitude is "us against the world." It's scary to see it up close.

Seated on court-level about six feet up the sidelines, directly across from Thompson, it's plainly in sight, Hoya paranoia. It starts with Ewing.

He absolutely refuses to talk to the press, even after a simple question like "How did you feel about the way you played?" or "How do you think you did as a team?"

Thompson even had the lack of respect to publicly berate his sports information director about where to hold the post-game press conference. When asked "Coach you seem upset about the game, care to comment?" Thompson exploded.

"You people, all of you," he shouted pointing his finger at the reporter who asked the question, "just want to degrade my staff, my team...don't tell me how I feel, I know you want to do us wrong...I'm sick of the way we're treated."

Thompson's attempt to control the press works against him, the Georgetown media release states that the dressing room will be open for 15 minutes after the game. Coach Thompson will be available for interviews in the press room for the same 15 minutes. Even Super-Reporter can't talk to both players and the coach in 15 minutes, especially when all the players only say "I'm sorry, I have nothing to say."

Thompson's a good coach on the court, but off the court, at least publicly, he's a force that should be curtailed before another incident like the one in Springfield on Saturday develops into something more than a couple of players pushing each other around.

★ W. Basketball

much for the Minutewomen. At the midway point in the first half, UMass started finding their range from the outside. UMass was making a legitimate run late in the half and cut the lead to four points with 6 minutes to play. The Owls called time out to regroup, and they did just that. The four point lead became a 10 point bulge as the teams headed for the locker rooms with the score standing at 38-28.

Half number two showed more of the same. The Owls continued to rule the boards and play aggressively. Using a full court press, zone, and man to man defenses, UMass was thrown off on their timing. Temple continued to own leads of 10 or more points.

As the first ten minutes of the second stanza became history, UMass started making another run. Led by an inspired Jerrie Bernier (9 points) and the hot hand of Barbara Hebel (18 points), the gap was closed to 7 points, 53-46. Temple called another time out and once again they returned to the floor inspired. The Owls surged to another ten point lead and never looked back.

The UMass full court press had Temple baffled momentarily but it was just not enough. Temple once again forced UMass to shoot from the perimeter. Aside from the rebounding (Temple 51 - UMass 35), poor outside shooting from UMass kept them out of this one. The Minutewomen shot .400 from the floor in the first half and a dismal .348 in the second half.

In the waning minutes of the game, UMass was forced to foul the Owls. Temple converted nearly all of their opportunities from the charity stripe down the stretch and the game was virtually over with two minutes to go. The final two minutes were played at a slow pace and the Owls landed a convincing 80-64 victory.

★ W. Gymnastics

The meet started off with UMass winning the vaulting event 43.75-41.85. Minutewoman Lisa Griffin's 9.15 for a full twist on-full twist off was good enough for first. Rosenbaum (8.8) took second while Low and Pancoast tied for third at 8.75.

The uneven parallel bars event, a troublesome event for the Minutewomen all season long, remained so for them Saturday as they could only muster a 40.5 team total. Yale had only four gymnasts in the event (out of a possible six with the top five scores counting) and ended up with a 33.15.

However, Yale did take first and third in the uneven bars event. Rosenbaum had a sparkling 9.4 while teammate Jenny Robert received an 8.25. Pancoast took second for UMass with an 8.7.

UMass' Tricia Harrity won the balance beam event with a 9.0 while Rosenbaum (8.85) was second and Low (8.65) third. UMass accumulated their highest score of the season in this event — a 42.9. Yale's total was 37.75.

Once again, Robin Low won the floor exercise event, this time with a 9.25. Griffin came in second with a 9.05. (It was the second time this year that Griffin had scored at least a 9.0 in both of her specialties, the vaulting and the floor exercise events, in the same meet.) Rosenbaum was third with an 8.8.

The Minutewomen travel to beautiful New Jersey this Saturday to meet Rutgers University.

"I don't foresee them as any challenge. The challenge has to come from within for us to get high qualifying scores," said a confident Anderson.

Five teams qualify for the ECAC Championships and six for the NCAA East Regionals. According to Anderson, UMass is right on the edge for qualifying for both meets. The Rutgers meet, the last one of the season before the Atlantic 10 Championships, could have a big influence on just how long the Minutewomen's season lasts.

Four UMass wrestlers win N.E. titles

By JOHN BADGER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts wrestling team ended their season with a bang as four Minuteman wrestlers won New England Division I championships this past weekend at Boyden Gym.

Freshman Chris Lee, at 126 pounds, freshman Wes Beckwith (142), sophomore Mike Bossi (150) and senior captain Scott McQuaide (167) all won titles and propelled the Minutemen to a fourth place finish.

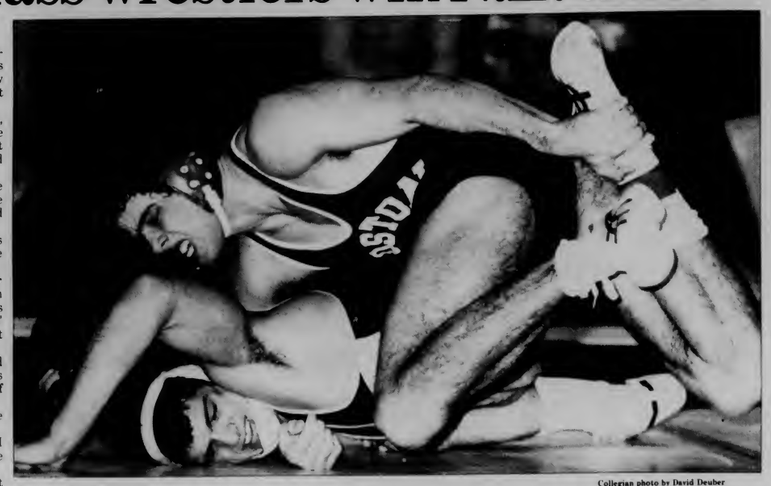
Boston University won the title for the third year in a row with New Hampshire second and UMass only ¼ of a point behind Boston College for third.

The Minutemen also had four champions more than any other team. UNH had three titlists.

Second seeded Lee started things off for UMass by pinning Brown's Scott Parlee in 2:13. Parlee had won two close decisions over Lee earlier in the season and UMass' 126 pounder decided it was time to assert himself.

"I was ready for him this time," said Lee. "I wanted it more than he did." Lee's win supplied the momentum for the rest of the Minutemen wrestlers.

Beckwith had no problem blowing out the competition in the 142 class.



"I told my parents not to come because I didn't think I was going to make it past the first round," said Beckwith.

B.C.'s Carl Traylor was Beckwith's first opponent. Traylor, one of the top wrestlers in the 150 pound class, came down to 142 hoping to walk away with the title. But Beckwith had other things in mind, as he outpointed the Eagle 10-1.

"The butterflies carried me on to the mat I was so nervous. When the match was over I was so psyched I didn't even remember what happened." That psyche carried Beckwith through the finals as he pinned Brown's Troy Henikoff with 22 seconds left in the first period.

Bossi kept things rolling by coming from behind with a two point reversal over top-seeded Chris Joy of B.U. to take a 5-4 victory in the 150 lb. class.

"I couldn't lose after Chris and Wes got the crowd going the way they did," Bossi said. "I went into the match with everybody yelling and screaming my name. The momentum was incredible."

Collegian photo by David Deuber

ON TO VICTORY — Ian MacDonald (top) of Boston University has the advantage over Brown's Peter Hertung in the first round of the New England Division One Wrestling Championships.

The momentum hit its peak when McQuaide met rival John Hanlon of B.C. in the 167 lb. finals.

McQuaide avenged an earlier 13-12 loss to Hanlon by out scoring him 7-4 for the title. McQuaide scored first with a two point takedown and controlled Hanlon the rest of the way.

"The first take down was important," said the UMass captain. "I got him to the mat and kept moving so he couldn't tilt me. I've been busting for this title for four years and it's finally mine." The fans congratulated McQuaide with a standing ovation.

The champions in each weight class along with two wild cards (Joy and Hanlon) will travel to the Meadowlands of New Jersey in two weeks for the NCAA championships.

Boston University took the championship with 62¼ points, followed by New Hampshire with 55½. Boston College edged out UMass for third by scoring 53¼ points. UMass scored 53. Maine was close behind with 51¼ while Brown came in last with 34½ points.

As for the rest of the Minutemen, Phillipe Durante (134), Paul Hardy (158), Brian Shaughnessy (177), and Tony Gaeta (190) didn't place. Vin McEntee, normally a 177 pounder, placed fourth in the heavyweight division.

One might wonder how a 1-16 team can

First place Temple invades the Cage

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Still smarting from an upset 80-79 double-overtime loss to LaSalle on Saturday the Temple University Owls will be looking to make a big impression on the University of Massachusetts and the rest of the hoop crowd tonight in the Cage at 7:30.

The Owls, ranked in the Top 20 for much of the season, are the undefeated leaders of the Atlantic 10 and overall stand at 21-3. With St. Joe's dropping a 79-75 decision to Rutgers on Saturday the Owls are solidly in first with a 14-0 record, the Hawks are 12-4.

The Minutemen, who are 6-9 in the league and for the season 11-13, need this victory if they are to accomplish their goal of a winning season. Last week two back-to-back road losses to George Washington and West Virginia snapped a four game winning streak.

"We still feel we can finish with a winning season if we play our hardest," said coach Ron Gerlufsen last week. "Temple is without a doubt the best team in the league, and one of the best teams in the East. They're a great squad."

Gerlufsen is right on the mark. The Owls have guard Terence Stansbury, a probable All-American, and standout forward Granger Hall. Stansbury, a 6-5 senior, averages 19 points a game while Hall tosses in 17. Hall is also among the conference leaders in rebounding with almost eight caroms a game.

The Minutemen are coming off a demoralizing 87-59 loss to West Virginia that followed an 80-62 rout at the hands of George Washington. To say that UMass isn't playing its best hoop of the season isn't too far from correct. The shooting, defense, and rebounding have all been sub-par.

The Minutemen lost to Temple in Philadelphia 83-66 earlier this year with John Hempel hitting for 20 points. Edwin Green added 15 points and 10 rebounds with Horace Neysmith and Donald Russell canning 14 and 12 respectively. Carl Smith was held scoreless by the Temple guards and managed but one assist.

Look for the Minutemen to pressure the Owls and try to get into a transition game with the visitors. The expected sellout (so get there early) at the Cage, where UMass is 9-1, should aid the cause.

The Owls have a tough backcourt with Stansbury and senior Jim McLoughlin, who had 19 on Saturday. The frontcourt is held down by Charles Rayne, Ed Coe and Hall. Coach Ed Chaney's crew was 14-15 last season.

For the Minutemen both Neysmith and Bobby Braun should be in action. Horace, still suffering from a sprained ankle suffered in the GW game, missed the entire West Virginia game. Braun saw limited action in the contest after a missed week of practice due to losing two teeth. Barring amputation or the need of a full set of dentures both will play tonight, without the two forwards the Minute men would have not a prayer.

Keys for a victory include Green's defensive play on the 6-9 Hall and the backcourt's ability to contain Stansbury. Green, Hempel, Russell, Neysmith, and Smith are the probable starters for the Minutemen.

MINUTEMEN MUTTERINGS: Carl Smith needs three assists to tie the Atlantic 10 and UMass seasonal records. Hempel is still leading the team in scoring at almost 16 a game. Green needs 22 points to climb into third place on the all-time Minuteman list. He needs 24 to climb into second place ahead of Dr. J.

When last at the freindly confines at the Cage UMass surprised St. Joe's 93-89. The Minutemen finished up at 2-13 on the road with the upcoming Atlantic 10 tournament in West Virginia coming up in early March.

Gymnast beat the Elis; Rutgers meet looms big

Continuing their drive to qualify for the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships and the National Collegiate Athletic Association East Regionals, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team chalked up another 170-plus score enroute to defeating Yale College, 170.8-153.3, this past Saturday at New Haven.

"It was our highest away-meet score of the year. The balance beam pulled out the 170 for us," said UMass Coach Ken Anderson.

The Minutewomen (9-6) dominated a Yale team that could only field four gymnasts for the uneven parallel bars event. However, Yale's Mindy Rosenbaum had the best meet of any gymnast there, winning the all-around with a total of 35.85. Minutewomen Robin Low (34.75) and Jennifer Pancoast (34.55) finished second and third, respectively.

UMass women lose to Owls; Atlantic 10 Torney is next

By ED CUNNINGHAM

For captain Wendy Ward, February 28, 1984 will be a bittersweet memory. The sweet part came in the form of a nicely performed pre-game ceremony announcing the game against Temple University to be the last regular season game Ward would play as a Minutewoman.

The night took on a sour note for UMass, however, when the game started. The Temple Owls came out flying and before Ward could put away her gifts, the Owls were up 14-2.

The loudest cheering section in the cage was the Temple bench, and with good reason. Temple came out playing a tough zone defense and Umass could not penetrate inside. When the locals did get in under the boards there were no rebounds to be found. For the Owls, the rebounding chores were left primarily to the 6'2" Marilyn Stephens. Stephens collected a game high 16 rebounds and led all scorers with 24 points.

Things looked gloomy for Umass. Temple was in complete control and looked to be too

Finally, Du Bois Day

by Donette Wilson
Nummo Staff

On February 22, 1984 the University of Massachusetts was the historic site of a proclamation read by Sheila Wilkerson of Gov. Dukakis' Western Massachusetts Office, declaring Feb. 23, W.E.B. Du Bois' birthday, a state holiday.

The event began with a welcome by SGA senator and Third World Caucus member, Robert Teixeira. Teixeira expressed his gratitude to all who attended and to those who made the proclamation possible and selected UMass as the place for reading.

Professor William Strickland also thanked the audience, the speakers, the Governor's Office and those who aided in making the event possible. He noted, "The proclamation is a symbol of many things in that it demonstrates the impact scholarship can have on society."

The proclamation was then read by Sheila Wilkerson of Gov. Dukakis' Western Massachusetts Office, establishing Feb. 23 as "W.E.B. Du Bois Day."

The keynote address was given by David G. Du Bois, Dr. Du Bois' step-son and visiting professor of Journalism and Afro-American Studies. He said, "Dr. W.E.B. Du Bois stands high....as a scholar, teacher, editor, author, essayist, lecturer, activist, organizer, government servant, candidate for elective office, prolific correspondent, as well as novelist, poet, dramatist and world traveler. The great body of work Dr. Du Bois has left us as his legacy is undeniable and indisputable evidence of his greatness."

He ended by saying, "We must not rest here. We must guarantee that this proclamation becomes a living expression of our conviction that in our times, in our own place, the legacy Dr. Du Bois has left us lives and is passed on to succeeding generations. In doing so, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is setting a noble example for the nation..."

"Another View: Berkshire County's Black Revolutionary Patriots," was shown. The film focused on a few of the often unrecognized Blacks from this area that made significant contributions to this area's history while impacting on national history as well.

In 1735 one of W.E.B. Du Bois' ancestors was kidnapped, taken to New York and sold into slavery. He then came to the Berkshire Hills and enlisted in the service. In 1780 he appealed to the Declaration of Rights and became free. He built a house for the Black Burgharts, which is now a national landmark in Great Barrington, Massachusetts.

Agrippa Hae Noah, W.E.B. Du Bois' great great grandfather was born on Nov. 7, 1759 of free parents. As a young man he joined the service and was appointed to Gen. John Washington; he became an American revolutionary and patriot.

Elizabeth Freeman, also know as "Ma Bett," was born a slave with no exact date recorded. She was "never a slave in attitude." In 1781, she won her freedom by appealing in court to the Declaration of Berkshire County.

W.E.B. Du Bois was born in Great Barrington, MA. on February 23, 1868. His scholarship and activism has made great contributions to the race, American society, and the world. His most important papers are here at UMass under the supervision of Dr. Bromery in the tower library.

The greatest gift he gave to society was the example of what scholarship could be.

The Trial Continues

by Segun Eubanks

Trinidad native, Ken Thorne, charged with receiving stolen property, was indicted on seven counts and denied a public defender because they felt he could afford a lawyer - "because I had a car," said Thorne.

Two charges of possession of cocaine, two charges of possession of marijuana and one charge of possession of tetracycline, a prescription drug, were added to the two charges of receiving stolen goods.

Thorne said, "If they really believed I was guilty of all those charges why did they let me go on my own recognizance?"

During the trial all the drug charges were thrown out.

In a Grand Jury investigation to decide whether to bring the case to trial, police testified that they found drugs in Ken Thorne's apartment. During the trial, when asked if drugs were found in the apartment the police said no.

During the trial Thorne's lawyer, Tom Whitney, had to turn the case over to his associate, John Drake. Whitney got a job offer in the District Attorney's Office and accepted it. "He (Whitney) gave the D.A. my whole case. Things I had told him in confidence began coming out in the trial."

Voting A Dream

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

When Congressman Louis Stokes spoke at the University of Massachusetts last April he told a story concerning Dr. King. And more importantly concerning all of us. It is inspirational for those who have registered to vote and hopefully food for thought for those who did not.

In 1965 Dr. Martin Luther King went to Cleveland, Ohio to lead a voter registration. Carl Stokes, the brother of Louis Stokes was running for mayor of Cleveland. He lost the election by 1700 votes.

Congressman Stokes said, "The Black community was just not ready to believe that they could elect a mayor of a large city."

In 1967 King returned for a second time and they got an even larger voter turn-out. Carl Stokes did become Mayor of Cleveland, Ohio.

"What this meant," said Stokes,"is that if Blacks could show that kind of political maturity in Cleveland, it could happen all over America. This is what it meant to Dr. King. He took pride in this kind of work."

Stokes said that when he and other Black politicians were in Chicago campaigning for Harold Washington, they could sense that "We were on the threshold of a history-making event, like in Cleveland in 1967."

He also thinks that the Chicago election symbolized somthing significant. "it means that there are 200,000 new voters registered. it says to Black people all over America that they do have power. The significance is that this act can be duplicated all over the country."

"Voter registration is an area where we have not exercised King's dream," said Stokes. In most cities Blacks are underregistered and voter turn-out is even lower than white voter turn-out. Stokes continued, "There is no reason we ought not to be utilizing the power and potential we have. Until we do, we will continually find ourselves shortchanged in politics and in this country."

Registering is the preliminary step, but voting is the determining act. Let us not have one-fourth of the country determining who will lead, what the issues will be and how our resources are used.

In this year of 1984, we have accomplished the task of making Dr. King's birthday a national holiday; if it really means something to us, let us exercise and realize his dream.

The UMass Response

Responding to an appeal made by presidential candidate Jesse Jackson, two busloads left Amherst Nov. 20 from Haigis Mall at UMass at 9:00 am, to support Jackson campaign activities in New Hampshire.

Addressing a primarily student audience of over 2,000 people at UMass on Feb. 2, Jackson urged students to assist in a McCarthy-like blitz in preparation for the New Hampshire primary, "students have not only the power to effect the political process, they can also change it."

On Sat., Feb. 11, Massachusetts students responded to the call with an initial bus trip to Keene, NH. where they canvassed neighborhoods and dormitories of Keene State College. "For many students it was their first involvement in the political process. We had a great time - we got to know our fellow Americans and we're eager to return," said Sharon Davies, coordinator of Students for Jackson in District 1.

Reflecting on the importance of the role of Massachusetts students in New Hampshire, Ann Herbst, coordinator of the Keene, NH. Jackson campaign commented, "Having these students takes the place of not having the money the other candidates have. We may not have TV commercials, but we have people - the students who have come from Boston, Springfield, Amherst and other parts of the state are crucial to our showing in the primary here."

Following the success of the Feb. 11 bus trip, a "Massachusetts in New Hampshire Day" was planned for Mon. Feb. 20. Bill Strickland, District 1 coordinator for Jackson sees students as a key factor in the New England campaign effort. "Approximately 3,800 students have registered to vote in Amherst in the last ten days," he commented. "The tremendous registration of students and the overwhelming response to the New Hampshire bus campaign belie the myth of student apathy and indicate a tremendous and growing support for the Jackson candidacy."

Many believed that student interest would die down after the novelty wore off. But this past Saturday, Feb. 25, at 9:00 am, another busload of UMass students went canvassing in Springfield. And most say they intend to go again!

Today marks the anniversary of the Dominican Republic's independence from its sister republic Haiti.

Robin Howard was charged with three counts of possession of cocaine and marijuana. All charges were dropped against her one year after she was arrested.

Her case never made it to court. "I never even had a pre-trial conference," said Howard. "They held my case until Ken's trial was over." The law states that when two people have charges in connection with the same case they can not testify in the other's trial. Therefore Howard could not testify in Thorne's behalf.

During the case which was tried in Superior Court rather than District Court (very unusual for a crime of this nature), several of the jurors indicated that they knew the police involved in the case. The judge did not remove all of them from the jury. Also the jury was all white.

In spite of these discrepancies and more that can not be made public at this time, Ken Thorne was convicted. However, his fight with the legal system did not end with a conviction.

As previously stated, Thorne could not pursue an appeal due to lack of funds, but he did apply for what is called a "revise and revoke." This is when the judge holds a hearing to decide whether or not to reduce the sentence given.

However, Thorne's request was denied without a hearing in front of the judge. "They know this case is a big can of worms," said Thorne, 'and they don't want it opened."

Recently, Ken Thorne received a notice from the U.S. Immigration Department stating that since he is not a citizen, he is subject to deportation due to conviction in the U.S. courts.

On February 27, 1984, Thorne must go to Boston for a 'show cause' hearing. "I have to try to prove my innocence all over again," said Thorne.

Thorne said that his lawyer for the case, Regina Lee said that most cases such as his never reach Immigration. He said that she believes, "Someone in the court (of Northampton) had to have sent the case to Immigration."

"They want to deport me because they know what happened was wrong," said Thorne. There are people in the community who supported Thorne throughout his ordeal. On Feb. 28 at 8:00 pm, at the Unitarian Church in Amherst, there will be a benefit concert for him featuring area musicians such as Archie Shepp, Ray Copeland, J.R. Mitchell, and others.

Robin Howard is currently pursuing legal action against the town of Amherst and Thorne says he will try to do the same.

Ken Thorne leans back and is visibly tired. He has told the story hundreds of times - to lawyers, counselors, friends and the press.

It's hard to get people to listen these days and Ken Thorne knows this all too well. But he insists, "People have to be made aware of what [illegible] on."

Billie Holiday: An Essential Style

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

Born Eleanora Fagan on April 7, 1915 in Baltimore, Maryland, she was the daughter of Clarence Holiday and Sadie Fagan.

She decided to call herself "Billie" after Billie Dove, whose pictures she loved. "My name, Eleanora, was too damn long for anyone to say. Besides I never like it," said Holiday. "When I was thirteen... I just plain decided I wasn't going to do anything or say anything unless I meant it." Thus began Billie Holiday's quest for self-determination and self-expression.

She had always loved music and loved to sing. Many years later she said, "People don't understand the kind of fight it takes to record what you want to record the way you want to record it. I've fought as long as ten years...to record a song I loved or wanted to do....I've still got songs I'm fighting to record." (1956)

Her career started when she was fighting to prevent a winter eviction from the 139 St. New York apartment she and her mother occupied. She walked up and down 133rd St. - 'the jumpin' place' looking for a job. She tried out for a job as a dancer, but got hired for her singing ability.

"Because of her distinctive style and the emotional depth of her interpretations, the jazz singer had a remarkable influence on her audience and other musicians." (Marland-Spigarn, "Black Women: Achievements Against the Odds")

"It is unlikely that ever again in human experience, will there be heard a voice like hers, stinging, biting...tearing at the never ends....No matter how softly Billie wept her blues, the screaming was there saying 'This is how it feels.' " (Rosenkratz, "Harlem On My Mind.")

She was called the Jazz voice of the century. And it was precisely her dedication to one's own personal and natural style - 'the real thing,' that made her so "unforgettable."

Billie said, "If you find a tune and it's got something to do with you, you don't have to evolve anything....Everybody's got to be different. You can't copy anybody and end up with anything. If you copy, it means you're working without any real feeling. And without feeling, whatever you do amounts to nothing....No two people on earth are alike, and it's got to be that way in music or it isn't music."

Although Billie Holiday's life was never easy, she never compromised her commitment to honest self-expression, self-esteem and self-dignity.

"You can be up to your (neck) in white satin, with gardenias in your hair and no sugar cane for miles, but you can still be working on a plantation....Sometimes I wonder how we survived. But we did. If we didn't have what it took at the beginning, we picked it up along the way."

Panther Principles

by Donette Wilson
by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

The Black Panther Party founded by Huey P. Newton and Bobby Seale, out of Oakland, California, originally sprang out of a need for community protection against police brutality. The principle that unfolded was community control over the community and its resources.

Although the Panther Party carried guns, which was legal, the organization declared its dedication to "a Democratic Socialistic society free of racism." Newton, "Master of Defense" taught the organization that they had to oppose 'all' kinds of racism.

They expanded their program from simply being the watchdog of the community to one of expansive community self-help.

They implemented free physical and mental health services, breakfast programs, plumbing services and clothing outlets; bussing services for parents visiting children in prison, an aid agency for Welfare recipients and an accredited elementary school. All financed through the sales of the Black Panther Newspaper, whose Editor In Chief was David G. Du Bois, currently a visiting professor at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst.

The organization got recruits from the Oakland ghetto into small units with common rules of discipline, including abstinence from drugs and familiarity with the works of Mao Tse-tung, Malcolm X, Frantz Fanon and W.E.B. Du Bois.

In the spring of 1971 the Panther Party "got involved with the Black churches." The following summer the organization had a successful boycott of the Cal-Pac Assoc., a group fo Black liquor store owners in California. After months of picketing, the stores agreed to make regular contributions to the United Black Fund.

Although the Black Panther Party had a turbulent existence, wrought with internal struggle, infiltration and immaturity, the party was created in reaction to great injustices perpetrated against the Black community.

The ideals, the growth and the beneficial endeavors successfully completed, far out-way the accusations with which many attempted to discredit the organization.

"Hands In The Mirror"

by Janice Lowe
Nummo Staff

Women's Community Theatre presents the premiere of "Hands in the Mirror," by Leona N. Welch, a dance and theatre piece that celebrates the lives of old Black women. Directed and choreographed by Amherst residents Ingrid Askew and Patti O'Neil respectively, the piece will be performed at Hampden Theatre, University of Massachusetts/Amherst on March 2,3,8,9,10 at 8:00 PM and on March 4 at 2:00 PM.

The piece will also run at the Zone in Springfield on March 16,17,23,24 at 8:00 PM. Tickets will be sold at the Hampden Theatre Box Office and at the door.

Through dance and poetry, "Hands in the Mirror" illuminates, exalts and shares the experience of Black women in America. It focuses on rituals and relationships unique to these women. The piece is divided into eight stages in the loves of the women: "Knowing and Caring," "Birthin'," "Tired Old Women," "The Cookin' Pot Sunday Morning," "Prayerful Exuberance," "Wisdom," "Age," and "Loneliness."

Larger-than-life (sized) photographs serve as a backdrop to the work of the dancers and actors as they create a tribute to Black women. The piece uses eight community performers none of whom are professionally trained, ranging in age from seven years to seventy-two years old. Askew's mother is also performing in the piece.

Askew has worked in theatre off-and-on for 15 years. She has worked in the Amherst area for five years. In addition to being a member of the Board of Directors of Women's Community Theatre, she has worked with the New World Ensemble, part of the Third World Theatre of the University of Massachusetts/Amherst. She has also worked with children's theare.

O'Neil has been active in dance and choreography for 12 years. A graduate of the High School of Performing Arts in New York, O'Neil attended the Harkness School and has studied with Diana Ramos. She was artistic director of UHURU, African-American Dance/Theatre Collective and choreographed for Dusk, also a dance/theatre collective.

She has performed with such Black Classical musicans as LeRoi Jenkins and most recently performed in Amherst in 1983 at Hampden Theatre in "Rhythm Changes, A Historical Pespective of Afro-American Music, Dance, and Theatre."

Askew feels that "Hands in the Mirror" is timely and unique in scope and content. Although elderly Blacks have been celebrated in African-American poetry, not much has been written about them in play form. "It's about time we paid tribute to the grandmamas, because they definitely hold it together," says Askew.

O'Neil and Askew view "Hands in the Mirror" as a manifestation of love - "a whole lot of love." "Every piece," says Askew, "reflects Black Americans' respect for, and closeness to members of the older community."

O'Neil laments the lack of support for Third World artistic endeavors from the Black community. Neither O'Neil nor Askew has any ideas as to why this lack of interest persists.

"Hands in the Mirror" is concerned with racism. The piece explores the spiritual strength of the Black woman and how they have used this strength to cope in an oppressive society.

Women's Community Theatre is the oldest feminist theatre group in the country and has been producing original works by women since 1975. Its objective is to produce quality theatre using both experienced and inexperienced participants in a loosely defined apprentice system.'

Dedicated to the philosophy that theatre can be educational, and enlightening and still entertain, it seeks to challenge society with a commitment to end oppression of all women.

Women's Community Theatre has received a grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy in order, partly, to provide free transportation for elderly in the Amherst and Springfield communities to the theatre. Measures are being taken to ensure a wide and varied audience.

Native American Theatre

The Third World Theater at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst presents The American Indian Community House/Native Americans in the Arts production of a children's matinee "A Sunday Visit With Great Grandfather," "The Arrow That Kills With Love," and an evening performance, "Paint Your Face On A Drowning In A River" written by Craig Kee Strete.

The American Indian Community House/Native Americans in the Arts is an in-residence theater company, one of only two Indian theater groups located throughout the U.S. This professional not-for-profit Arts organization responds to the social, economic, cultural and educational values of 14,000 American Indians living in the Greater Metropolitan New York area.

"A Sunday Visit With Great Grandfather" and "The Arrow That Kills With Love" will be shown at 1:00 PM and "Paint Your Face On A Drowning In A River" at 8:00 PM on Saturday March 10, at Bowker Auditorium.

A scene from "PAINT YOUR FACE ON A DROWNING IN THE RIVER."

"Paint Your Face On A Drowning In A River" portrays an American Indian family facing their grandson's struggle to gain his independence and the consequences that arise from his pivotal decision. The play questions a young American Indian's moral decision to progress in life, while his friends and family object.

"The Arrow That Kills With Love" and "A Sunday Visit With Great Grandfather" are great pieces of traditional folklore, educating, enjoyable and entertaining for young people of all ages.

Tickets are $2.00 for children at the matinee performance and $2.00 for students and $3.00 for the general public at the evening performance. Tickets may be obtained Monday-Friday between 10 AM-4 PM, from the Fine Arts Center Box Office or at the door prior to the performances.

A free supervised childcare space is available for the evening performance by reservation only. Call Monday-Friday between 9 AM-5 PM, the week prior to the performance.

WHAT IS THE SIGNIFICANCE OF GOV. DUKAKIS' PROCLAMATION MAKING FEBRUARY 23 W.E.B. DU BOIS DAY IN MASSACHUSETTS?

photos by Ed Cohen

Kandi Thompson, of Sunderland said:

It's about time that our great historians and history-makers are being recognized in the realm they deserve. This proclamation is just a small recognition of the large impact he has had on our existence.

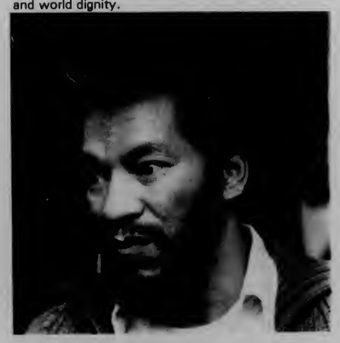
In a lot of ways we don't even realize how his work has helped to develope our existence. Because of the work he did, we're able to enjoy a lot of liberties that were not available in his lifetime.

It is particularly a small act and long overdue when one considers the impact he made internationally. the respect he gained internationally is vey important to the image of Pan-Africanism or Third Worldism, as some prefer to call it.

Sheila Wilkerson, Administrative Assistant for the Western Massachusetts Governor's Office in Springfield, MA., said:

To make known the gifts that this man had and shared with everyone, not just here, but internationally also. The welcomes he received abroad were far greater than those he received here (in America).

Maybe things will change. This is a starting point to build on. And each year we can add to it by improving upon what is offered.



Jose Tolson, director of UMass' Commuter Area Government Office said:

When people think of Massachusetts they don't necessarily think of Black people; and it's especially true of Great Barrington. When people do think about Blacks in Massachusetts, especially people like Du Bois, then it gives people across the country reason to pause to think about the contributions Black people have made.

Dave Martin, class of '86, and member of the UMass Scera Anti-Racism Team said:

It is a start of the recognition by the Establishment of a great man whose entire life was devoted to truth and world dignity.

JAZZ

Jazz

JAZZ

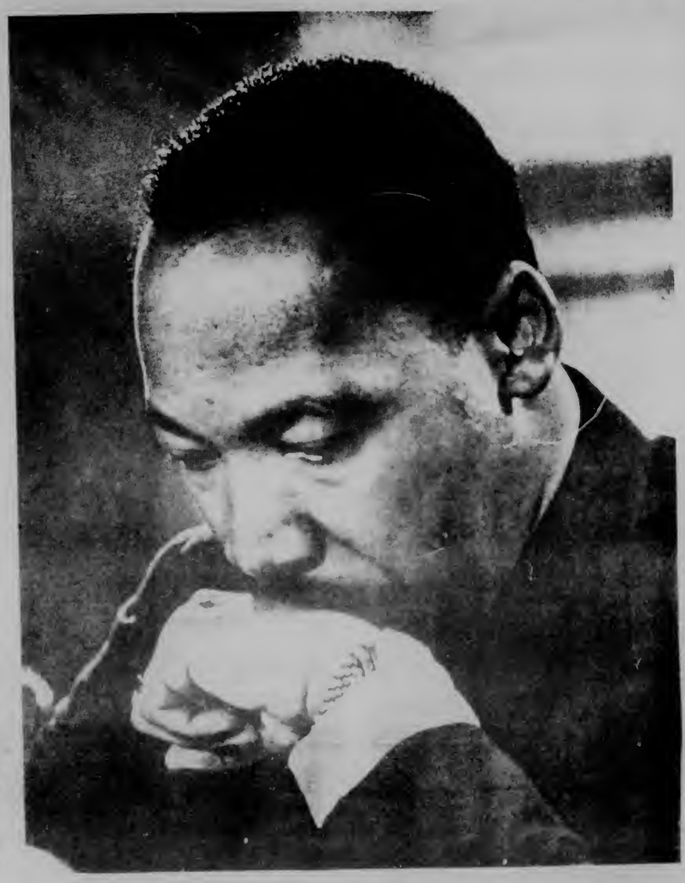
Even though Black History Month is almost over, the spirit of Black music lives on. Sunday at the Mary Lyons Lounge, UMass, "The Fred Clayton Quintet" performed an inspirational series of Jazz pieces.

The event, entitled, "JAZZ -A Tribute to Black Music," was sponsored by Resident East, Anocuoana Center and Sylvan Cultural Center.

Narrated by Ujama Gordon, he spoke a little about the music itself and its initial conception. He said that because Blacks were not allowed to play their native instruments, they had to adapt to the more metallic instruments used in European music.

The songs actually came from the utilization of bad experiences and harships taken in stride by Blacks. "They were created in bondage and many of the songs are relating to universal freedom, hope and a desire to reach the "promised land."

Jazz is the most complicated of all styles of music, and also intellectual. The music consist of Black people's experiences and is a product of both African and African-American.



Mr. Fred Clayton, leader of the Quintet, and contrabase player said, "Black people should take the time out and take a music appreciation class to find out about the music because it is the first of all music, it is intellectual and disciplined and especially because it is the only true art form that Black people alone possess."

Along with Mr. Clayton on the contrabase, was Claire Arenius on the drums, Tom McClung was on the piano, Cecil Brooks on the trumpet and Barry Halt on the saxaphone.

"Will the picture of the past in Black America enlighten the future? To see an overall view -even a bird's-eye view made up, of necessity, of a mere sampling from the distant past -should serve to illuminate the future, for to know yesterday is to build a better tomorrow." - (from "A Pictorial Tour of BLACK America: Past & Present, Some of History's Missing Pages; 1974, United Publishing Corporation, Philadelphia, PA.)

"The determination of Negro Americans to win freedom from all forms of oppression springs from the same deep longing that motivates oppressed peoples all over the world. The rumblings of discontent in Asia and Africa are expressions of a quest for freedom and human dignity by people who have long been the victims of colonialism and imperialism. So in a real sense the racial crisis in America is part of the larger world crisis."

"But numerous changes which have culminated in a new sense of dignity on the part of the Negro are not of themselves responsible for the present crisis. The crisis developed, paradoxically, when the most sublime principles of American democracy -imperfectly realized for almost two centuries - began fulfilling themselves and met with brutal resistance of forces seeking to contract and repress freedom's growth."

"History has thrust upon our generation an indescribably important destiny - to complete a process of democratization which our nation has too long developed too slowly. How we deal with this crucial situation will determine our moral health as individuals, our cultural health as a region, our political health as a nation, and our prestige as a leader of the free world."

(from "STRIDE TOWARD FREEDOM," excerpts from a 1958 speech made by Dr. King.)

"White America would have liked to believe that in the past ten years a mechanism had somehow been created that needed only orderly and smooth tending for the painless accomplishment of change. Yet this is precisely what has not been achieved. Every civil rights law is still substantially more dishonored than honored...."

"Despite the mandates of law, equal employment still remains a distant dream. The legal structures have in practice proved to be neither structures nor law."

"We will be greatly misled if we feel that the problems will work ttself out. Structures of evil do not crumble by passive waiting. If history teaches anything, it is that evil is recalcitrant and determined, and never voluntarily relinquishes its hold short of an almost fanatical resistance."

(from "WHY WE CAN'T WAIT," excerpted from a 1967 speech by Dr. King.)

"As one approaches the emancipation of today's Negro from all those traumatic ties that still binds him to slaveries other than the physical, this half-forgotten system that bartered dignity for dollars stands as a painful reminder of the capacity of society to remain complacent in the midst of injustice. There is a terrible parallel between the greedy hand of a slave trafficker who sold a Negro his own person, and the admonishing finger of people who say, 'What more will the Negro expect if he gains...
What is implied here is the amazing assumption that society has the right to bargain with the Negro for the freedom which inherently belongs to him."

(from "WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE: Chaos or Community?" Excerpted from a 1964 speech Dr. King made.)

"The United States is substantially challenged to demonstrate that it can abolish not only the evils of racism, but the scourge of poverty of Whites as well as Blacks and the horrors of war that transcend national borders and involve all mankind."

Engineering fees may be raised, Duffey says

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said yesterday he is currently considering whether he should approve a $200 increase in tuition for engineering students.

"The campus has substantial needs for equipment and we have to meet those needs," Duffey said. However, those needs must be "considered in the contexts with needs of other areas as well as engineering," he added.

While Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Samuel F. Conti said yesterday was the deadline for all proposals to increase University fees, Duffey said the proposal could be implemented next fall if it is approved by this June.

The increase would be the first of its kind at UMass.

James E. John, dean of engineering, said he proposed the increase to replace out of date lab equipment and to provide for improved computer maintenance.

"Some (equipment) goes back to World War II," John said. He said that many engineering students would be required to purchase their own computers if the fee is not implemented.

John estimated that the fee would generate approximately $500,000 each year to supplement the $50,000 annual engineering maintenance budget. John said that budget has not increased in at least ten years.

"We feel we are behind about $3 million," John said. "At $50,000 a year, we would be up-to-date in about three years."

Greeks debate academic standards

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts fraternities will face increased minimum grade point average requirements if a proposal before the Interfraternity Council is passed in a meeting tonight.

The proposal, put forth by Council President Greg Andonian, will require fraternity houses to have an overall grade point average of at least 2.25, or they may be subject to certain sanctions, as regulated by the Council. The current grade point average requirement for fraternities is 2.0, the minimum average for all University students in good standing.

"Amherst College closed down its fraternities because they (the administration) thought they weren't worth it," Andonian said. "I want to show the school and students that the fraternities aren't just a place to party—they're a place for academics too."

The Interfraternity Council, which consists of three voting members from each fraternity plus an executive board, will vote tonight on the proposal that was tabled from a previous meeting because of time limits. Andonian said he originally brought up the proposal February 14th "to get in with the administration."

The proposal stipulates that fraternities would receive tutoring if their overall grade point average falls below the minimum for one semester, but the fraternity would lose its intramural sports rights after two semesters, Andonian said. A fraternity whose grade point average falls below 2.25 for three consecutive semesters would lose its charter, he said.

The proposal is expected to be passed along with several other proposals, including one that would fine each fraternity $25 for each pledge a fraternity accepts who is not in good academic standing, if the pledge does not improve his standing within one semester.

"It's not to a house's benefit to accept a student with, say a 1.5 cum, but now they'll think about it," Andonian said.

Andonian said the proposals are part of an Interfraternity Council attempt to "reach students on campus and increase fraternity population."

"A school this size should have much larger fraternities," he said. "We're just another living facility. We want to be known as a power on campus as far as community service, academics, and sports."

Noting that the fraternities comprise 10 to 15 percent of the UMass student population, he said, "I'm sure it turns off students who think we just party."

Panel discusses education, alienation

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

The structure of the educational system in the United States fosters and teaches alienation to its students, according to a panel discussion on "Education and Social Transformation" last night at the University of Massachusetts.

The panel, which was headlined by Brazilian educator and author Paulo Freire, met to discuss ways in which panel members had implemented Freire's educational theories in their own careers.

David Magnani of the School of Education's Citizen Involvement Training Project related his own experience with developing a community center in Acton, Massachusetts which provided a "rare" opportunity for dialogue among parents.

"The parents created their own culture in contradiction with accepted American education. Magnani said, "They moved to lessen isolation our society has prescribed."

Smith College Associate Professor of Afro-American Studies Johnnelle Butler spoke of "struggling to teach and yet not to be a teacher."

Butler said culture awareness raising programs often lead students to an intermediate point in their attitudes only to create frustration and tension for both students and teachers when the semester ends and said trying to deal with the teachings of Freire "can lead to a certain isolation."

Freire's ideology maintains that through reproducing the dominant cultural ideology education has a strong power for alienating people from reality.

"We try, we fight, we challenge students not to passively accept everything which is said by television, newspapers and professors," Freire said.

Freire said Americans are "fantastically fatalistic" and said if there is hope for America "it depends on you."

"Go beyond fatalism and make the decision to take history into your hands," Freire said. "Hope always comes, challenging, inviting. Hope knows we need this push."

Assault reported in weekend attack

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Three Northampton women reported assault and battery and malicious damage to a motor vehicle Saturday morning after a white male companion had been beaten and their car attacked with beer bottles on Saturday morning, Amherst Police said yesterday.

The incident occurred during what Amherst Police called a busy weekend. Police said they responded to 146 calls, including 27 disturbances and one fatal car accident.

Police said the four people were leaving a party on North Prospect Street about 12:30 a.m. when five males in a 1974 blue Ford threw bottles and shouted obscenities at them. The male victim "took objection" to this, the passing car stopped, and the five men proceeded to beat and kick him, according to police. He was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital, where he was treated and released.

In another case, two women, one from Winchester and the other from Saugus, were charged Saturday night with possession of a Class D substance after a Community Service Officer observed them "acting suspiciously," police said. Police said they found a marijuana cigarette.

In other police action: The manager of Genovese Drugstore on University Drive reported Friday that $250 cash and $85 in checks were missing. According to police, the manager said the money was either lost or stolen sometime after Feb. 22.

The theft of a 1978 red and white Honda moped was reported Sunday afternoon. Police said the owner had left the vehicle at Brandywine Apartments about 11:45 p.m. Saturday, and discovered it gone about 12:30 Sunday morning.

A 19 year-old University of Massachusetts student struck by a car near Amherst College Sunday morning is "doing fine," an official at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton said.

Rebecca Melvin, a first year animal science major from North Andover, was hit by a car driven by a Springfield man on South Pleasant Street about 1 a.m. Sunday. The accident is under investigation, police said yesterday.

Iraqi jets attack oil tankers near Iranian export terminal

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraqi jets yesterday attacked oil tankers near Iran's oil export terminal at Kharg Island in the Persian Gulf, an Iraqi military communique reported.

Neither the number nor the nationality of the oil tankers was immediately known. It was also not known if anyone was killed or injured in the air attack.

An unidentified Iraqi military spokesman, reading the communique over state television, said the raid was in "fulfillment of a threat made by Iraq earlier this month and to punish the Iranian regime for attacking our people and our territories."

Baghdad radio, monitored in Nicosia, reported that the air attack was in retaliation for Iran's latest offensive and the capture of Iraqi oil wells north of Basra, Iraq's second largest city.

The military spokesman said the air raid "signals beginning of the blockade which we have decided to impose on this area."

Iraq has repeatedly threatened to attack Kharg Island, 120 miles southeast of Iraq. The island is Iran's main terminal for oil exports in the Gulf region.

Dukakis: 'lack of sensitivity' may cost Reagan regional votes

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's failure to back acid rain legislation and his administration's efforts to block two big Boston highway projects could cost him votes in Massachusetts in November, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday.

Dukakis told reporters at an informal news conference that Reagan is vulnerable in several areas of the country because of pressing regional concerns.

Farm issues, Dukakis said, likely will cost the president votes in states such as Iowa.

"I think the acid rain issue is an example of a lack of concern and a lack of sensitivity," Dukakis said, explaining why he thought it could cost the Republican president support in New England.

But Dukakis said he felt it was possible Reagan might eventually back a plan to cut sulfur dioxide emissions from utility and industry smokestacks to control acid rain.

He added it was still possible Congress would approve a plan even without White House endorsement.

So far, the administration has only proposed more dollars for research and for liming lakes where excess acidity has killed fish.

Amherst College, UMass react to fraternity ban

UMass administration supports Greek area

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Fraternity members and students at the University of Massachusetts reacted sympathetically yesterday to the decision to close fraternities at Amherst College, while UMass officials said the UMass administration has been seeking to improve the Greek system here in the past few years.

"I think it is a mistake to draw a parallel between their system and ours. It's a whole different kind of system," Vice Chancellor for student affairs Dennis L. Madson said Sunday. "In the last few years, our system has been getting stronger. I think they've done a better job in terms of strength and in setting goals to meet the needs of the students they serve."

"It's going to have no short term effect and little, if any, long term effect. I hope we can gain from it a knowledge of how a greek system can go wrong and how a relationship with administrators can become adversorial," Michael Schardein, UMass Director of Greek Affairs said yesterday noting that officials have set a higher priority on strengthening the Greek system at UMass.

Approximately 1,000 students belong to the 23 fraternities in the UMass Greek system he said.

The Greek area has set a goal to increase membership from the current five percent to ten percent of the total undergraduate student population.

"I think the administration is trying to help the fraternities here," UMass Delta Upsilon President Kevin T. Bailey said. "It seems to be just happening at smaller schools. At small schools there is a lack of space and a number of students at those schools feel that the fraternities have a good location and those students want the same."

Bailey said the Amherst College Board of Trustees' decision may hurt the school's fundraising efforts because of the amount of money the fraternity alumni donate to the school. He said UMass fraternities help "bring UMass down to scale."

Fraternities always have problems with their image, Bailey said. "But it's not like Animal House," he said referring to the movie starring the late John Belushi.

William Hovey, a member of Alpha Delta Phi said his fraternity was "going to do everything to help its Amherst chapter, which he said was one of the oldest fraternities at Amherst College. He said members of the Amherst chapter will be able to store their belongings at the UMass chapter house.

The possibility of having fraternities banned at UMass in the immediate future does not worry Lawrence Floyd, a brother at Phi Mu Delta. "But down the road who knows," Floyd said. The fraternity ban at Amherst College does have an effect on the image of fraternities, Floyd said.

"It definitely gives a negative tone to the fraternities," Floyd said. "I think because people in positions of authority are closing them down makes some people say 'hey, maybe there is something wrong with them'." As a result, Floyd said a lot of people who don't know about fraternities won't ever get the chance to be exposed to them."

Nicholas Katsoulis, treasurer of the UMass Interfraternity Council, said the Amherst trustees' decision was disappointing. He said newspaper accounts of the situation indicated that the trustees had made their decision before talking to the students.

"I think they finally met with the students to, more or less, gain support for their decision to say that they did meet with the students," Katsoulis said.

A UMass Beta Kappa Phi member, David Greenberg said the UMass Greek system is "much too strong" for a similar ban to be implemented at UMass. He said UMass fraternities provide community services in Amherst and raise money for charities.

Fraternity social life at UMass differs from Amherst because fraternity members at UMass also socialize at drinking establishments in town, he said.

"All the Amherst social life revolves around fraternities," Greenberg said. "Maybe that's why they are shutting them down."

Crowd boos, hisses during Craig Speech

by MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Acting College President G. Armour Craig yesterday addressed an angry, booing and hissing student body at Amherst College to defend the Board of Trustees decision to abolish the fraternity system.

The Amherst College Board of Trustees voted unanimously to abolish the 160-year-old fraternity system, effective June 30, 1984.

"A fraternity is a guideline to decency and friendship and everything else," Craig said. "The fraternity has lost this."

"The opportunity that I had in the fraternity does not exist today," Craig said.

Craig listed several recommendations made by the board to improve residential life on campus, including to "establish and administer — objectively, compassionately, and fairly — standards of individual and group behavior to assure a new level of stability on campus."

The need to plan and create more and better space for social and residential experience was also recognized by the Trustees.

The Trustees suggested that Amherst College be made into a residential college. Under such a system all students would be required to live on campus and the construction of a campus center might be authorized.

Craig said fraternity names will be changed. A committee will be formed to consider long-range options and to make further recommendations to the college President.

Jim Chester, a 21 year-old senior from Columbus, Ohio and a member of the Psi Upsilon fraternity said he was told by his father, John Chester, class of 1942, that Craig was a member of Amherst College fraternity Alpha Delta and that he "stole a stuffed owl from Psi Upsilon."

In reply to this allegation Craig said, "It didn't take very long for those of us who were in on that caper to change our ideals."

Buzzes, bleeps and barriers...

BY LISA STRATOULY
Collegian Correspondent

Flashing lights, buzzes, bleeps and computerized jingles keep the Campus Center video room alive and hopping.

Besides being entertaining to the senses, the room itself fosters a strange phenomenon; 90 percent of its inhabitants are men. A recent random survey last week showed that of the 40 to 60 people in the room, an average of five are women. About three of these five operate video machines, while the other socialize or watch others play.

Harry Schumer, a UMass psychology professor, said males historically are more aggressive and competitive than females, which this may be the reason why men dominate the video game scene.

"Males are more concerned with competition and winning than females," Schumer said. "Video games are a mindless, aggressive risk men play on a ten minute break, where females are more apt to socialize during the same ten minutes."

Schumer said personalities play a vital role in the determination of these gender differences, because some females are prone to attitudes of aggression and some males are not.

Lucille Halgin, psychology department advisor, said there is evidence showing that women who play video games are attracted to less violent ones, such as Donkey Kong. A popular male favorite is Space Invaders, a much more aggressive and destructive game.

"Women don't have the same capacity for video games as men do," one man playing a video game suggested. "They are not as good in technology as we are."

A woman standing next to the man disagreed.

"Men just have more quarters than women do because they never do laundry."

Sexual freedom speech topic

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

Society needs a new feminist sexual morality that frees it from both gender and identity constrainsts, according to a University of Massachusetts philosophy professor.

In a speech titled "Pleasure and Sexual Freedom, Toward a New Feminist Sexual Morality," Ann Ferguson called for an examination of both the radical feminist "over emphasis on the danger involved in heterosexual sex" and the libertarian feminist "self-styled anti-prudes."

Ferguson said men and women should pursue a sexual morality that allows an ambiguous sexual identity and is pluralistic.

"Our feminist sexual morality should be pluralist. We should assume that we are concerned with quality," Ferguson said.

She said sexual identities must not be regarded as permanent but rather as being developed throughout one's life.

"We must demand our right to be sexually ambiguous," she said. We must reject the idea that sexual practices are intrinsically related to one's identity."

Radical feminism, Ferguson said, developed against a background of political issues. This has resulted in a failure to validate the possibility of pure physical pleasure, she said.

"(Radical feminism) supports the traditional asexual image of women," she said.

Libertarian feminists describe standard heterosexual practices as repressive. They stigmatize sexual moralities and thus restrict sexual freedom for all, she said.

"The normals have to stay normal and the deviants are controlled by laws," she said.

Ideologies are inadequate because there is no way to make cut and dried decisions about various sexual practices, she said.

"The problem is that neither emotion nor physical pleasure can be judged in a vacuum."

Police report five weekend fires

University of Massachusetts Police have responded to five reported fires since Friday, one of which was labeled as suspicious.

UMass Police, the Amherst Fire Department and Environmental Health and Safety officials responded to a 3 a.m. report of a fire in a second floor trash barrel in Cashin dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area. Police said the fire was extinguished by a residential assistant and a police officer. It is the second of suspicious nature to occur on the second floor of Cashin this semester, excluding a report of burned papers found near an elevator eight hours after the first fire was reported there Wednesday. All fires are under investigation.

Police responded to a report of a fire in Dickinson dormitory in the Orchard Hill Residential Area at 9:54 p.m. Sunday, when an unknown person or persons were reported to have been lighting pieces of newspaper and throwing them off the fifth floor balcony. The Amherst Fire Department also responded to the call. UMass spokesman Rick Shanor said yesterday that police have "some leads" in the case.

Shanor said a fire was reported in Field House, another Orchard Hill dormitory, at 9 a.m. yesterday, when an electric cord caught fire and ignited a mattress. The mattress was extinguished on a balcony, he said.

Police responded to another fire reported in Dickinson at 12:30 p.m. Saturday, which was believed to be the result of careless disposal of smoking material in a waste basket.

Police responded to Coolidge dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area Friday, where smoldering pieces of paper in a trash can were extinguished by a resident, police said. The incident, which occurred in an eighth floor lounge, caused no damage or a building evacuation, and was attributed to careless disposal of smoking materials, police said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Thinking, for what it's worth

Steven P. Barrett

Well, for what it's worth, here's a few thoughts of mine to gulp down with your morning coffee:

Let's admit it, the "permanent campaign" has turned into the permanent bore.

Let's admit it, the "permanent campaign" has turned into the permanent bore.

John Glenn is the Democrats' version of the Olympic Hockey Team.

But our players were much more exciting—even during warm-ups.

Things are pretty sad for Glenn when a movie can't even boost his chances—even in this era of pre-packaged candidates.

Only Ed "Flip Flop" Markey could do worse if he joined the already over-crowded presidential derby sweepstakes.

(But more about that character later.)

Why is Walter Mondale such an incredible bore?

I guess his lines are stale from having delivered so many promises lately.

Will the Democrats replace 'Happy Days Are Here Again" with "Promises Promises" if Mondale does in fact win the nomination?

If anyone should be singing "Happy Days Are Here Again," it ought to be the California wine makers.

This year's theme might be appropriately dubbed as "Whine & white wine;" (don't forget the quiche and brie.)

Can you imagine all those pols at a convention in a city with a non-smoking ordinance for public places?

It's already bad enough that the real working class Democrats (conservative blue collar voters) have been displaced by the "upscale" Volvo and Chablis set— but no smoke-filled rooms?

Where's the Tipper going to light up his big fat cigar?

Perhaps it's only appropriate that someone would offer to light it for him with a food stamp coupon.

Damn! I absolutely loathe those unconscionable anti-smoking laws!

Collegian editors wonder if I smoke Cuban cigars.

Sorry folks, but I do enjoy an occasional pre-Sandinista Nicaraguan variety.

Why is Ed "flip flop" Markey so arrogant?

He claims that he's done so much for the nuclear freeze; but—

If I were a supporter of this ill-advised scheme of appeasement, I'd be asking Markey for the proof of his pudding.

The freezeniks better keep an eye on Markey— he showed his tremendous backspin moves to the pro-life movement. He's not a good liberal— he's just a good Ed Markey.

At least he didn't have his picture taken with Commandante Danny Ortega like Jim Shannon did last August. (Tsongas was in the same picture.)

Shamie and Richardson ought to pass a few copies of that around— after they're finished slugging it out for the heart and soul of the GOP.

Why is Ray Shamie going to speak at that other college— Amherst?

If he's a working man's Republican, why is he passing up a chance to speak at the state's largest public university—?

—For Amherst College, of all places! — Home of the genetically elitist.

Watch Elliot Richardson, the former secretary of everything, and preppy saint of the "upscale" pachyderms come here, thus stealing Shamie's act.

Well, at least Ray Shamie won't be speaking at Frisbee U. in South Amherst.

I took all my share of jokes about "alligator wrestling" courses when I went to college in Miami, (Biscayne College) but no one ever majored in frisbee throwing.

Why is this university treated as the Rodney Dangerfield of higher education within our borders— while highly regarded elsewhere?

Perhaps there's too many preppies in the Statehouse.

Or, a better explanation: they can't see past the Route 128 Beltway so they don't know what a good thing the state has out here.

Boy, would I love to see Western Massachusetts secede from the other half of the state.

At least Dukakis wouldn't be our Governor— now then-would Ed King be interested in moving out here?

All for now— hope your coffee is still warm.

Just asking you to think

Recently a newborn baby girl was found dead, wrapped in a bloody towel, and placed in a in a shoebox. She was found tossed in a trash can in a rest area on route two, in nearby Greenfield. Each day I drive by that rest area and that trash can on my way to school. I turn the radio up and pretend not to be thinking of that baby for fear of becoming sick. It's publication won't make me feel any less sick as I drive by that trash can. It's purpose is the same as that of any other editorial. I am asking you to think.

College — an absolute haven for expressing sexual freedom. At college people are "grown up." They don't need concepts like commitments, obligations, or (perish the thought) relationships. Sex at college is fun. It's perfect. What parents don't understand is that, at college, no one gets hurt. There are no inhibitions, because at school we have what we want. We asked for freedom and we got it. Now everything is blissful...or is it?

Ken Whelihan

The first time that we asked to take freedom out of our toy chest to play with, our parents said "no." The next time we demanded to play with freedom. Our parents still said "no." We knew that our parents were cruel and unreasonable — all parents are (of course) — but why so stingy about freedom? We were consistently denied freedom because our parents knew what lousy company freedom kept. They knew that when we pulled freedom out of the toy trunk it would be all tangled up with responsibility and selfishness.

These weren't toys we wanted to play with. Freedom was fun. In and of itself, it seemed like a novel idea. Unfortunately, freedom doesn't come in and of itself. Freedom brings responsibility and provides a handy vehicle for selfishness. What a bummer...or is it?

At college we don't want to be responsible or unselfish. Those were traits our parents asked for. They're no fun...right?

Suppose — with your wildest powers of imagination — that somewhere, somehow, someone's parents forgot to ask for responsible, unselfish children. I know it's absurd, but we're just imagining — remember? What might happen to this odd lot being when college became everyday life? Lets make our imaginary person a boy — just to make our story that much more unbelievable.

Our young man enters college completely oblivious to the fact that responsibility and unselfishness are dinosour qualities. He foolishly believes that, since these concepts were thought up under his own free will, they are valuable. As he dreams, with the naked university in his bedroom, he has trouble finding himself in the "fun." He tosses and turns (alone) pondering his "values" of responsibility and unselfishness.

He questions his world with responsibility. Is it responsible to possibly destroy a life because — "it feels good?" Is is responsible to steal the degree of intimacy from the person who will become your life because — "everyone does it?" Is it responsible to enjoy freedom while disregarding responsibility itself?

He questions his world with unselfishness. Is it unselfish to sleep with your date — and leave in the morning? Is it unselfish to start an infant's life and then disregard it to protect your own well being? He questions further...Is it selfish to want to only be intimate with the person you have committed your life to?

Our weary, nonexistent boy emerges after his sleepless night. He has solved his personal questions of responsibility and unselfishness. He has created, however, a more perplexing problem. Upon deciding that premarital sex, abortion, and other irresponsible actions are not for him — who can he tell? Is he free? Does his freedom give him the right to stand up and yell "NO" in a crowded bedroom?

He leaves the university having not challenged the emptiness found in most of his colleagues. Nor has he surrendered his own values. He graduates a quiet virgin. And as UMass legend would have it — Mettowampee drops his hatchet.

Explanation of an argument

To the Editor,

The front page article in Friday's Collegian "Senator suspended after shoving match" is nothing short of libelous fiction. Unfortunately for the reporter, I was not suspended nor was I involved in a shoving match. I did not seize floor time as indicated, but rather I was duly recognized by Speaker Chris Sullivan. I spoke not to criticize SGA President Tom Ahern as the report writes, but rather I spoke to criticize perrenial student Jim Murphy and his childish plan to run as "Gumby" for president.

The text of the incident is ridiculous. The events actually occurred as follows: After being recognized by Speaker Sullivan, I said to Jim Murphy, "Jim, haven't you done enough to destroy the image of the student government, the student body, and the University of Massachusetts?" Rob Texiera called for a "point of personal privilege" and said that my remarks to Jim Murphy were an attack and that he was offended. I responded to Mr. Texiera, "Shut up Rob, before I attack you, too."

I did not say "Don't come near me at this time." This quote appears to have come right out of a Dudley DoRight cartoon. Mr. Texiera approached me. I never moved from my place of standing. I did not shove Mr. Texiera. In actuality, Texiera became violent to the point where he had to be restrained by fellow senators. If there was any shoving going on, it was between Rob Texiera and the senators restraining him. I was not expelled. The actual motion the Senate passed was "Move to ask people who cannot conduct themselves in an orderly manner to leave the senate chamber." I had left the meeting before the motion was made.

It was stated that I "could not be reached for comment." Funny, my phone machine never got the message.

In regards to the inquiry concerning my future plans as an SGA Senator, I will continue to fight for the interests of Residential students and against the seamier side of SGA politics—a side with which the SGA leadership is very much at home. Thank you.

Bill Collins
SGA Senator

Imaginary candidates respond

To the Editor,

Frankly, we're glad that Scott Sheridan wrote a letter to the Collegian (2-27). It gives us the opportunity to raise some important issues. First, not all student issues start on campus. In fact, most of them (financial aid, draft registration, educational funding etc.) start at the state and federal level. The longer we ignore them, the longer we'll be ignored. It is our SGA's willingness to address larger issues that separates it from the vast majority of student governments which content themselves with running dances and bake sales.

Secondly, you will notice that Mr. Sheridan contradicts himself. On one hand he speaks of democracy, while on the other hand he advocates limiting the freedom of speech of the GUMBY/CAMEL Campaign. This type of self-serving contradiction is par for the course with the campus conservatives.

We won't give a campaign rap. Just watch the literature that comes out and see who really has anything to say.

Equaling his #1 fiction best sellers in suspense—a real-life mission impossible carried out by authentic American heroes.
They were all computer executives, employees of Ross Perot's Dallas-based EDS Corporation. They were trained and led by former Green Beret Colonel Bull Simons—the man John Wayne once told: "You are the man I play in the movies." Their secret mission: to do what the U.S. Government couldn't do. To rescue, against staggering odds, two EDS colleagues locked up in an Iranian prison in 1978.
This is the stuff of Ken Follet's #1 fiction best sellers—undercover infiltration into hostile terrain, a hair-breadth escape from a powerful enemy, a harrowing overland race past armed patrols and marauding tribesman for the safety of the border. But this time, it's real—it actually happened.
Held with suspense, ON WINGS OF EAGLES will fill you with pride, as you share an extraordinary adventure with some authentic American heroes.

Owls too tough for UMass, 65-46

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

At least University of Massachusetts basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen knows why his team lost.

"When you shoot as bad as we did you're going to lose against even a lousy team, unfortunately for us Temple is a great team," sighed the beleagured coach after the Minutemen dropped their third in a row with a 65-46 rout to the nationally-ranked status-seeking Owls last night in the Cage.

Temple showed how great they are in the first half, shooting 70 percent while sprinting out to a 17-2 lead as the mason-like Minutemen opened up with 1 of 11 shooting from the floor.

"I don't think we played awesome defense in the first half, we were fair. They just didn't hit any inside shots, and they were pretty easy cues," explained Temple mentor Don Chaney, whose team is now 22-3 overall and finishing off their Atlantic 10 regular season championship with a unmarked 16—0 record.

UMass couldn't have looked any worse in the first half. The 11-14 Minutemen shot a pitiful 10 of 29 from the field, led by John Hempel's uncharacteristic 3 of 12. As Temple all-American Terence Stansbury was scoring 17 of his game high 19 in the half UMass was continually bricking them up.

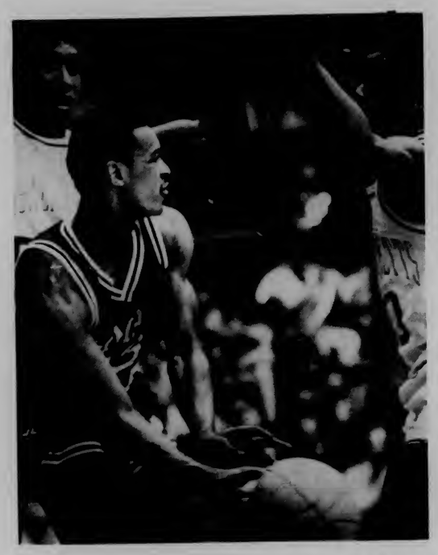
Layups by Hempel, and Horace Neysmith flew harmlessly off the glass, outside bombs by Donald Russell, Edwin Green and Carl Smith clanked off the rim. "We were off, they were on, it's as simple as that," said Neysmith.

The Minutemen scored the first points of the game, a 12 footer by Smith, but the NCAA bound Owls scored the next 17 until Bobby Braun scored on a goaltending call.

They didn't put the ball into the hole again until Horace nailed a fine dunk at the 7:38 mark to make it 24-4. Hempel finally hit a jumper, he had eight first half points, but the over nine straight minutes UMass went without scoring in the half against a Top 20 team like Temple, killed them.

Despite the 40-22 halftime deficit the Minutemen kept their tenacity, they played outstanding defense in the beginning of the second 20 minutes, not allowing a Temple basket until the 16:41 mark, and then not giving up another score until the 9:45 point on a Granger Hall free throw. UMass ran off a 8-2 streak to cut the lead to 42-30, as Temple left their shooting touch in the locker room for the half, going a terrible 7 of 25 from the floor.

The run developed into a 12-4 streak that made it 44-34 with 12:14 to go and the capacity crowd of 4,200 was up and screaming. Stansbury had disappeared, UMass was crashing the boards and playing defense, maybe, just maybe there was still a chance.



Two key travelling calls, another couple of missed layups, and poor shot selection killed off any chances for UMass however. Center Colin McNish, Hall, and guard Jim McLoughlin scored important hoops to nail the coffin shut on UMass. Two Pete Aguilar free throws with 3:43 left made it 60-44 and it was game time.

Hall had 15 points for Temple, McNish and Mcloughlin had 12 each. For UMass, now 6-10 in the league, Hempel had 12, Russell 10, Green 8 and Carl Smith and Neysmith, 6.

The only real highlight in the game came at the 17:05 mark of the second half when Smith dished off to Russell for a jumper in the process getting his 174th assist, tieing the UMass record set by the late Alex Eldridge. He finished with eight handouts for the game. He also has the A-10 record.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: The loss was only the Minutemen's second at home this year, they're 9-2 in the Cage. UMass outrebounded Temple 37-34, but were guilty of 16 turnovers.

The West Virginia game was the first Neysmith missed as a collegian.

Track teams finish 4th and 7th at N.E. Championships

By M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track squads captured fourth and seventh place respectively at the New England Championships held in Boston this past weekend.

The Minutemen got off to a great start Friday, the first of two days of non-stop action at host Boston University. Todd Johnson grabbed third-place in the Pentathlon, setting a school record as he finished with 3,514 points.

Jerry Espinosa, seeded tenth, finished a surprising sixth in the grueling five-event contest and the rest of the team seemed to feel a spark as they turned in some quick qualifying times for the next day's finals.

John Keelan grabbed the championship and a new UMass record, with a quick 2:10.50 in the 1,000 meters Saturday.

Brian Osborne tied a school record as he grabbed the second spot in the 600 and Ted White was just shy of a record as he took third-place in the 800 meters.

The distance medley relay team of Paul Stanislawzyk, John Lynch, Rawle Crichlow, and Jack Marinelli, a young group of freshmen and sophomores, ran together for the first time and all had "great runs" according to Coach Ken O'Brien. The group finished fifth, only about one second shy of third-place Boston College.

Leah Loftis

John Keelan

"The season has been a good one," said O'Brien, noting that he'll be discussing strategy today for the upcoming IC4A's scheduled for the upcoming weekend at Princeton.

Meanwhile at Boston College, site of the women's championships, junior Leah Loftis was helping power the UMass team to a seventh-place showing out of more than 30 schools.

Loftis was the only champion repeater from last year's meet as she again sprinted away from the field in the 400 meter dash; her time of 57.61 is a new UMass record.

Loftis also figured in the championship 1600 meter relay team with Susan Bird, Barbara Cullinan, and Susan Goldstein which set a school-record of 3:56.80 as they finished a full three seconds ahead of the nearest competitor.

Sophomore Liz Patterson continued her consistent performing as she finished fourth in the shot-put to add to the UMass points.

Hard luck struck freshman Kayla Morrison as she false-started in the 55 meter and the 200 and was disqualified.

Minutemen defeat Temple and win N.E. Invitational

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team capped off a very strange weekend with a win over Temple on Saturday and capturing first place in the 15th annual New England Conference Invitational Championships in Burlington, Vermont on Sunday.

The Minutemen did not have one of their better performances in their 247.80-244.90 victory over Temple in Philadelphia, and it was due to some strange happenings in the gym.

"A lot of weird things happened," said Bert Mathieson. "We had people falling off on things that they never fall off of. With Jim (Corbett) slipping out of bounds (on floor), Willie (Stevens) missing the high bar on his mount, me ripping off high bar at the end of one of my best performances and Phil (Gorgone) ripping off rings, it was weird."

Joe Demarco captured first in the floor exercises for UMass with a 9.2 performance which included two double back somersaults. Bobby Fleming, who won the all around with a 52.70, took second for Temple with a 9.05 routine, and the Minutemen's Stevens (9.0) placed third.

Although Temple won the floor event 44.00-43.45, UMass pulled ahead for good after the pommel horse event with fine performances from Mathieson (second, 9.05) and Ken Dougherty (third, 9.0).

Mathieson, who placed second in the all around with 51.8, won the rings event with a 9.0. Temple's Fleming mastered the vaulting and high bar events with no problems scoring a 9.55 on each event.

Corbett (9.05) had a fine performance placing third in the vaulting event doing a layout tsukara, and Stevens won second with a clean 9.2 high bar performance.

UMass scored a 250.05 team total on Sunday on its way to dominating the other six teams at the invitational. The Minutemen came away with 14 individual awards including a UMass sweep of the high bar event.

Mathieson, who placed in four of the six events, captured the all around title with a 52.95 total. Stevens took third place with a 49.55 behind Lowell's John Knowles who had a 51.35 total.

UMass, which won five of the events as a team and tied Lowell for first place on the vaulting event, had first place finishers in four of the six events.

Knowles won the floor exercises with a 9.4 score, while Corbett (9.2) and Stevens (9.05) placed second and third respectively.

Dougherty, who Mathieson felt was a little underscored, recorded a 9.15 score on his way to winning the pommel horse event. Mark Quevillon and Knowles tied for second place with an 8.5 while Mathieson finished third with an 8.45.

Mathieson came back to win the rings event with a 9.05 score. Stevens placed third on the vaulting event with an 8.75. In the parallel bars event, Mathieson took first again (9.0) and Dougherty placed third with an 8.0.

The high bar was a clean sweep as Tony Sbarra (9.3) and Mathieson (9.3) tied for first and Stevens came in the second spot with an 8.45.

The Minutemen will take a well deserved rest until Saturday when they travel to Springfield for their final battle until the Championships.

Hart stuns Mondale in New Hampshire primary

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Sen. Gary Hart upset Walter F. Mondale yesterday in the lead-off New Hampshire primary, strippingaway Mondale's credentials as undisputed front-runner andleaving six rivals to struggle for survival in the Democratic presidential race.

"Many people thought, including the front-runner, that this campaign would be over tonight," a jubilant Hart told supporters in Manchester. "This campaign just begins tonight."

The Colorado senator said, "New Hampshire voters are cantankerous, they're independent, they make up their own minds. They're also smart." Mondale had been heavily favored, but saw his lead fade away over the weekend.

Hart wasn't ready to claim the front-runners mantle, but drew cheers when he declared: "Tonight we buried the label, 'darkhorse.' " He was picking up 40 percent of Mondale. John Glenn was a far-away third.

Mondale congratulated Hart, said "Sometimes a cold shower is good for you," and speculated that voters "didn't want the debate to end." Glenn said the results here "pierce that balloon of inevitability" that Mondale would win the nomination.

Mondale vowed to "redouble his efforts" and said he remained confident.

'I have won one, I have lost one," he said. "I am ready to contest every primary. I am ready to run this race and win."

Hart's margin stunned even his staff. He carried more than 75 cities and towns, far more than Mondale. He held the lead in Manchester, a city with a large union vote that Mondale had hoped to claim for his own.

Worse for Mondale was the fact that since 1952, no one has even won the presidency while losing his party primary here.

Glenn was running third. Others on the ballot included Sens. Alan Cranston and Ernest Hollings, former Sen. George McGovern, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew.

Of the also-rans, only Cranston and Agnew declined to say they would continue their campaigns. Cranston scheduled a news conference for early Wednesday and aides spread word that he is determined to seek a new term in the Senate.

Glenn conceded disappointment but he said Hart was "more limited in the South," where the next set of primaries are scheduled March 13.

UMass frats face stiffer academic standards

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Interfraternity Council passed measures last night to upgrade their academic reputation.

A proposal requiring fraternities to maintain an overall grade point average of at least 2.25 or face sanctions, passed the council by a vote of 20 to 6 after limited debate.

The measure stipulates that if the overall grade point average of a fraternity drops below 2.25 for one semester its members will receive tutoring.

If the average stays below 2.25 for two semesters, the fraternity will lose intramural sports rights. After three consecutive semesters below the minimum grade point average, the measure states that the fraternity's charter will be revoked by the Greek Affairs Office.

A second measure, to fine any fraternity $25 for each pledge they accept who is not in good academic standing, passed by a vote of 17 to 7.

While some council members opposed the measure as possibly discouraging students from pledging to fraternities, the consensus was the measure will attract more and better students to fraternities, and force houses to pay closer attention to the academic welfare of their pledges.

"This helps houses assume responsibility for pledges," said council treasurer Nick Katsoulis. "It's not limiting pledges, because if they get (a cumulative average) below 2.0 for two semesters they're gone anyway."

Council president Greg Andonian said the measures will help change the way UMass perceives fraternities' attitudes toward academics.

"We're trying to change the Greek system from being a joke," Andonian said.

Pointing out that the average cume of Greek houses is about 2.6, Andonian said, "There's no reason why 48 guys in a house can't help a pledge get over a 2.0."

The council also unanimously rejected a Greek Affairs Office proposal to require people running for president of a fraternity chapter or a council office to have a grade point average of 2.5 of better.

"Grades and leadership ability have nothing to do with each other," said Jud Walton, Secretary of the Council. A fraternity ought to decide for itself who should lead it, Walton said.

Financial aid deadline here

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Students seeking financial aid at the University of Massachusetts have a variety of places to turn to, but must apply by tomorrow, according to Arthur Jackson, financial aid director.

UMass offers for full-time students in a degree program, loans, work study and grants with most aid (50 percent) coming by loan.

Through the various departments there are merit scholarships available and incoming high school students can apply for Chancellor's talent awards.

Late applicants after tomorrow will not be considered until October.

"Sixty-four percent of UMass students receive some type of assistance," said Jackson. There is $54 million given out through loans, working programs (including workstudy jobs) and student employment (non-workstudy jobs), Jackson said.

The University will give 15,400 students some sort of financial aid. "There are no great increases or decreases (in financial aid)" Jackson said. "There is a slight rise in the work study fund."

The financial aid office encourages as many students as possible to apply. An applicant must be a citizen, a permanent resident, or a refugee on a visa.

"The major variable (for aid) is gross family income, number of dependents in the family and the number of children in college," Jackson said.

No financial aid forms will be accepted without a tax statement by the applicant's parent(s).

"There has been an emphasis on loans and working programs, and a deemphasis on grant programs," said Jackson. "I think this is in the wrong direction."

Students Advocating Financial Assistance (SAFA) is a professionally trained lobbying group at UMass, said David Rego, a member of the group. SAFA has gone to

Leap year hops over today

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

Today is February 29, not March 1, and that means another leap year has rolled around.

Superstition has it that leap year is one day when women propose marriage to men, and in Folklore history it is a very dangerous day for men, although some men may feel differently, said University of Massachusetts classics professor Edward Phinney.

Every four years an extra day is added onto the month of February to lengthen the year. This practice was started during the Renaissance period in the 16th century, Phinney said.

The old Julian (Roman) year was 365 and one quarter day long, and in the Middle Ages people started discovering that their planting and harvesting wasn't coming out correct—they were planting too soon. So when people became aware of this, they added the extra day to keep the calendar in phase with the sun, Phinney said.

The day may confuse some people with their dates and appointments, as revealed in a random poll taken in the Campus Center yesterday where many students did not even realize today was not March 1.

"There's enough things going on in this place to bother you," said student Robert Barnicle. "(Leap year) gives this place an extra day to get to you."

Scandinavian jumbo jet slips off airport runway

NEW YORK (AP) — A Scandinavian Airlines jumbo jet carrying 177 people skidded off a Kennedy Airport runway while landing in light rain and fog yesterday, and came to rest in a 12-foot-deep creek. Authorities said a dozen people suffered minor injuries.

Some passengers were forced to jump from a door into the water, where they swam to safety, according to Tom Young, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, operator of the airport.

Others, he said escaped by jumping down chutes, and still others walked on a wing a climbed down a ladder.

Young said the DC-10 jetliner ended submerged up to its engines in water as deep as 12 feet after the accident at 4:15 p.m.

Sal Iavaroni, assistant chief of operations at the airport, had said earlier that no emergency evacuation was necessary.

Young said the plane was carrying 163 passengers and a crew of 14 on a flight from Stockholm via Oslo.

There were no reports of serious inuries. Twelve people were taken to the airport medical center for treatment of cuts and bruises or exposure, center director Dr. Leon Star said. Two other people with bad hearts were taken to Peninsula General Hospital for observation, Star said.

Young said the remaining passengers were taken to a lounge on the third floor of the airport's west wing, where they were being processed by customs officials.

Herb Bauer, spokesman for the airline, said the cause of the accident "was most likely hydroplaning"—skidding on the wet surface.

Student minority skills falling as others increase

BOSTON (AP) - Ninety-two percent of Massachusetts students tested last year met local standards in basic skills, but a report released Tuesday found that a disproportionate numbers of minorities failed.

"The test results," Education Commissioner John H. Lawson said, "represent an overall increase in the percentages of students meeting local basic skills standards."

But the report to the state Board of Education on the third year of basic skills testing also said the findings "document a persistent situation of excessive numbers of black and Hispanic students either failing to meet standards or simply not being tested."

Overall, the report said two out of every 10 black and Hispanic students did not meet basic skill standards, while less than one out of 10 white students failed to meet standards.

The gap between the numbers of whites and minorities meeting minimum standards ranged as high as 21 percent in reading at the secondary level, according to the report.

The report itself offered no explanation for the different achievement records, but it did note the difference between white and minority scores was smaller last year than the two previous years of testing.

"There were gains made by black and Hispanic students," Allan S. Hartman, department research director, said after presenting the report to the board.

Big Dan's victim takes the stand again

FALL RIVER, MA. (AP) - Saying that "everybody who was in there was guilty," a young woman Tuesday identified two men she said took turns raping her on a pool table while others in a barromm cheered.

The 22-year-old woman, who spent her third day on the witness stand Tuesday, also denied she had reported she had been raped on July 1981, a year and a half before she allegedly was attacked in Big Dan's, a bar in New Bedford.

Testifying under cross-examination in a morning trial, the woman said two men who took turns raping her on March 6, 1983, were being tried in an afternoon trial.

"I don't know him by name. He's one of the people in the other trial," she said, of one man she said raped her. She later said a second man who raped her is also on trial in the afternoon.

Daniel Silvia and Joseph Vieira, both 27, are being tried on charges of aggravated rape in the afternoon session. Four other men, Victor Raposo, John Cordeiro, Virgilio Medeiros and Jose Medeiros are being tried in a separate morning session. The Medeiros men are not related.

The trials were split to avoid the possibility of co-defendants testifying against each other in the same trial.

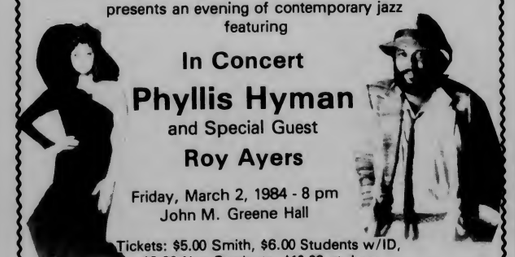
In previous testimony the woman identified Cordeiro as a man who tried to force her to perform oral sex.

But under questioning by defense attorney Judith Lindahl, the woman did not identify defendant Victor Raposo as one of the men who held her or forced her to engage in sex.

Instead, the woman said Raposo leaned over to talk to her while she fought with other men holding her on a pool table.

"Did he say, "Don't yell and they won't you," asked Ms. Lindahl.

"Yes," said the witness. Here is what the victim has said about the defendants during the trial:



-She identified two defendants being tried in the afternoon session, Silvia and Vieira, as the two men who took turns raping her on a barroom pool table.

Porn and violence linked

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Some feminist and women's groups in the five-college area said there is a connection between pornography and violence against women, and that there is statistical data to prove it.

In January 1983, Hustler magazine, one of the nation's leading pornographic magazines, featured a photo-essay entitled "Dirty Pool." The "essay" depicted a young waitress being sexually harassed in a working men's bar by a "leather-clad pool shark" while other men watched. In the following photographs, the waitresses' clothes were ripped off of her and she was pinned on a pool table while three men probed "her most private parts."

Three months after the Hustler "Dirty Pool" issue came out, a 21 year-old woman was allegedly gang-raped on a pool table by six men in a New Bedford barroom while customers stood by and cheered.

Kathleen Engel, co-coordinator of the Woman's Forum Against Media Violence operating from Northampton, said the "Hustler spread was condoning violence against women."

"Because pornography is so prolific and mainstream, it sends a message to men that violence against women is okay," she said.

Engel said Hustler, which has a monthly circulation of 2 million and annual profits of approximately 30 million, is the "worst" pornographic magazine and also the most "honest."

"Hustler" doesn't pretend to be anything but a dirty, violent magazine," she said. But "Playboy pretends to be clean sex. It's as dangerous as Hustler and it runs a lot of incest cartoons, and advertisements showing children as sexual objects," she said.

While there is no direct proof the six men accused of gang-raping the New Bedford woman were influenced by Hustler's January issue, studies indicate connections between rape and violence and pornography, a 4.5 billion dollar industry.

S.E. Chase, a junior who is interning with the Women's Issues Team and the Everywomen's Center at the University of Massachusetts this semester, said a 1979 UCLA study indicated that men who viewed pornographic movies were more likely to commit acts of violence against women than men who viewed erotica.

The Women's Forum Against Media Violence defines erotica as sexuality that is mutually pleasurable while pornography shows one persons' pleasures as someone elses humiliation and pain.

Chase said in the study, two groups of college men were shown movies involving erotica, but no violence, and another group viewed movies in which men committed violent acts against women and were eventually rewarded with the victim's affection.

People "are getting messages that violence is okay and that women are available for men's use" she said.

"A lot of men's magazine's show men beating and raping the woman and the woman is enjoying it. This reinforces the myth that women enjoy rape and bring it upon themselves," she said.

Chase said many times, pornographic photos or movies don't actually show a man's presence but readers and viewers know he is there.

"You can have a woman thrown down in an alley with her dress ripped and blood on her body. It's going to give the message that someone has violated the woman's body and that she's been assaulted."

Mail-in registration bill urged

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Voter Registration Coalition this week will attempt to generate support for a bill in the Massachusetts legislature that would allow voters to register by mail.

The mail-in voter registration bill would permit voters to register by mailing an affadavit to the registrar and provide an alternative to the current process which requires registration in the presence of a registrar.

"Registering to vote should be as easy as registering for the draft," said Jay Holland, coordinator for UMass Big Vote '84, a voter registration coalition that includes such members as the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) the public policy committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate. The coalition has been endorsed by "virtually every RSO group," Holland said.

Post cards urging state representatives to vote in favor of the bill will be available at the MassPIRG table on the campus center concourse.

"Right now, Massachusetts has some of the most antiquitated voter registration laws in the country," Holland said.

Opponents of the bill have voiced fear of increased cost and voter registration fraud, but "latest surveys have shown absolutely no increase in fraud in 21 states that have mail-in voter registration."

Holland said that voter registration by mail is "proven effective to increase registration . . .the only rise in cost would be for mailing notices to people not appearing on street lists."

Holland called attention to the statistic of "over 55 million people in the country unregistered," with "one third of those between the ages of 18 and 24."

Holland said that the voter registration coalition registered over 3200 UMass students in the recent voter registration drive, but expressed concern about problems convincing those registered to actually vote.

"Reagan won Massachusetts by 2700 votes in 1980," Holland said "If the people that we registered to vote on this campus alone had voted, he would have lost Massachusetts."

"Students have to stop complaining and act," he said, "and by act, I mean vote."

Senate grants lobbying funds

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate last night approved a funding request by the UMass Peacemakers, a Registered Student Organization which will be sending 21 students to Washington D.C. on March 7 to lobby on behalf of the Nuclear Freeze Movement.

The students will attend a special day-long program to lobby their senators and representatives in small meetings and will also attend a short rally in front of the Capital.

The senate was addressed by Charles Carroll of the Peacemakers who requested $100 to cover bus rental for the trip. Carroll said he will also request frunds from the Student Government Association.

"We would like to keep the bus fee for students around $20 and even go below that figure, if possible," Carroll said.

Students from other area colleges will also be traveling on the bus, Carroll added.

Students will lobby Senators Paul Tsongas and Edward Kennedy, but will concentrate their efforts on Rep. Silvio Conte (R-MA), according to Carroll.

"We will speak with Tsongas and Kennedy, but they both already support the freeze. We'll concentrate on Conte, who has been known to flip back and forth on some issues," he said.

"Conte does have a history of listening to his constituents though, so we hope to make an impression on him.

"This is a special day for students to meet with their senators and representatives, and talk with them about the neclear freeze in small group interviews," Carroll said.

Carroll also said a fairly new facet of the nuclear freeze issue, a ban on the testing and deployment of space weapons, is another issue students will speak to their representatives about.

In other senate business, the senate was addressed by Jim Monroe of the UMass Outing Club, who explained that the club furnishes all equipment for participation on outings organized by members of the club, and also rents out equipment to individual students. Membership is five dollars for students.

Selectboard calms PVTA dispute

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

Agitation expressed by the Amherst Selectboard about the possibility that the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) might fund the new "shoppers shuttle" and thus compete with the existing Bay Road and Cushman extension routes, has subsided.

James Lindstrom, Amherst director of Administration and Planning, raised opposition to the potential incorporation of the shuttle into the PVTA system in a memo two days after the shuttle began running.

Selectboard Chair Edith Wilkinson said the town should have been notified of the University Transit Advisory Board's (TAB) plans to fund the service since the Selectboard must approve all routes that run through Amherst. The University lies within those borders, she said.

"The service itself is a relatively harmless one," since it is not funded by the town now, Lindstrom said. "But it had future implication," he said.

The Selectboard was dismayed over the possibility that PVTA money which might be available for the Bay Road (which the town now pays for) and the Cushman extension service could be diverted into subsidizing the shuttle.

The lack of consultation with the town "highlighted deficiencies in the way route changes are handled," Lindstrom said.

In a letter to Amherst Town Manger Barry Del Castillo, Bill Barrett director of Transportation and Parking at UMass suggested that a town representative sit on the TAB to avoid future communication problems.

"Any implication that the University is circumventing the town is misleading," Barrett said. If the shuttle were incorporated into the PVTA system, it would compete with new routes for funding, he said.

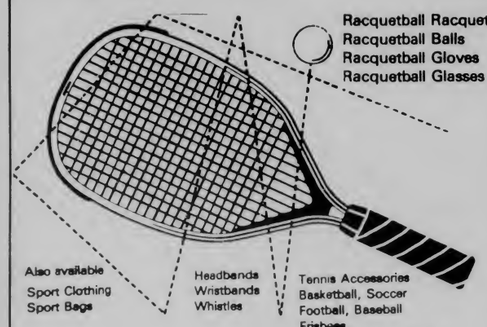
Since the shuttle has been implemented on an experimental basis Del Castillo said, "I don't think the town is of any mind to discontinue that (the shuttle) now. We'll see how the experiment works."

Tom Ahern, Student Government Association co-president, said the Selectboard's fears were unfounded because "the bus is totally funded by student fees."

"We didn't consult the town because this is purely experimental," he said.

If the shuttle continues after the end of this semester, funding for the service will be provided either by asking students to pay an additional fee or by cutting university routes such as the campus shuttle between classes or the Orchard Hill run, Ahern said.

Ahern said he hopes to have a questionnaire and a referendum concerning university bus routes on the SGA presidential ballot.



There was a discrepancy of $2,300 in operating costs for the shuttle. Lindstrom calculated a figure of $3,000 to implement the service for one year while Ahern cited a figure of $700 to run the shuttle for the trial period which ends on May 17.

SCERA and SGA offices haven't proposed budgets yet

By STEPHEN HOWE
Collegian Staff

Several student organizations, including the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) and the Student Government Association (SGA) president's office, have failed to turn in budget proposals on time, according to the SGA treasurer's office.

Treasurer Eric Nitzche said that the groups failed to submit a budget proposal as of last week, and the official deadline was December 22nd of last year.

Groups not submitting a budget proposal prior to the deadline can petition the budget committee for an extension, according to Nitzche.

"It happens every year," he said. "They can petition the budget committee for an extension...it's up to the budget committee to decide."

Budget Committee Chair Joe Sparks agreed that the committee does grant extensions and said the larger campus groups are all but guaranteed them.

"Some things you know you're going to fund, there's no way that we can say that we're not going to fund SCERA," he said.

"I'm not particularly happy about it (late proposals) but we generally don't mind if it doesn't hurt the overall budget process," Sparks said.

Both Sparks and Nitzche agreed that SCERA had given valid reasons for their request for an extension, saying that the group has reorganized and could not submit a budget until they decided how their organization would be changed in fiscal year 1985.

The SGA president's office has not yet turned in a budget proposal but will probably do so by Monday, said SGA co-president Tom Ahern.

"It's not like I'm turning it in late, we were granted an extension by the old chair," he said.

Sparks confirmed that he is honoring extensions granted by the former budget chair.

"I don't think it would be fair of me to deny extensions if groups were told that they would be given extensions," he said.

Hearings to determine budget allocations will begin Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m. and will be held Sunday and Monday nights until completed.

Student Escort Service back in ushering business

By TERESA QUIRION
Collegian Correspondent

The escort service at the University of Massachusetts is again functioning this semester, to provide a measure of safety for students on campus faced with walking alone at night.

Students seeking an escort may call the Student Security Office at 545-2123 between 7 p.m. and 1 a.m. Sunday through Saturday. When a call is received, the escort on duty meets the student and accompanies her or him to any destination on campus.

"We receive between five and eight calls on a given evening," said Carol Radzik, student security coordinator.

According to the Department of Public Safety, use of the escort service has increased its formation last October. "The university community has expressed a desire for this kind of service and it is our responsibility to provide it," said Gerald O'Neill director of Public Safety.

"We are very pleased with the service, and in my opinion the escorts are doing an excellent job," O'Neill added.

Washington D.C. and the Massachusetts statehouse to lobby for increased financial aid to students.

"SAFA lets representatives (in the state legislatures or Congress) know there are students who want more financial aid," said SAFA president Cynthia Howland. "Legislators are becoming more aware of students," she said.

Jackson, who has supported the group's efforts said, "SAFA represents the best lobbying efforts that the University has done. They support financial aid nationwide."

SAFA has a table in the Campus Center Concourse and is in the process of organizing a letter drive to compliment the various representatives on their support of financial aid programs in the past, while asking them to pass a $44 million appropriation for increased assistance to students in 1985.

Stolen UMass merchandise exceeds $100,000

More than $100,000 in building materials were reported stolen from the University salvage yard Monday, according to University of Massachusetts Police.

Police said the goods, including $17,000 worth of miscellaneous electronic parts, microwave panels valued at $5,000 and aluminim extrusions valued at $83,220, were reported missing by the person responsible for picking up the materials, which were then supposed to have been stored in Goessman laboratory. The theft occurred between Feb. 17 and 27 and the case is under investigation, police said.

In other police business, a motor vehicle was found stuck in the turf near the Southwest Residential Area maze at shortly before 9 p.m. Monday. Damage is estimated at more than $400 and police are calling it a case of malicious destruction. The car was towed by Amherst Towing Company. Police have a suspect and are requesting a show cause hearing.

A mens jacket, valued at $200, was reported stolen from a student's room in John Adams dormitory at 4:32 p.m. Monday. According to the complaintant, the room had been left unlocked and there are no suspects.

Police arrested a 46-year-old Belchertown resident at 12:20 p.m. Feb. 24 and charged him with assault and battery. The subject allegedly pulled a knife on a man walking in the Campus Center and verbally threatened the complaintant, police said.

Police received a report of larceny from a resident in Gorman dormitory at 12:30 p.m. Feb. 26. A gold bracelet, watch, necklace, earrings, two gold rings, a herringbone bracelet valued at $1,142 and $40 cash were reported stolen from an unlocked room, according to the complaintant. The theft occurred between 12:15 p.m. and 12:30 p.m., police said.

Editor's Note

Travel agency may be cheating student vacationers

If you are planning to book a trip with Adventures in Travel, of Westport, Connecticut which claims to be the "world's largest operator of Bermuda College Week tours", be extremely cautious; you may lose your money.

I am a Junior in the College of Arts and Science at Cornell University, and had the misfortune of making a reservation with Adventures in Travel for their 1983 Spring Week Bermuda Trip.

The day after I mailed my payment in full to A.I.T., the friends who were to accompany me and had not as yet sent in their payments, decided not to go. I immediately telephoned Adventures in Travel and asked if I could get my money back if I did not go on the trip even though their brochure stated that there would be no refunds within 30 days of departure. The woman with whom I spoke assured me that I would have no problem receiving the full amount of $432.00 since I had notified them before they received my money, she also told me to write a letter confirming what was said in our phone conversation. Three days later I was shocked to find an airline ticket in the mail and not my check. I immediately notified Adventures in Travel of their mistake and was told to mail the ticket back. They once again assured me that I would be receiving a refund shortly, and that since there was a waiting list for my group there would be no problem. My father called twice to confirm what I had been told and he too was assured that my money would be promptly returned.

After numerous phone calls, in which I was told that my refund was being processed, I received a letter from the president of Adventures in Travel stating that the commitments made by his employees were invalid and that A.I.T. would only be willing to refund $150.00 of my $432.00.

Had I known that I'd not get my money back I definitely would have gone on the trip.

Needless to say, I have not accepted this unsatisfactory offer and strongly hope that those who read this letter will be prudent enough to think twice before making reservations with an agency that deals mainly with college students and does not live up to its commitments.

'AH, YES, INDEED — REMINDS ME OF THE TIME I WAS IN VIETNAM. I HAD TRAINED AND ARMED THE GOVERNMENT TROOPS, AND WAS SURROUNDED BY HOSTILES...'

The Senate must give total support

After eight months of work, negotiation and compromise, the Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously approved its proposed version of the constitution on February 9th. Tonight that progress and forward momentum in gaining an officially recognized SGA Constitution will be jeopardized, when a motion before the Senate threatens to ruin it.

The motion will attempt to "rescind the motion to amend the SGA Constitution until such time that the document . . . is available for tabling by the Undergraduate Student Senate to all area governments."

The senate has already sent its negotiating team to meet with the University administration representatives to finalize a mutually acceptable document, which will then be approved or rejected by the University Trustees. This will be the first time that the administration here and in Boston recognizes the legitimacy of the Student Government Association and its constitution.

The SGA negotiating team has already met with administration representatives, and no revisions of any consequence are expected. The document has been called "a monumental compromise" by student representative and SGA Treasurer Eric Nitszche. The document ensures that student rights will be protected through democratic processes, and allows students a voice in how their trust fund money is controlled.

The motion to reject the constitution simply because the final document hasn't been approved by the area governments is being made much too late. The time for internal negotiation in the senate is over. The task of compromising the remaining discrepancies should be left to the negotiating team. Any attempts to discourage this will only detract from student effectiveness in protecting student empowerment rights already established.

The constitution and the student representatives must have the wholehearted support of the SGA and the senate, or all might be for naught.

US needs national security

To the Editor

Probably the most regrettable aspect of Steven B. Cooke's recent verbal assault on the National Security Administration is not his paucity of intelligence or his paranoia, but the waste of good Collegian space.

It is the fashion, of course, to chastise the government and Ronald Reagan, especially on a progressive campus. But while it is healthy to question the actions of the government, it is absurd to delude oneself into thinking the United States does not need a security administration free from the too-liberal press or radical citizens who do not realize the ramifications of the release of certain national secrets.

To Mr. Cooke and other graduates of the Jane Fonda School of Hypocrisy, I recommend he consider just exactly how essential national security is, especially in light of recent political crises. I also suggest he, like other America-hating countrymen, considers just who is protecting him.

Learning from the past

To the Editor,

The following is in response to Reuven Carlyle's objection to the art work present in the Campus Center. We do not believe that the painting, which has been suddenly thrust into question after nearly twenty years, expresses Carlyle's opinion of racism. To the contrary, this painting is merely an artistic interpretation of a social condition that existed in the United States during the 1960's. More specifically, it is symbolic of the black struggle for educational equality in a time of racism and discrimination.

If Mr. Carlyle wants to totally distort this painting to fit his own narrow-minded views, fine. The problem with this, however, is where to draw the line. For example, should Huckleberry Finn and its powerful antislavery statement be censored for its stereotyped depiction of Jim as an ignorant, superstitious black man? Obviously not, but to accept Mr. Carlyle's position, one would certainly have to argue for it.

When viewing such things as art, it is necessary to take into account the time that it represents, and its purpose. In this case, the message is one of a call for educational equality, not racism. To take this painting down is to censor an accurate portrayal of the struggle towards, at least, educational equality at UMass. If we are ever going to overcome, it will never be through Mr. Carlyle's advocated censorship of reality.

Who in the Senate is really pro-student?

Rad, (rad), n; 1. any member of the long-standing, de facto-lesdership of the Student Government Association (SGA); 2. any member of the SGA who seems to me, to have lost touch with the concerns of the full-time, resident student, and concerns her/himself with issues that are not relevant to University life; 3. left-wing extremist who uses student government to further his/her own political platform, regardless of expense.

Neil McCabe

I have been on the Government Affairs committee in the student senate since early last semester. In that time I have attended what seems to be countless hours of meetings to deal with the constitution. These meetings began with the "Nitzsche-Sullivan" document, which was basically the old constitution, except for some very conspicuous shifts of power from the President's office to the Speaker's office. At the last minute an article dealing with the area governments was tacked to the back--literally. The areas were never consulted.

The next document put forward was from the United Areas Council. This group was formed in order to make sure residential concerns were met. The UAC document made for a drastic restructuring of student government. The theme behind the UAC document was the creation of a federal government as opposed to the chaotic hodge-podge with which we were dealing. And so the meetings really began.

What came out of the Government Affairs committee was a new system from the two proposals. Then the Rads got nervous. Maybe a fair constitution would be passed. They had to take action fast. What they ended up doing was calling for the constitution to be tabled to the first week of next semester. This, they argued, would allow the senators all of vacation to study the draft.

Well, the Rads all gave themselves forty hour week jobs over vacation. And one could argue that there was nothing for them to do. I suppose out of boredom, they decided to rewrite the constitution. When the senators returned they were told that the Government Affairs draft was scuttled and would not be brought back to the floor. When senators asked for a week in order to look over the new draft; the Rads said there wasn't enough time ("We have a deadline you know"). But, all was not lost. Over the next weekend the Rads got together with members of Government Affairs, and anyone else who would show and we hammered things out.

The result was not great, but very good for all concerned. In addition a new age of co-operation was at hand. When the senate passed the constitution there was applause and few sighs of relief. I felt good about student government and I was proud that students could work things out in the end. Maybe then I should have skipped the last meeting. But, then, I had no idea of what was up. At the last meeting SGA Speaker Chris Sullivan announced the formation of a student negotiating team. The team, which was comprised of Co-Presidents Tom Ahern and Charlene Allen, Treasurer Eric Nitzsche, and Chris Sullivan was to work things out with Whitmore. Four Rads would be working things out with the administration. A casual motion was made to include a representative from the United Areas Council. The motion failed. The Rads fought hard for it to fail. Maybe if residential senators didn't have to be full-time students a few might have stuck around. There are a lot of maybe's.

The fighting that followed was not pretty. Soon the area governments threatened rebellion. Orchard Hill, Northeast, and Central all vetoed the new constitution. Sylvan politely told the constitution to cool its jets. Southwest tabled the document to its issues committee for one week (more meetings?).

Eric Nitzsche (an administrator in midst of Rads) offered to give up his seat on the negotiations team. While appreciated, it was not the same. The residential forces wanted the respect of an equal partner; not kindness of a sympathetic friend. The Rads finally capitulated. Mike Bean, Southwest co-president, was nominated to be on the negotiations team.

A constitution by Easter? Likely. But, what will the Rads do next? Equal status for residents had to be rammed down their throat. If it takes this much trouble to get a little respect, what if the on-campus population has serious concerns. Instead, slate representation, housing-meal plan exemptions, or simply party regulations. There is a residential agenda.

For too long the Rads have pointed to the imperfections of the world. Now they are blind to see their abuses. We can improve this campus. After UMass is perfect we can change the world, if we want. Most have four years of this place. That fact should define our priorities.

Barbadian student sues Sears

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts graduate student from Barbados is seeking more than $225,000 in damages from Sears, Roebuck and Co. of Holyoke in a lawsuit charging racial descrimination and civil rights violations.

The complaint, filed in U.S. District Court in Springfield by UMass Legal Services Office attorneys Charles DiMare and Michele Leaf, requests a jury trial for plaintiff Elsworth Young against two security guards and one manager in connection with a search inside that store in 1982. The case will not come to trial for at least three years, as the court now has 800 pending cases, according to the Springfield clerk of courts.

The suit charges that Young, who at the time had been in Amherst for about a month and a half to begin a master's degree program on a fellowship awarded in part by the United Nations, had been shopping in the store on Oct. 23, 1983 and was "intentionally, unreasonably and unlawfully searched" by the defendants when he tried to leave the store. All actions taken against Young were "taken because Plaintiff Young is black," according to the complaint.

Young was approached by two security guards when leaving the store, who told him that searching customers was "store policy" and that they had a legal right to conduct such a search, the complaint states. While Young resisted the guards at first, cautioning them "against prejudging people on the basis of their racial heritage," he eventually relented to the search after the store manager informed him that "searching persons suspected of shoplifting was store policy" and called the police, according to the complaint.

Finding nothing "out of place or stolen," the store manager apologized to Young, as did one of the security guards at Young's request, and Young, "feeling degraded and humiliated, gathered up his belongings and left the store," according to the complaint.

The document also states that Young was "intentionally and unlawfully arrested and confined without his consent and without probable cause," which resulted in the plaintiff being "deprived of his freedom, damaged in his reputation, embarrassed, prevented from engaging in his usual activities and caused to endure pain, suffering, and mental anguish."

Holder shares his bag of goodies

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Correspondent

Geoffrey Holder, "the Renaissance Man" of our time held a full house in laughter Wednesday night at Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts with dance, lecture and audience participation.

Holder, a native of Trinidad, is an actor, dancer choreographer, writer, composer, director, designer, and a gourmet cook.

Holder's performance included a variety of topics from the lack of individual communication to a recipe on how to prepare red salmon.

"I am a very fortunate man," he said. "I am fortunate to have been born when I was born and where I was born."

He asked the audience to raise their right hand and to clutch their chest with their left as they repeated after him: "I believe in the father, the son, and the holy ghost. I believe in Moses and myself. I am lovely. I am lovely. I am very lovely. The whole world stinks, but I am lovely." Now kiss yourself," Holder ordered with a smile.

"In Trinidad," he said, "no black man is black. We are all integrated. My mother adored black men and my father, he adored light-skinned women. So I," he said with a grin, "came out honey brown."

Acting and directing is all make believe he said. "You can be whatever you want to be."

He demonstrated this by transforming himself into a bird, a little six year old girl, a taxi driver on a Saturday night, and finally a female prostitute at 11 p.m. on a Sunday night—"and she is broke!" he said.

Holder said he has great respect for young people. He said he thinks they are "fabulous." "the only thing is," he said, "you just don't know how to communicate."

"There is now no form of communication because everyone is into their own thing," he said. "You know," he said, "not all black people have rhythm. Just those who dance with their parents."

Shari Switko, a junior business major, assisted Holder in demonstrating how one's parents could teach their child to dance.

"The first drum you hear," he said, "is your mother's heartbeat."

Holder is a very active man but "I hate jogging," he said, "jogging is for fools."

"Girls," he said, "you are gorgeous, fluff up. Comb your hair like mine, be feminine, be gorgeous."

"And fellows," he said, "be cool. Take off those stinky tennis shoes. Wash your feet. Wear a clean shirt—white. Give them a little cleavage, be cool." On the weekends, he said you should "let it all hang out." You will find it a lot easier to study he said.

Holder said he loves to sing and dance. "It cleanses me," he said.

The house light dims as the audience watches with interest to Holder's interpretation of God.

"Music," said Holder, "takes me out of the kitchen and puts me on another plain. Music is supposed to do that, put you on another plain."

He urged student not to smoke "grass" or to take any other drugs. "You are young," he said, "you don't need it."

Malcom X Center rededicated

By MARILYN G. BOU
Collegian Correspondent

The Malcolm X Center located in the Southwest residential area at the University of Massachusetts, celebrated its thirteenth rededication on Sunday with speakers, a movie about the struggles of Malcolm and his movement, and a fashion show. The day on which the rededication takes place yearly is not on Malcolm's birthday but on the day of his assassination.

Professor Willian Strickland and John Bracey, both of the Afro-Am. Deptartment, Mitchell Smith, Director of the ABC House in Amherst and Sherwood Thompson, Director of the Office of Third World Affairs were the main speakers.

"We must look into the present and ask what the definition of freedom is now for us in 1984 and what we would like it to be in the future," Strickland said.

Strickland, who spoke of Black Politics of the 80s, compared Jesse Jackson to Malcolm X. He said during Malcolm's time there were individuals who feared his influence on white people and there are people today who fear Jackson's influence on the white people's way of thinking.

Malcolm said in the movie, "An educated woman can improve the status of a country."

The movie revealed Malcolm was a person who believed one could never have enough knowledge. People were often surprised when Malcolm would speak on topics such as art, music and history.

He also felt that words were the key to all knowledge, the movie showed. He so strongly believed this that he carried a dictionary in his right pocket at all times, Bracey said. In his learnings he came to the conclusion that one must seek the connections between all things, Bracey said.

Smith spoke on the Students in the 80s. He said, "when the students realize their potential they can go forward, but not until then." He added "America is notorious for teaching hate. She taught us to hate our hair and our skin color but today we can be just who we are. We have an excellent opportunity to be what our ancestors weren't: united."

"We have an enormous responsibility, for we will determine if this planet will cease to exist with our generation. We have to forget our difference and work together. Our skin color is not going to stop the nuclear war," Smith said.

Malcolm said he did not stand for violence but on the same token believed one can obtain his freedom by letting his enemy know he'll do anything to get it: BY ANY MEANS NECESSARY.

Month's significance questioned

By NIKOI KOLE-NIKOI
Special to Black Affairs

Before the broader significance of Black History Month slips to the backs of our memories at the end of February to be resuscitated a year hence I would like to take the opportunity to bring to the attention of the community at large, and the Black community in particular, certain issues that should be of great concern to all citizens.

It is, at the very least, encouraging, that this nation should see fit to set a month in the year aside for the recognition of the achievements of its citizens of African ancestry.

Not only does Black History Month affirm the recognition of these citizens as a people with a history as significant as anybody else's, it also highlights their many positive contributions--voluntarily made or otherwise exacted--to the current and past well-being of the United States of America.

It is particularly telling, however--and distressingly so--that even in this month when celebrating blackness is officially chic, very few real linkages are made between the plight and circumstance of African-Americans in this country and those of Africans on the African continent.

The omission is more glaring in light of the fact that there has appeared in the last decade or so a propensity among African-Americans, individually and collectively, to show a declining interest in the problems of Africa and Africans.

Even more telling (or perhaps as a result of this conspicuous absence of interest), is the fact that the African-policies of recent American administrations have tended to be, particularly hostile and chauvinistic, at best, and openly cavalier in this hostility.

Official policy toward Africa ostensibly no longer feels a responsibility to a Black America that appears unconcerned with what its motives are, what methods of implementation it adopts, and what its impacts on Africans are.

American policy on the continent has thus run wild, with seemingly no checks or limits to what it does and what it cannot do. The 'African lobby' of the 1960s which was unofficially mounted by African-Americans has become functionally extinct in the 1980s.

American policy in Africa is not even considered an issue in the unfolding presidential campaign. Presumably the United States, in 1984, has a three-pronged foreign policy agenda that extends only as far as Moscow, Central America and Lebanon.

The strength of the nascent African 'nation' on which African-Americans drew for their struggles in the 1950s and '60s is being sapped by natural and man-made forces, and nobody appears to recognize that for what it is, or for what its import for the African-American cause is.

But when that strength is gone what is Black America going to draw on? Towards what source will the Duboises and the Malcolm X's and Kwame Toures of the 1980s and '90s turn for inspiration and, quite likely, 'self-imposed' exile? What is the meaning of Black History Month for African-Americans in the '80s?

For the past decade there has been a devasting drought hanging like an unsung requiem over the majority of African nations. Thousands have died from hunger as the earth gets continually patched, crops fail, vegetation withers, soil-erosion spreads, and the deserts expand in all directions.

What should Black History Month mean to all of us in this human community, and especially for those of us barely going thorugh the annual celebration of our blackness for the consumption of the national media?

Are we going to delcare the next eleven months "Black Complacency Period," or do we affirm our blackness in constructive deeds for those who need it most?

FOCUS ON YOUR FUTURE

Electromagnetics Research at Northeastern

Probing the Outer Limits of the Universe
Satellites are exploring the far reaches of the solar system - photographing the moons of Jupiter, measuring the rings of Saturn, and searching for traces of extraterrestrial life.
Scientists in electromagnetics research not only interpret these discoveries but also assist in developing the instrumentation that makes these discoveries possible.
Outer space is only one of the areas in which electromagnetic effects play an important role. Other examples include: oil exploration, underwater and optical communication, and integrated circuit fabrication.

Electromagnetics Research—the Career of the Twenty-first Century
Today there is a shortage of electromagnetics engineers—a trend that will continue until the end of the century.
If you are an undergraduate electrical engineering, mechanical engineering, physics, or mathematics major, you have a chance to be ahead of your time. A career in electromagnetics will put you in a position to be on the leading edge of the profession.

Center for Electromagnetics Research at Northeastern University
Northeastern University plans to open a Center for Electromagnetics Research in September - the first of its kind at a university. Students may enroll in advanced degree programs in the electrical or mechanical engineering departments. Fellowship funding is available to qualified applicants.

Advantages of University—Industry Collaboration
The Center represents a collaboration between the University and industry on research areas of common interest. As a graduate student in the program, you will participate in the basic research projects of the Center. You may also receive hands-on, industry relevant, paid work experience in the labs of affiliated firms. The program provides opportunity for a career either in teaching and research, or to move right into an entry or advanced level position in industry.

THE MAJOR RESEARCH OF THE CENTER IS IN THE FOLLOWING FOUR GENERAL AREAS:
Radio Frequency Phenomena and Systems
Electro optics
Electrical Discharge Phenomena
Computational Analysis for E-M Applications

COURSES IN SUPPORT OF THESE AREAS INCLUDE:
Plasma Theory and Engineering
Lasers
Acoustics
Solid-state Devices
Radar and Communications Systems
Microwave Engineering
Remote Sensing
Antenna Theory and Design
Optical Properties of Matter
Electro-optics Theory and Devices

Let me tell you about Geoffrey Holder: he's phenomenal. What's that you say? Who is Geoffrey Holder?

He's a dancer. He's a correographer. He's the 7-Up spokesman. He's the one who makes your mouth water with his descriptions of Stop & Shop's vast array of tropical fruits. He's the unkillable voodoo death-god in Live and Let Die. He's the Tony award-winning director of The Wiz. He's the one who designed some of the most stunning costumes ever to adorn the dancers of the fabulous Dance Theater of Harlem. He's an award winning painter. And just to keep himself from getting bored, he's a fantastic gourmet cook. With two published cookbooks, no less.

Sufficient answer? If you had to ask in the first place, you couldn't have been at his DVP/Afrik-Am sponsored performance in Bowker Monday night. If you weren't, you'd probably like to know just what he did. Well...

He sang. He danced. He strutted around the stage in a slinky, red evening gown. He talked about his family. He talked about his childhood. He talked about his native Trinidad. He danced. He canted Voodoo hymns. He related little-known sections of the Bible. He danced. He made everyone else dance. And hold hands. And convince themselves that they were "lovely."

He implored the audience to learn to communicate. He danced. He talked about friendships. He talked about zoot suits. He talked about Michael Jackson. He shared his favorite recipe for poached red snapper. Oh yeah. I almost forgot—he danced, too.

I suppose my roommate put it best when she said, "What Geoffrey Holder basically did was give us his philosophy on life for two hours. Now, if you can get people to listen to your philosophy for that long, you've got a lot of talent."

Or a great philosophy. Or both.
I don't suppose I have to tell you that Geoffrey Holder's got both. Not to mention unbelievable drive, unbridled enthusiasm, and an obvious love of life.
And a great recipe for red snapper.

Everybody's a comedian

Eddie Murphy offers a mixed bag

EDDIE MURPHY: COMEDIAN
Eddie Murphy
(Columbia Records)
By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

He was hilarious in Trading Places and he's a scream on Saturday Night Live, so Eddie Murphy's second album should be outrageously funny, right? Well, yes and no. Eddie Murphy: Comedian is an uneven record of live performances taken from last summer's shows at Constitution Hall in Washington D.C., that ranges from being very funny to flat and drawn out.

At his best, Murphy does perfect impressions of Michael Jackson, "who ain't the most masculine fellow," James Brown, and Stevie Wonder. In "Faggots Revisited," Murphy complains of having a nightmare where he goes to Hollywood and discovers Mr. T is gay. Mr. T says to him, "Hey Boy, you look pretty good in them jeans."

In a cut titled simply "T.V.", Murphy says that he has been watching a lot of horror movies on cable television, and asks "Why don't white people leave the house when there's a ghost in it?" In "Politics/Racism," Murphy takes a poke at Jesse Jackson, who, led on by his supporters, is convinced that since he is bigger than Chicago mayor Harold Washington he should run for president.

In the same cut, Murphy points out that today's black man is certain that if he had lived 200 years ago he could have never been a slave. "I would've told that massa to kiss my ass, and then I would've got in my Lincoln and drove off."

One major drawback to Murphy's act however, is his frequent use of visual humor. If you have seen his HBO special Delirious, then you can visualize what he is doing, but if not, you are lost. Another negative note is his constant use of profanity. Much of Murphy's material would be even funnier without the continual onslaught of four letter words.

Murphy's best bits are the two to three minute segments in which his focus is clear, and the comedy sharp. In "The Barbecue," which lasts for over 12 minutes, Murphy seems to be rambling, and it starts to get tedious.

But to his credit, Murphy, just 22, has a long career before him, having just signed a five-movie $15 million contract with Paramount Pictures. And while one may refute the press release line that Eddie Murphy is "the funniest man around today," his talent is obvious. What this record shows is Murphy's need to channel and tighten up his gift for making us laugh.

Blues across the oceans

Albert Collins wows 'em in Tokyo

LIVE IN JAPAN
Albert Collins and the Icebreakers
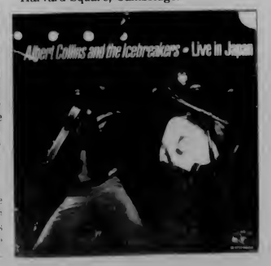
(Alligator Record)
By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Correspondant

Albert Collins and the Icebreakers, Live in Japan. Make no mistake, they don't live there nor are they suggesting that you do. Nope, this is a live album recorded in Tokyo during their 1982-83 international tour. And make no mistake, this band resides in Chicago, where they've been entertaining with their unique brand of blues for many years.



Albert Collins has a distinct and easily recognizable guitar sound. It has been referred to as a "cold" sound that sends chills up and down your back, a sound that could put icicles on your earlobes. He has been playing for over thirty years, yet is somewhat caught between the dying breed of Southern bluesmen and the contemporary rock oriented blues bands of today. However, he successfully melds the two by singing heart wrenching blues songs and playing a supercharged guitar. He has blues roots in the past, having grown up in Houston, Texas, and is a cousin of Sam "Lightening" Hopkins, who influenced his guitar style. T-Bone Walker was also a major influence along with Lois Jordan and B.B. King. Albert later came to influence others after years of success in nightclubs with a refined and independent sound. He was a favorite of Jimi Hendrix back when, and has influenced such rock notables as Johnny Winter, J. Geils Band and ZZ TOP, to name just a few.

Considering Albert's first hit, "The Freeze," came in 1958, it seems that this album shows that after 25 years Albert is in his prime. Furthermore, he's due to be in the back-up band on ZZ TOP's next tour.

So it looks as though he is finally getting the payoff for his dues. After hearing this album it is easy to see why Albert is travelling across the globe every year and becoming realized as a phenomenon. He does a tremendous skat with matching guitar on "Listen Here." He also does T-Bone's "Stormy Monday," which was quickly recognized at its start, even in Japan. In "If Trouble Was Money" he sings, "If trouble was money, I'd be a millionaire/ If worries were dollar bills, I'd buy the whole world and have money to spare." People all over the world have felt like that at times—the blues is not endemic soley to the United States.

But this music is too energized to give you the blues. It is thoroughly enjoyable and by the last song,, "All About My Girl," he gets the crowd whipped up into a frenzy.

Albert Collins has got an impressive band and is a great ambassador for America's musical contribution, the blues. Collins crosses cultures and generations, and gives us this fine recording. He can also be enjoyed this Wednesday, Feb. 29th, along with Koko Taylor, at Jonathan Swift's, Harvard Square, Cambridge.

The premium taste has arrived.

so nervous. In gymnastics, you've done your routine so many times that your body will just do it if you let it."

In May, Mathieson expects less of a problem and is looking forward to putting out the best performance he can. Knowing who the competition is and what he has to work on has made him more relaxed.

"I think I can go up to Ontario in May and smoke," he said. "It won't be such a foreign experience."

Mathieson was discovered in seventh grade when a junior high school gymnastics coach in New Hampshire observed him doing tricks on a jungle gym. The coach advised him to try gymnastics and he tried it once and "ever since then, I've been hooked on it."

In high school, Mathieson did not have any teams, any coach or any equipment. Some kids would have given up. Others might have stuck with it for a little while. Mathieson never gave up. He traveled to Massachusetts to attend clinics and worked out on his own. By the time college rolled around he was "hungry to get into gymnastics" and UMass gymnastics Roy Johnson was there to teach "me just about everything I know."

"I often thought of quitting in high school," Mathieson admitted, "but what kept me going was that I had a lot of success in junior high school. That and just watching those people on television and hoping that someday I'd be able to be like that. It just kept me going."

For Mathieson, who is taking five years to graduate due to the amount of time he has spent on gymnastics, the sport has treated him well. He says with a confident and relaxed look on his face, "If I don't make it (Canadian team) this year, I'll go for it next year and I'm sure I'll have a better chance then. And I'll only be 25 in '88..." his voice trails off.

"This has been a life long goal to compete internationally and make an Olympic team some day and I feel like I got one step closer in Saskatchewan."

"You can only do it once in gymnastics. I figure I have another four good years in me in gymnastics. If I don't try, I'll be 60 years old and say 'Well, you could have done it then, and you can't do it now.' And I can get on with whatever career I choose after gymnastics. There's plenty of time to work."

For Mathieson, most of his life he has been working - toward a goal. And whether or not it is reached, at least he can say he gave it his best shot.

★ Amherst Hockey

last 27 games he has played for Amherst. He has 15 goals and 17 assists this season for a total of 32 points. He as 98 career points.

"This is an amazing record," Arena said. "He's on a pace where he'll be very close to the all time scoring record for Amherst." The record in 146 points.

Goalie Myles Keroack is a big part of the team's success. With a save percentage of 92 percent and a goals against average of 2.6, he is the best goalie in Division III right now.

So far the injuries the team has suffered have not been detrimental.

"Somebody's filled in and always done a super job," said Arena.

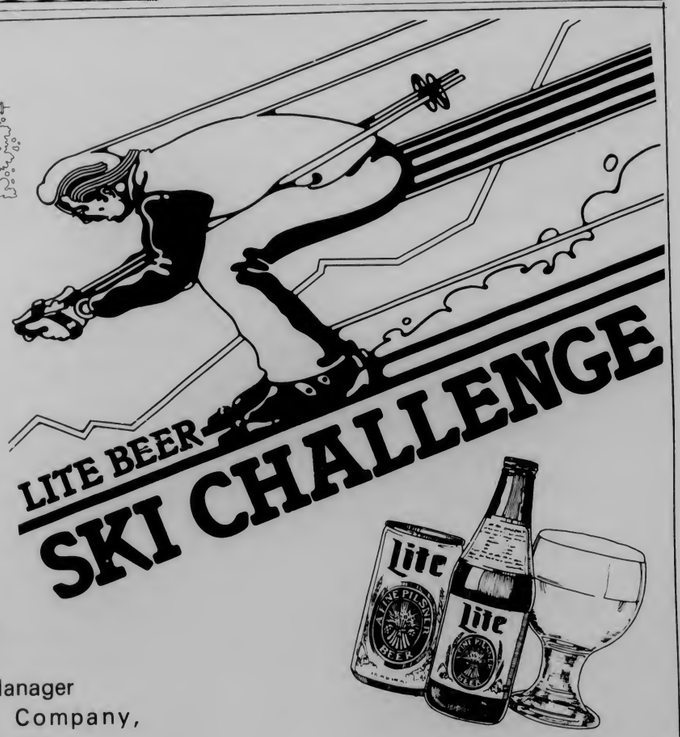
On February 9, in a 12-0 whitewashing of Plymouth State, that is just what happened. Myles Keroack did not play due to an eye injury. Rob Dauch tended goal and shutout Plymouth.

Arena says the strongest characteristic of his team is speed.

"We can pretty much skate with anybody we play," he said. "With that and getting good goal tending, we can compete with anybody."

Amherst outshot Plymouth 52 - 29. The scoring started at 7:36 of the first period, and after eleven goals, it was routine.

With three minutes left to play, Senior Rich Devin scored his first goal in three years. His teammates huddled around him, in congratulations.



Arena expects his team to qualify for the ECAC Division III tourney.

UMass senior Bert Mathieson, who didn't compete in high school, has a shot at making the Canadian National team this May.

UMass gymnast works to make Canadian team

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts gymnast Bert Mathieson can only be an example of what can happen when dedication and persistence pays off. As top all around for the UMass men's gymnastics team, the Canadian-born Mathieson is competing for a spot on the 1984 Canadian National Team. And to think it all began on the jungle gym in seventh grade.

For the second consecutive year the British Columbia native was invited to the Canadian Olympic and National Teams Selection Meet. However in 1983, he could not muster up enough money to go. Although disappointed, Mathieson, who now lives in Durham, N.H., was somewhat relieved because "It gave me more time to train and get psyched for it."

On February 9th, Mathieson set out for Saskatchewan all trained and psyched. Although exceedingly nervous, Mathieson finished 14th out of 32 gymnasts competing for the top ten spots. His best score was in the parallel bars event, 8.85, as he went on to post a 51.55 all around score. There was less than a half a point separating Mathieson from the tenth, and final, qualifying spot.

"As i was warming up I realized this was the biggest meet I have ever been in and I looked around at the competition and saw it was really fierce," Mathieson recalled. "I was pretty nervous and working pretty hard to calm myself down. I'd talk to myself and mentally go through my routines and visualize myself doing them perfect."

His all around total in the meet was not one of his best scores. His high total this season is 53.8 points. However, this score was only worth 30 percent and Mathieson will travel to Ontario in May for the second qualifying meet, worth 70 percent, in which he will try to move up from 14th to 10th place for a place on the National Team.

The only problem that could stand in Mathieson's way is being nervous, which he expects to be less of come May.

"When I get nervous I tend to get sloppy in my routine because it switches the focus of concentration from doing your routines really well to simply getting through your routines without falling off because you're

Women victorious twice

By SUE LEVY

WATERVILLE VALLEY, N.H. — The University of Massachusetts women's ski team raced to victories in both the slalom and giant slalom races at the Eastern Intercollegiate Ski Championships (EISC) this past weekend at Waterville Valley.

In Saturday's slalom, despite two of their top five racers falling, UMass proved superior to all of the other teams. Finishing first for UMass and first overall was team captain Sue White. Her time of 118.51 just edged out Stephanie Shumway (118.65) of Brown University.

Following next for UMass was Lisa Luczkow who came off the hill in 6th place. The third necessary team time came from Sue Levy (8th). Also skiing well was Diana Swain (10th).

The total team time for UMass was 375.62. It was 10.09 seconds ahead of second place Boston College. Following BC was Brown, Plymouth State College, and North Adams.

Due to 70 mph winds on Sunday, the racers skied a shorter giant slalom race. This did not hamper UMass, for they still captured a victory. All five of the women finished this race with outstanding performances.

Winning the race by more than a second was UM's Alice Gigliotti (92.75). Close behind in second place was teammate White (03.79). Senior Bobbi Voll ended her college racing career with a fine 6th place finish. Also skiing steady through the gates were Luczkow (8th) and Levy (10th).

Alice Gighiotti won the giant Slalom this weekend for UMass.

In the individual overall standings for the weekend, again all five UMass racers placed in the top ten. First place went to White for the third year in a row. Gigliotti, Luczkow, Voll, and Levy finished 5th, 6th, 9th, and 10th place respectively.

The 1984 season saw one of the best women's ski teams UMass has ever had. UMass took first place in 11 out of 12 league races.

"These women were awesome," UMass coach Bill MacConnell said.

Minutemen disappointed

WATERVILLE VALLEY, NH — University of Massachusetts ski team standout Jon Segal took home the men's combined title at the Eastern Intercollegiate Ski Conference (EISC) Championships this past weekend at Waterville Valley.

Segal won Saturday's slalom race with the two-run total of 109.12 seconds. Plymouth State College's Pat MacNamara finished 2nd at 111.01 (almost a full two seconds behind Segal's time), and Bear Hovey from UConn was third with a time of 111.49. Kris Vanderzee (14th) was the only other UMass racer to do well in the 60-gate slalom.

With three of their six racers falling, UMass' chances for a victory in the slalom were almost zero. Despite the spills, the Minutemen managed to pull out a 4th place finish. Plymouth State was 1st, Boston College was 2nd and Brown University 3rd.

Sunday, UMass skied more consistently, finishing 5 of 6 racers through the giant-slalom course. Segal took 2nd place in this race, only half a second slower than Doug Karwoski's (PSC) winning time of 86.51 seconds. Andy Clarke (14th) and Vanderzee (16th) also did well for UMass in the 80-man field.

Plymouth State finished first in the two day competition, Boston College was 2nd and UMass took third. There were nine other teams at the tournament from three EISC divisions. In order of finish they were: Brown University (4th), Babson (5th), Central Connecticut (6th), Amherst (7th), North Adams (8th), Worcester Polytechnical Institute (9th), Skidmore (9th), Lowell University (11th), and Boston University (12th).

Former player leads Jeffs hockey to the top of ECAC

By MICHELE DOLAN
Collegian Staff

Last year as captain of the Amherst College hockey team, Jack Arena probably never thought that he would be the head coach the following year and coaching the team to one of the school's best hockey seasons ever.

"The athletic director asked me if I thought I could do it (the job). I said sure," Arena said. "The old coach had left. It could have been a diaster. The guys on the team have been great."

In his rookie year, the 23-year-old Arena has led the Lord Jeffs to a 13-5 record, 12-1 in ECAC Division III, which is tops in the league. And now Amherst needs one more win to break the school record of 13 wins in a single season.

Arena graduated from Amherst last year with a degree in Economics and at the end of the year, he was awarded the Hitchcock Fellowship which gave him the chance to be an assistant coach in three sports for this year.

The Randolph, Mass. native coached football in the fall and will coach baseball in the spring. The job as hockey Head Coach came as a surprise.

Arena's two assistant coaches, Jim Weller and Guy Kidd are both UMass alumni. Weller played lacrosse for UMass, and Kidd played hockey as a freshman, when UMass still had its program.

Arena is pleased with the leadership his captains, seniors Rich Devin and Steve Garrow, have provided.

"They've really been great this year. It hasn't been tough, but it's different," said Arena.

It is different because an old teammate is now the coach.

Junior center Steve Falcone, the team's leading scorer, has had to make the adjustment.

"I respected him last year as a player and a leader. Now I respect him as the coach. He keeps distant. He's taken on more of a leadership role. He's doing a good job," Falcone said.

UMass fencers look sharp, take third spot in New England

By JOE PETRIN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts fencing club finished a very respectable third out of thirteen teams in the New England Intercollegiate Fencing Championships, Saturday at Hampshire College. The six man squad scored a total of 46 points, which was one shy of second place Brown. MIT won the team title with 53 pts.

Frior to the meet, club supervisor Greg Frick talked positively about his club's chances.

"We're a very young team and we're fencing very well right now. We do have the best fencer here in our number one Sabre fencer Andrew Prochniak. We're not the best team here but we'll do pretty well," said Frick.

UMass beat Brandeis, Trinity and Fairfield all by the score of 5-1. The Minutemen also shut out UConn and Maine 6-0, enroute to their third place finish.

It was evident that Andy Prochniak was the best fencer on any strip as he was undefeated (10-0) in the team competition. Prochniak did not take home the first place Sabre Cup, however, because of a knee injury that he suffered in the finals against MIT.

"It was a nice competition today, but then I hurt my knee. I shouldn't have lost to him (MIT opponent) because I beat him earlier 5-3", a dejected Prochniak said. The UMass club is getting better, he added.

"Last year we were fifth and we have made big progress since then. A lot more people are getting interested in fencing now," said Prochniak.

Prochniak was not the only star Saturday as three other UMass fencers also advanced to the individual finals. Both epee (weapon) fencers, Peter Skillman and John Cogan qualified, as did Greg Dunnan, UMass' number two foil fencer. Skillman finished second in epee as he lost to Alan Williams of MIT in a great bout.

"That last bout was terrific. It got to the beautiful moment of "Labelle" (score tied 4-4). I ended up second but it was great.

The reason why I did well was because I used the fleche (a full attack). It's dangerous," said Skillman.

Both Dunnan (foil) and Cogan (epee) finished sixth in New England in their respective weapons.

Other standout performances for UMass were by Carl Rosco with his sabre (4 wins), and Durant Scholz in foil (8 wins).

At the end of the day, club advisor Paul Berube was very happy with the championships and his club. "The operation went very smoothly, organization was really good and there were a lot of quality fencers. I'm especially pleased that UMass finished third," said Berube.

Plant to use detergent on coal pile

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will be allowed to treat its coal storage pile at Tillson Farm with an experimental detergent as part of an interim solution approved last night by the Amherst Conservation Commission.

The commission unanimously approved a draft of a memo of understanding with the University which will allow the Physical Plant to treat the 55,000 ton coal pile with an experimental detergent, sodium lauryl sulfate (SLS), which is used in shampoo and toothpaste.

The memo calls for several measures to be undertaken prior to the treatment in an effort to reduce the pollution of Taylor Brook, a North Amherst stream located about a half mile from the coal pile.

According to the draft, test samples will be taken of Taylor Brook on a daily basis beginning today. Other measures include: general "housekeeping" steps, the construction of a sedimentation system and a pond to catch rain water runoff to neutralize the SLS treatment and regular monitoring of water runoff from the pile following rain storms.

The effluent, or runoff collected in the pond will be pumped into the sewage main at the Tillson Farm Heating Plant, which will return it to the Amherst Waste Treatment Plant. In a memo to the commission, John L. DeNyse, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, states that talks are currently being conducted with the Amherst Public Works Department and the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering on the system.

The system is to be completed by May 15. During that time, the University will take bids from trucking firms to deliver coal from an alternative coal storage site off-campus, with bidders being required to make the site operational by Nov. 1.

The memo specifies that the off-campus site contain a minimum of 6,000 tons of coal to protect UMass in the event of a coal miners or transportation strike.

Commission member Peter Westover said students at UMass will conduct the sampling of the brook under the supervision of Professor Oliver T. Zajicek of the chemistry department and Professor Robert Coler of the environmental science department. The project will cost from $200-$300 and will be funded by the Physical Plant, Westover said.

"Instead of hiring a consulting firm to do it for $20,000, the professors and their students are going to do it," he said.

The equipment for doing the samples will be provided by the U.S. Bureau of Mines, Westover said. The bureau will also help analyze results from the SLS treatment, which has only been used on coal refuse piles and not on an "active" pile like the one at Tillson Farm.

"The Bureau of Mines is treating this as a research project and will distribute the data nationally," Westover said.

When UMass officials, accompanied by a chemist with the Bureau of Mines proposed the plan two months ago, some commission members reacted skeptically to the plan. The pile has been an on-going dispute with the town and the University for several years. The pile has been identified as the major source of pollution to Taylor Brook. Coal from the pile is used to fuel the Physical Plant that supplies heat and some of the power to the University.

Frances Crowe urges disobedience

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

In a lecture following the movie Nuclear Nightmare last night at the University of Massachusetts 64-year-old peace activist Frances Crowe described her recent prison experience and the "divine obedience" that led to her arrest.

"I was in prison for 30 days, long enough. One can learn a lot about a state by going to their prisons. Rhode Island is an oppressive state," she said.

Crowe described the civil disobedience of the "Women of Faith," a group of eight women who were arrested last October. "We cut the chain on the gate and sprayed 'thou shalt not kill' on the missile tubes. Then we attempted to give the officials an indictment of genocide and for violating the Nuremberg agreement. We put yarn around the missile tubes as women weaving the web of life," she said.

Crowe explained that the "Women of Faith" were willing to be arrested and go to jail in order to inform people that they could engage in civil disobedience and survive.

"We felt that we (the public) had to witness our action. We want people to know that they can do this," she said.

Crowe suggested that civil disobedience is an ideal activity for people in the twilight of their lives.

"Instead of worrying about retirement homes, put your body where it really counts and then you will be arrested and put in jail and given three meals a day and a warm place to sleep," she said.

Crowe illustrated the importance of a nuclear freeze by explaining that every two and a half minutes a child dies of malnutrition.

"Every single person in the world could be fed and clothed and educated and have access to all the clean water they need if we shut down the weapons systems for two weeks. If they would just shut it down for two weeks we could all live for a year and figure out how to live together in peace, instead of spending all that money on studying how to die together," she said.

The "Women of Faith" were protesting the Trident submarines, Crowe said, because they violate all three stipulations of the Nuremberg Agreement.

The Nuremberg agreement states that "you will not target civilian populations, you will not do irretrievable damage to the environment, and that missiles will not be launched unless there is a provoked attack," she said.

SGA refuses to reprimand Collins

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Student Government Association (SGA) Senator Bill Collins escaped formal reprimand last night when the Senate defeated two separate motions concerning his conduct.

The Senate voted down a motion to amend the minutes of its Feb. 22 meeting to include an expulsion of Collins for disorderly conduct. The Collegian reported last Friday that he had been expelled.

A motion to expel Collins had been introduced at the previous meeting by Third World Caucus Senator Eugene Bull. This motion was passed, but only after it had been amended to apply to "people who cannot conduct themselves in an orderly manner," rather than specifically to Collins.

Bull said last night that he, and apparently other senators as well, misunderstood the amendment, thinking it was intended as an addition to, rather than a substitution for, the move to expel Collins. Collins had been involved in a shouting match with other senators and, by some senators' accounts, shoved Third World Caucus member Robert Teixiera.

"The purpose of the original motion was to reprimand Collins," Bull said. "Everyone thought the amendment was an addition."

Jay Flynn, who proposed the amendment, disagreed it was clearly a substition. "I had no great love of anyone's actions that night," he said. "Bill was probably the most wrong, but I think everybody involved was wrong. The fact that Eugene misunderstood was, quite frankly, his fault."

Bull said he was worried that Collins would try to use this apparent vindication to attack Collegian staff member Lisa Marie Cantwell, who reported that Collins had shoved Teixiera and had been expelled from the Senate.

Bull said he wanted the account of the motion to make specific reference to Collins because, "I thought Bill wanted to use the minutes as ammunition against Lisa."

Following the minutes debate, the Senate voted not to consider a motion censuring Collins for his alleged harassment of Cantwell. Several sources said Collins had chased the reporter down a hallway screaming at her. Cantwell charged that he had also told "blatant lies about me" outside the Senate, such as that she was expelled from the Collegian staff.

The decision not to consider the censure because it was not on the agenda disturbed

After 15 years, Trudeau is stepping down

MONTREAL (AP) - Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, whose rakish style and intimidating intellect gave Canada a prominent role on the world stage, announced yesterday that he is stepping down after more than 15 years in power.

He said it is "time for someone else to assume this challenge," but he would stay on as prime minister until his Liberal Party can hold a convention and choose a new leader, probably in May or June.

His intentions were disclosed in a letter hand-delivered in Ottawa to Iona Campagnolo, the party president.

Trudeau, 64, vaulted from obscurity to power on a wave of what was called "Trudeau-mania" in April 1968, tossing off witty remarks and kissing dozens of women at every campaign stop.

He has been in office since then except for the short tenure of Progressive Conservative Joe Clark, who defeated Trudeau in May 1979 but fell from power nine months later.

With Trudeau's rating in recent public opinion polls scraping the bottom and his fourth term in office drawing to a close, speculation about when he would resign had become almost feverish.

Just last week, Trudeau told about 50 reporters crowded around him that they had the right month for a resignation, but the wrong year.

The prime minister, beaming and apparently happy that the uncertainty was over, told reporters outside his Parliament Hill office yesterday in Ottawa that he reached the decision during "a great walk in the snow" lasting several hours Tuesday night.

"I listened to my heart and saw if there were any signs in my destiny in the sky and there were none, there were just snowflakes," he added later as he left the Hill for the day.

Immediately after the news of Trudeau's decision reached the floor of the Toronto Stock Exchange on Wednesday, the exchange index jumped more than 10 points to 2,412.82.

Hart and Mondale say it's a fight

(AP) — Walter Mondale may have tripped on "Heartbreak Hill" in New Hampshire but was running hard again yesterday challenging Sen. Gary Hart to a "head-to-head" race in the upcoming southern primaries.

In Atlanta, Mondale noted more than 60 percent of all southern delegates to the convention will be chosen in the next three weeks.

"In my opinion, a potential nominee of the Democratic party cannot write off a major section of the country," he said. "I challenge Mr. Hart to bring his campaign to the whole South. I challenge him to compete with me here head-to-head."

Hart, surprise winner in Tuesday's primary, thanked a group of New Hampshire voters before leaving the state that launched him on what he insists will be a two-man battle with Mondale for the nomination.

In Mississippi, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said his No. 4 finish there was a "high moment" because he won that "in a predominantly white state, over a former governor and three senators. That shows progress of race relations and there is growth taking place."

No. 3, Sen. John Glenn, spent yesterday regrouping in Washington before heading on a southern swing of his own.

Meanwhile, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., closed his campaign.

"I know the difference between reality and dreams," the 69-year-old senator said after finishing No. 7 in New Hampshire.

Cranston became the first casualty of an eight-way race that Glenn insists is now open to all remaining contenders. But Hart and Mondale's managers say it is a two-way fight.

"We will win others in the South, in the West and elsewhere," Hart said as he greeted workers outside a factory early Tuesday.

N.H. upset boosts interest in Mass

BOSTON (AP) - Worries of a "ho-hum" Democratic presidential primary in Massachusetts have vanished due to Sen. Gary Hart's surprise victory in the New Hampshire presidential primary.

State party officials said yesterday they were convinced Massachusetts would get most of the national attention on March 13, the so-called "super Tuesday" of the political season, when nine states hold primaries or Democratic caucuses.

"Massachusetts has become the real testing ground on Super Tuesday," said Linda Hartke, executive director of the Democratic State Committee, who spent the day fielding telephone calls from reporters, campaign aides and others who were suddenly interested in the Bay State primary.

"It's the only major industrial state. It's the largest state without a favorite son candidate. And it's the only state where all candidates have viable and active organizations working on their behalf for months," she said.

State officials said they feared that the nomination process would be virtually over if former Vice President Walter Mondale won an easy victory in Tuesday's New Hampshire primary to complement his good showing in the Iowa caucuses.

But Hart's stunning upset victory has opened up the field and increased interest in the next round of party contests.

"It means that the Massachusetts primary is turned from a ho-hum election into a high stakes election," state party chairman Chester Atkins said.

"It's the only place where Hart has an organization and can make a strong hit against Mondale."

Mondale, Hart, George McGovern and Jesse Jackson all have confirmed they will attend a Democratic State Dinner on Sundy in Boston, party officials said.

Hart's New Hampshire victory suprises students

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

CBS, NBC, and ABC News were not the only ones shocked by Sen. Gary Hart's stunning victory over former vice-president Walter F. Mondale in Tuesday's Democratic presidential Primary in New Hampshire. University of Massachusetts students yesterday also expressed surprise at the outcome.

Hart surprised national polsters and, admittedly, even himself, by defeating Mondale, the supposed front runner in the field of eight democrats. Hart finished with 41 percent of the votes to Mondale's 28 percent.

Just prior to the New Hampshire primary, political experts expected the toughest battle to be for second place between the Colorado Senator and Sen. John Glenn. Glenn finished a distant third.

UMass students were just as surprised by the outcome as were the experts, according to a poll conducted in the Campus Center.

"Everyone said Mondale was the front-runner, I was surprised (Hart won). I haven't the foggiest idea of what he stands for," said Christopher Hill, a junior geology major from New Rochelle, N.Y.

Billie Munro, a first year political science major from Andover said, "I was really surprised when I found out (yesterday) in my political science class. I thought Mondale would win."

Munro said she did not support Hart and would only vote for Mondale "if he picked up Rev. Jesse Jackson as his running mate."

Jeannie Regan, a Hatch employee from Whately, said she "thought (Mondale) was gonna be a hit."

After Hart's strong second place finish in the Iowa caucuses last week, his campaign picked up strong momentum going into New Hampshire. In the past week, the media has begun to compare Hart to John F. Kennedy, in both his youthfulness and appeal to New Hampshire voters.

Several students also compared Hart to the late president.

Margorie Mooney, a senior communications studies major from Duxbury said she was not surprised by Hart's triumph.

"I thought he had a chance. He's a lot like Kennedy, a little bit of Robert and a little bit of John," Mooney said.

She said she did not support either Hart or Mondale, but rather Ronald Reagan.

Ed Power, a telephone employee from Hardwick said he didn't think either Hart or Mondale could beat Reagan in November, but that Hart "has that Kennedy charisma."

Denise Hallee, a first year business major from Acton said she was surprised by Hart's victory but "was kinda hoping he would win. He's a new face. I think we need that."

Since 1952, no candidate has ever won the presidency after losing in New Hampshire. But several students said if anyone had a chance to beat Reagan, it was Mondale, not Hart.

"Mondale has a better chance of beating (Reagan)." But, Jim Francis, a junior mathematics major from Peobody said Reagan would probably win.

Vanessa Rigg, a sophomore college of arts and sciences major from Wyckoff, N.J. said she was surprised by Hart's victory because he has received relatively little media attention.

Professor returns to psychology

Strickland leaves advisory staff

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

After serving for one year as associate chancellor to University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, psychology professor Bonnie R. Strickland said she is pleased to return to her faculty position.

Strickland described her work with Duffey as "a great learning experience. My job was very exciting. I got to meet students, state legislators, and the Board of Regents. It gave me a very good look at the administrative part of the University.

"I really enjoyed meeting with different people and learning to understand what was going on," Strickland said. "The worst aspect of my job was the innumberable amount of detail involved and the number of complaints. We tried to respond to everyone and that often meant working weekends and late at night."

Strickland said she enjoyed working with Duffey and praised him for his efforts.

"As a relatively new chancellor, (on the job since Oct. 1982), Duffey was faced with learning about the University and its goals, and building relations with the regents, trustees, legislators and the governor. He is extraordinary at this. He stepped right into a very fluid situation," Strickland said.

"Another challenge that Duffey faced was maintaining the quality of the faculty, students and the campus itself. In order to do this, we need budgetary support to continue. We're faced with a physical deterioration of the campus and we need a good budget to correct this," she said.

Strickland explained that she was specifically chosen by Duffey after being recommended by various faculty members and administrators for the position.

Prior to working as the chancellor's advisor, Strickland served as chair of the University department of psychology for five years. She was also recently appointed to the Advisory Council for the National Institute of Mental Health, an organization which promotes mental health needs and concerns.

"I'm enjoying my return to the faculty. Now I have time for my own work," Strickland said. "I'm delighted to be back teaching students and I can also keep up with the field of psychology again."

Handicapped given lift

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Wheelchair lifts are now operating in a number of Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) buses, enabling handicapped students to ride on most night and weekend local routes.

Bill Barrett of the University of Massachusetts Transit Service said that, since January 31, wheelchair-accessible buses have been running after 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and all day Saturday and Sunday on the North Amherst, South Amherst, Sunderland, Belchertown Road and South Deerfield lines.

Because this is the first semester the lifts have been in service, "not a lot of people know about them," said Laura Rauscher of the UMass Handicapped Student Affairs Office. Rauscher added that many students have expressed apprehension about using the lifts.

"For many of them this is the first time they're taking the bus," she said.

Barrett estimated that five students now use this service regularly. He said eight people came to a demonstration on Feb. 4 to try out the lifts, which fold out from the buses' rear stairwells.

Use of the lifts will not cause noticeable delays in PVTA service, Rauscher said, since it takes "two minutes at most" for a person in a wheelchair to board. "It just takes a little cooperation from passengers," she said.

According to Rauscher, the effort to install these mechanisms began five years ago, when members of the UMass Handicapped Student Collective, "claimed the right to use public transportation by being vocal."

Rauscher said the delay was caused not by funding difficulties, but by technical problems with the buses themselves.

Barrett said that though the PVTA bought the General Motors Corp. buses equipped with lifts in 1980, the braces intended to hold wheelchairs steady inside the vehicles did not fit the wheels of newer electric wheelchairs. Thus, he said, it would not have been safe for someone in such a chair to ride the PVTA bus.

By the time the braces were replaced, Barrett said, the supposedly weatherproof lift assemblies had been corroded by water and road salt, causing mechanical trouble.

Spouse abuse discussed in Northampton

By ILONA STURM
Collegian Staff

Despite a growing awareness and sensitivity to the problem, wife battering is at epidemic proportions in the United States and is the most frequently reported crime, according to Jane Sanders, president of the Massachusetts Coalition of Battered Women's Service Groups.

Sanders was one of several panelists who spoke Tuesday at a panel discussion in Northampton titled, "Domestic Violence: Available Resources and Strategies for Helping."

Sanders said domestic violence is an "epidemic" everyone should be concerned about.

"We still hear a lot of trivialization about it," she said. "This is a criminal problem. People still think it is a civil problem and a family one, and that we shouldn't get involved."

"All our services are based on the self-help model which encourages women to make decisions based on their options," said Bonnie McKee, a volunteer coordinator of Necessities, a battered women's shelter in Northampton.

"Domestic violence is connected to other forms of violence in society and the issue of control and power in relationships. It is a societal problem that is condoned in society by the social service systems, the judicial systems, the clergy and t.v.," Sanders said.

She said domestic violence does not just occur in lower class areas but affects white families as well as minorities, and occurs among the educated as well.

Sanders said the biggest "myth" concerning domestic violence is that something is "wrong" with the woman if she doesn't leave her abusive situation. But, in reality, many women don't leave because they are afraid.

McKee said women often feel very isolated and are unaware of the resources available to them. Frequently women confront denial, disbelief and blame from friends and neighbors to whom they speak about the problem.

She said battered women often are expected to cope and compromise with an abusive situation but it is the abuser's responsibility to want to stop abusive behavior.

Sanders and McKee said financial dependency is one of the main reasons why women stay with the abuser. However, they said, abused women also fear the unknown, physical retaliation and failure.

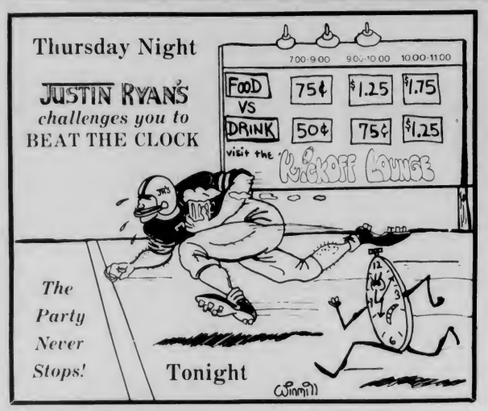
In 1981, Hampshire County residents completed a needs assessment survey concerning social services in the county. Forty-seven percent said there was a need for more programs dealing with spouse abuse.

Diedre McLaughlin, program coordinator of Direct Services, a branch of the Hampshire County Information and Referral Agency said, "We have this great system of prevention, but no one's getting it."

Police investigate shotgun threats at Riverglade

A 22 year-old man was arrested Tuesday after a Riverglade Apartments resident filed a complaint stating that the suspect had threatened him with a shotgun, according to Amherst police.

The suspect was arrested about 2 p.m. on a warrant of the alleged victim's complaint. Police said the incident occurred about 3:30 a.m. Tuesday and police responded to a call at the apartment at about 3:50 a.m. but made no arrest until the victim signed a complaint against the man later in the day.



Police said bail, which was set at $1000, was raised by the suspect Tuesday night.

The man was arraigned yesterday at Hampshire District Court, police said.

SGA seeks 'residental representation'

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee has denied a Greek area senator a position as a residential area representative on the committee which will review the Student Government Association (SGA) constitution with the administration.

Speaker of the Senate Chris Sullivan said the senate wanted a dormitory resident and that some of the coordinating committee members have questioned the United Areas Council (UAC) candidate's ability and dedication.

The Greek area senator, Jay Flynn said, "The fact that I'm considering running for senate speaker might have something to do with it." The committee will meet with the administration to determine the final form of the constitution, which was passed by the Undergraduate Student Senate three weeks ago.

The senate passed a motion last week which appointed SGA Co-president Charlene Allen, Chris Sullivan and Treasurer Eric Nitzsche to the review committee. The motion also provided that UAC select the fourth member of the committee, who was to represent the residential areas in negotiations with administrators.

The motion altered an original review committee approved by the senate earlier in month which did not include a residential representative. To protest the "lack of residential representation," UAC sent a letter to the area governments urging them to veto the SGA-approved constitution. According to Tim Rudolph, co-chair of UAC, they have since withdrawn their protest.

'Headline News' returns to the airwaves

The staff of "Headline News" is at it again, producing a news show by and for the students of the University of Massachusetts.

The campus-based news show can be seen on television screens outside the Mini-Store and near the Hatch in the Student Union Building at 12:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Union Video Center show, which features national, state and campus news is both a source of information for students walking through the Campus Center and a place to gain experience for students interested in journalism and communications, said co-producer David Sobel.

"There is a lot of enthusiasm concerning the show this semester," co-producer Jamie Sykes said.

Sobel said that in the past, the show's news sources were the Collegian and the Boston Globe, but that now The Associated Press wire service is also being used. Sobel and Sykes said they are hoping for more video stories and more on campus reporting this semester.

Sobel said the show welcomes anyone who would like to do an editorial on video.

The Amherst Rent Control Study Commission will hold the second of two scheduled public hearings at 7 tonight at the Town Hall.

The Commission, created last October by Amherst's Fall Town Meeting is empowered "to study the housing market to determine whether there is a need for rent control in Amherst," according to chair Kenneth Mosakowski.

The Commission requests that people wishing to make presentations at the hearing provide written documentation of data and that oral statements be confined to factual information.

Written statements may be turned in to the Rent Control Study Commission at Town Hall. The public is invited to tonight's hearing.

Senator Jim Murphy. "If the Senate can't admit it when one of its own body acts in a totally disgusting manner, what's the Senate worth?" he asked. Following this statement, Collins walked out of the meeting.

Collegian Managing Editor Bill Wall attacked Collins, saying that "he can come to the editors with a problem, but he has no right to harass a reporter."

Wall said he was appalled that "the Senate can hide behind parliamentary procedures to avoid a serious harassment issue."

Jay Flynn responded that "Bill (Collins) should be personally censured by all of us, but it's not our place to censure someone who's absent."

IF THERE'S LEADERSHIP IN YOU, OCS CAN BRING IT OUT.

OCS (Army Officer Candidate School) is a 14-week challenge to all that's in you... the mental, the physical, the spirit that are part of what makes a leader.

If OCS were easy, it couldn't do the job. It wouldn't bring out the leader in you, or help you discover what you have inside.

But when you finish and graduate as a commissioned officer in the Army, you'll know. You'll know you have what it takes to lead. And you'll be trim, alert, fit, and ready to exercise the leadership skills that civilian companies look for.

If you're about to get your degree and you want to develop your leadership ability, take the OCS challenge.

Call your local Army Recruiter, and ask about OCS.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Have a really nice day — really!

One of America's favorite expressions is said millions of times daily, almost invariably to people the ones speaking do not know and have probably never seen before in their lives. People often say it to customers after performing some service they have to repeat hundreds of times in one working shift.

I am referring to "have a nice day."

We've all heard this from bank tellers, garage attendants, refrigerator repairmen, store clerks, and TV anchorpeople (although Jane Curtin used to say "goodnight and have a pleasant tomorrow"). We can wait in line for three hours trying to get into PoliSci 121; the add/drop bureaucrat says the course is closed, but "have a nice day" anyway.

Ian Polumbaum

We also see it in writing all over the place: flashed between the time and temperature on bank signs, as we leave supermarkets, on computerized receipts, even on bumper stickers next to a yellow smiley-face.

I've seen journalists write about this phenomenon before, but I've never seen them investigate the true motivations behind it. Do they really want us to have a nice day?

Over intersession, I decided to start finding out. Whenever someone told me to "have a nice day," I asked (when I could remember): "Do you mean that? Are you saying that sincerely?"

Here are some of the responses I got.

An O'Hare airport X-ray security matron: "Of course. Some people have to fly all day, so I thought they'd appreciate that."

A stewardess on American Airlines, Chicago-to-Tucson: "Ohhh, certainly I mean it!"

A rent-a-car clerk: "Sure. Otherwise, why would I have said it?"

But I wondered whether the responses themselves were heartfelt. I got more telling results when I got a chance to grill people: "Now, do you really mean that?"

A tattooed, cigar-smoking postal worker: "What's the matter, don't you believe in wishing people a good day? Christ!"

A waiter in a posh hotel restaurant: "Was there something wrong with the service, sir?" (We hadn't tipped him yet.)

A supermarket cashier: "I guess so — I mean, we're supposed to say that to everybody."

A waitress in a not-so-posh restaurant: "To tell you the truth, I really don't care. You can have whatever the hell kind of day you please." (I had already given her the tip.)

A sexy young woman reading D.H. Lawrence in the Dining Commons: she scurried off, probably to meet her boyfriend or something, before I could ask her.

An Arizona gas station attendant: "I don't know. It's just something to say, y'know, like 'drive carefully' or 'what's up — not much.' I never really thought about it. Have a nice day, now."

Letters

A definition of conservative

To the Editor,

Conservative: 1. Tending to oppose change, 2. A person who favors traditional views and values, 3. Cautious, restrained, 4. Belonging to a conservative party or political group, 5. Having a myopic fear of "Rads."

I have prepared this letter in response to Neil McCabe's editorial of yesterday. It was an insult to the student body, the SGA and those of us who were defined as "Rads" in his most unfair and biased column. I have not the time or patience to convey my feelings on his cutthroat attempt to undermine the effectiveness of our student leaders, but will inform the readers of this letter about some important information which was misrepresented in or noticeably absent from his column.

Given that Mr. McCabe is a member of the Republican Club and a self-professed conservative, I question his ability to comprehend the mindset of those of us who do not support Reagan/Bush for President. I also question his definition of the term "Rad," finding the language "left-wing extremist who uses student government to further his/her own political platform, regardless of expense" particularly objectionable.

As an Officer of the Undergraduate Senate, a political moderate, and a student who has dedicated the last two years of my life toward working to see students' interests realized, I find this stereotypical characterization of myself and my colleagues to be slander. His attempt to demoralize the SGA leadership is ill-conceived, and will be met with an aggressive defense, of which this is but the start.

He, along with his conservative comrades, has once again attacked the Senate as being unconcerned with student needs, while propping up the Area Governments and the United Areas Council as the saviors of student government. This claim has been made on the pages of the Collegian so many times in the past year that people on the "outside" may be starting to believe it. I hope that in the face of this special interest propaganda, the University community will retain its sanity and examine the facts, not the rhetoric.

Everyone will admit that the process by which the Senate wrote the new Constitution was far less than perfect. We have encountered and overcome many problems, but in the end we have a document with which everyone is happy. But now, there are still more problems. There is an intense battle for power being fought between the campus Area Governments and the Senate.

Everyone should recognize that THE CONSTITUTION IS A PAWN IN THIS BATTLE, AND IS NOT THE BATTLE ITSELF. This is a very important point, because NO ONE EVER SAYS IT. Mr. McCabe's letter is an obvious attempt to generate support for the Area Government side by accusing the Senate of numerous improprieties. The Senate needs media attention and scrutiny to function effectively, but columns such as Mr. McCabe's do not respond to these needs, and are extremely detrimental to the Senate's ability to advocate for student interests. But that's okay, because that's what Mr. McCabe wants.

The real battle is for power in the SGA, not for student interests. In the next two weeks, the Senate will be electing a Speaker and Treasurer and the student body will be electing an SGA President and Student Trustee. Each candidacy figures into the struggle somewhere. It is your job to find out where and vote accordingly. I am not saying that one side or the other is right, only that there is a battle underway and everyone must be aware of it and take a position on it. It is your responsibility as the constituency to elect the best candidates, and I wish you the best of luck.

One final note, I am neither a "Rad" nor a conservative, and you know it Mr. McCabe.

Eric Nitzsche
SGA Treasurer

Conflict over "violations"

To the Editor,

It must have been a slow newsweek, because on Monday, February 27, there appeared an article and a title on the front page which stated in very bold terms - "SGA Candidates Violate Campaign Rule." As candidates, we feel that the article is nothing less than an exercise in muckraking and irresponsible journalism, and we request that it be retracted.

The author of the article has taken it upon herself to use the Collegian as prosecutor, judge, and jury on the matter of allegations. For violations to actually have occurred, the allegations would have to be officially presented, considered by the proper authority, and ruled upon.

On the first matter, where Collegian graphics equipment was used, without the expressed knowledge of the campaign rules or the expressed consent of our campaign committee, a meeting soon after took place between the Editor-in-Chief and ourselves. A full seven dollars ($7.00) was transferred to the Collegian to cover the slight impropriety. The "It was a misunderstanding" quote which appears at the tail end of paragraph five contrasts sharply with the title of the article.

On the second matter of the Central Area News, a newsletter to all Central constituents, Central Area Council (CAC) never published a newsletter "endorsing the Rudolf/Dooley campaign." The quote which appeared in the article never appeared in the Central Area News. On the contrary, the quote stated was brought to the attention of the newsletter staff, and was quickly removed from the draft final of the newsletter before publication. Stating that the quote appeared is simply false as the distributed newsletter will attest.

As candidates, we had no involvement with the printing of the Central Area Council newsletter. Tim's resignation, which does appear, is public record, and affects all the residents of the area. It is proper that it appear in the area newsletter. Furthermore, Tim's resignation was not, as stated, "a necessary action for presidential candidates." He resigned because he felt that if he could not devote his one hundred percent to the office while running for SGA President, that he should leave the post.

Questions abound concerning the article. Why didn't the reporter contact the "Collegian graphics employee" about the course of events? Why, if the reporter bothered to quote Tim at all, did she misquote him? Why did the reporter falsely report that the newsletter states an endorsement, when in fact it does not. As a matter of personal comment, who is this Rudolf character? Tim's last name is spelled R-U-D-O-L-P-H. Does the reporter realize that in her unending zeal to "expose" she instead, in our estimation, "libeled" our good names as well as the entirety of Central Area Council?

In all instances, it must be pointed out that the SGA candidates did not "violate campaign rule"(s) in any form. The seven dollar incident which involved a Collegian graphics employee was resolved and CAC News ended up not being an incident at all.

Tim Rudolph
Donna Dooley

Editorial Notes

Mythical Contradictions

As a writer of a Mystical persuasion, I afford myself the necessity of constant meditation and reflections of the perspectives of the "worlds." I see, often, that some ideas we as human beings hold as truths are but fablistic contradictions to the truth of "positive nature."

As a student in college, I was intrigued by a biological fact that will expound upon if you will allow.

Who was it that said woman was made from man and thus, inferior to him? I refute you; spinner of tales and fables, that pass for truth; concerning this ignormatic belief!

The embryo of a human is first a double X constitution. What this means to a layman is that it is of a female gender.

Then to this chromosomal plate, there was added a Y type chromosome, that would engender the being to be male. (Refer to Basic Biology 101).

Through a genetic determinate, some grew to be man, but, woman was first.

Observation of our planet, would reveal that it is mostly water (sea and ocean). Man, himself, is composed of over 75 percent liquid compositions.

When we are in the womb, we reside in an ocean world for 9 months inside a woman!

Nature is a woman so it is said, yet I won't indulge into the implications in this essay. However, I will say that this notion has a philosophical subliminal message pertaining to the stability of a woman's functions concerning the nature of her mind in particular.

Women, my good brothers, what do we make of them, our sometimes silent mates?

They are a blessing, a true compliment and a needed companion to the mighty Earthgod, man.

Let us love and respect them. Encourage them to excel. They are the planet, we are the creatures that appreciate it, and thusly, benefit from its beauty and majesty and splendor.

We, men, are the fertilizers of the glorious garden. What would become of mankind without women to share life with us?

We would certainly be seed without soil to foster growth. An artist without a mural we would thus become; we would have no object of ineffable beauty to perceive.

Why did some author create such a myth such as Adam and Eve? Chauvinistic inclinations followed upon the heels of the sacred writers. Was this the Diviners intentions? I fear not, it was the designs of impotent men who sought to plunge our world into the abyss of darkness with a manipulative intent.

Thus to control a societal, economical and spiritual monopoly. Yet, it crumbles now all around them. The vain sandcastles are pulverized by the waves of scientific, technological and philosophical truths.

The Mighty Earthgod is the victor, the chains are melted from the minds of Men and Women, like so many icicles before the heat of the sun.

Procreate and inspirate, construct and prosper--that should be the theme for the 80's.

Let us see the facts, if we construct myths, let them be adjacent to nature and reality.

Let Man and Woman, science and philosophy, technology and the ritual of religious practices combine forces to make humanity majestic. More progressive, and we will gain our posterity.

Have you kissed your mate today? If I were you, I'd give it serious thought and positive action.

Will Naylor is a UMass student.

Editor's note: Violations of election rules were committed, in the use of Collegian equipment and in the attempted offical endorsement of the Rudolph/Dooley candidacy by the Central Area Council. Lack of offical prosecution does not nullify the violations that occurred.

According to election by laws, candidates must be responsible for the actions of all subordinate campaign workers. Ignorance is no excuse for the law.

The Collegian and its reporter owe no apology. The story was accurate at press time. The charges of journalistic irresponsibility are unfounded, and should not be used to gloss over campaign violations.

As hard to believe as it is, those enthusiastic hordes of budding young writers, investigative reporters and columnists haven't been breaking down our doors to write for the Editorial page this semester.

But there is something you can do to help! Come to the first Editorial Investigative Task Force meeting, TONIGHT, in the newsroom at 8 p.m. Bring your own ideas, take an assignment, or come just to take a tour of our illustrious newsroom.

Take the time, come to the meeting, and start having your opinion heard around campus. MANDATORY for all Collegian columnists.

Elections can be very strange

Politics is an amazing business, and the mind of a voter is impossible to understand. "Tonight I took a cold shower," said Walter Mondale, the one-time heavy favorite to win the first in the nation New Hampshire primary by a landslide. A very perceptive judgement on his part, seeing that he lost by the largest upset margin in history, according to ABC News. "Sometimes a cold shower is good for you," said Mondale. A not so perceptive judgement. His loss to Gary Hart in the NH primary will have much more significance than he'd like to believe. Especially since no candidate has ever gone on to the presidency without winning NH first.

Josh Meyer

Besides being an accurate reflection of national moods that can shift in a split second, the NH primary starts a wave of momentum and press attention that carries through until Super Tuesday, an election day three weeks after, in which 516 delegates are elected, and primaries held in 11 states, including Massachusetts.

Gary Hart obliterated Walter Mondale, after being under the 2 percent popularity mark as late as a week and a half ago. Hart won 40-29 percent, and demographic groups across the board voted for him. He won all age-groups except those over 60, and was a heavy winner with women, and young, educated adults. Hart won 37 percent of the organized labor vote, whose leadership had not only endorsed Mondale, but poured $20 million into his campaign.

Forty-six percent of the freezniks, who vote only to stop the arms race, voted for Hart, compared to Mondale's 18 percent (even though the two candidates voting, records on the eight major defense policy issues are identical. (against every budget and deployment increase, and for SALT II Treaty). To solve the deficit problem, 41 percent went with Hart, while 21 percent went for Mondale. So it appears that New Hampshirites vote on their perceptions and pre-conceived (or newly conceived) notions instead of scrutinizing the issues.

Had the people of NH looked at the issues more carefully, Hart's win over Mondale may well have been more lopsided. Mondale offers nothing but tired, old liberal gibberish, and tries absolutely as hard as he can not to offend anybody. Gary Hart has taken a strong stand on many important issues that other candidates refuse to approach, like shifting priorities to high technology rather than protecting dying heavy industries which can't compete with advanced foreign manufacturing. (Compare Detroit to Japan — what has Mondale said he would do about that losing battle?)

Perhaps the most important indicator that Hart may turn the election around, and succeed in getting a coherent message out to the American political and electoral wasteland is his landslide over Mondale in terms of being the independent candidate. One fifth of the voters felt Hart was the candidate to represent them, and not the special interest groups whose endorsements have dominated (and maybe swamped) Mondale's campaign, who received a whopping one percent of support as a candidate responsive to the public welfare and not the private corporation. Never under estimate latent expressions of rebellion and anti-establishment feelings of the rank and file of an organization. Sometimes endorsements are a curse.

While it is true that Mondale still possesses an overwhelming lead, in electoral votes (181 to John Glenn's 36 to Gary Hart's 24) and in money, endorsements and grass-roots organization, he is a vulnerable candidate. In an age where the decision of the American voter often does not finalize until the second it grasps the voting lever, Mondale could be the dinosaur of 1984. One pundit on TV said that if Mondale isn't the winner the Democratic party is in lot of trouble (because) we can't clearly nominate anyone else."

If not Mondale, who has been endorsed by almost every influential democrat, then who? A shift away from Mondale would indicate dissension within the democrats and liberally-fringe clements of America, as well as the Democratic party, and could exhaust it before the final assault on the Reagan empire of stupidity and brain-washing rhetoric.

Many say that having political convictions is an honorable and necessary trait, that it is foolish and dangerous to forsake one bandwagon for another just because yours has a flat tire. But it is also foolish and stupid to refuse to admit that you may have made the wrong choice.

While this does not mean Gary Hart is the candidate capable of beating Ronald Reagan (the only thing that really matters in '84), it does mean that eyes will be watching him a lot more carefully. So should you, before the Massachusetts primary, March 13th. The 1984 election will portend either great or terrible things. But at least Democrats now have a choice.

Senate Controversy
skirting a real issue

Journalism or prosecution?

Sitting down as a spectator at the Student Senate meeting last night I was deeply offended on various levels. The situation of debate was the printing of a story by a Collegian reporter involving Senator Bill Collins. Senator Collins was accused of verbally harassing the reporter on a personal and public level. The point of discussion was whether or not a Senator who expresses himself outside of a senate meeting is representing the senate or only himself.

I ask, do Senators represent the Senate at all times or just while they are in a room among their peers? Does a reporter have to put up with harassment from a Senator because of a story? Should this issue not be addressed by the Senate in an official fashion? Should any person have the right to harass another? Is not a policy of this University to try and abolish harassment?

If this is so then I sincerely question the respectability of our Senate body, if they can let such a sensitive issue be brushed off so by using petty parliamentary procedures. It is bad enough for a regular student to be accused of harassment, but I consider it absolutely unacceptable for a Senator to not only be accused, but for the Senate body to feel it not important enough an issue to discuss it at length.

I ask then, are not issues which involve students and their feelings one of the purposes of the Senate's existence? I also feel there should be definite guidelines which elected officials should have to follow, not only when they are in a meeting but also when they are moving outside of those circles.

The powerful, not the people

President Reagan claims the land-distribution program as a vital element in his foreign policy on El Salvador. But recent reports confirm the shoddy administration of this program, resulting in little benefit to the Salvadoran citizenry. A recent internal audit conducted by the Inspector General's office at the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) said that in El Salvador the future of farm cooperatives "seems bleak without further substantial reforms."

Thomas Pitoniak

According to the report, one-third of 63,000 applicants for small plots of land "were not working the land because they had been threatened, evicted, or had disappeared." Furthermore, "much of the land had never before been used for any agricultural purposes." The El Salvador Agricultural Development Bank, responsible for distributing $29 million in AID funds, has directed at least $1.4 million to "unauthorized purposes." Another confidential report conducted for AID said the Salvadoran Government does not have any significant control over the abuse of funds for private enrichment.

Specific improvements in land distribution and human rights had been requirements for the last three years for any military aid to El Salvador, as "certified" by the President. But in an affront to the nature of democracy, Reagan pocket vetoed the bill last fall, in effect nullifying the law by not signing it. To assure the impossibility of a Congressional override as well as the certainty of military aid, the President pulled this immoral shenanigan immediately after Congress adjourned for 1983, in the words of the New York Times (Feb. 23). "The bill had passed overwhelmingly in both the House and the Senate."

During the winter vacation, President Reagan also managed to destroy the autonomy of the Inter-American Foundation, which is responsible for $23 million in aid for small businesses and farm cooperatives in countries like El Salvador. Trouble began last year when the head of the Foundation, Mr. Peter Bell, was sent a letter by a budget official asking him to justify the Foundation's political neutrality, which the last three presidents have respected. Mr. Bell said it was to be independent of "political currents," certainly a valid reason. However, the situation worsened when the conservative Heritage Foundation released a report denouncing the IAF's use of "collectivism," as opposed to free Administration." After Reagan selectively stacked the Foundation's board with two conservatives and two State Department officials, Mr. Bell was promptly fired, the vote split evenly along party lines. The reason: the wrong "chemistry." All of this occurred during vacation, again, in order to avoid legislative process and circumvent Congressional approval of Reagan's appointees.

Contained within the latest bill calling for $178.7 million in supplemental military aid to El Salvador is a provision for $20 million to train the national police forces. This violates a Congressional ban in effect since the early '70's on aid to national police forces. Together with the military and paramilitary groups, these three forces are responsible for roughly 40,000 civilian deaths since 1979. The five national guardsmen accused of killing church social workers Ita Ford, Dorothy Kazel, Maura Clark, and Jean Donovan on Dec. 2, 1980 have yet to stand trial. The defense lawyer has just filed a motion that will delay the trial indefinitely.

If the reason for this disdain of justice is a lack of information, why doesn't anyone call forth the FBI? The FBI has 2,912 pages of information on the case, which they refuse to show relatives of the victims. The FBI claims it is not required to release anything that may be used by the Salvadoran authorities. This is an insult to those who are expected to sit and wait for a trial that may never come.

A 103-page classified report prepared for the State Department said there definitely was an attempt to "conceal the perpetrators from justice" on the part of Salvadoran authorities. The women were sexually assaulted before being shot by the soldiers on a dirt road. The report also claims that Gen. Carlos Eugenior Vides Casanova, then head of the national guard, knew about the murders and the cover-up. This man is now the Minister of Defense.

By doing nothing to stop these injustices, President Reagan is guilty of subordinating human lives and rights to the "higher" goal of a non-Communist Central America. He doesn't realize that any nation needs a foundation, and that is its people. "Their" sins do not cancel "ours." The world is losing. Energies are being channeled into ways that benefit the powerful, not the people.

PERIOD
An exhibit of artwork
by Bill Feeney
Feb. 23 - March 8
Wheeler Gallery

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday, I attended an art opening at Wheeler Gallery which doubly impressed me.

First, I was impressed with the quality of the work on display. The show, entitled Period, is a first for art major William Feeney, and is evidence of his promise and achievement. In it, Feeney presents works done in a wide, yet balanced range of materials, methods, and mediums. However, Period is not only provocative on the basis of Feeney's accomplished form, but equally provocative for his subject matter and his ability to present difficult political imagery, such as assasination and torture, in a way which is pleasing to the eye.

Still, there are exercises in pure form such as his gouache and charcoal drawings with brush, working from the mark and the organic object, the theme of a watercolor class with Walter Kamys. These studies of onions move in a progression of breaking up space until the onion becomes a departure and what results is a circular painting without painting circles. Feeney demonstrates the ability to draw from a Cubist perspective.

But it is the political work which I found to be most moving, works which still demand good form in order to succeed as images. For these lithographs of Northern Ireland, Poland, and UMass, Feeney uses xerox collage and then transfers it to a lithographic plate, continuing to manipulate the imagery once it is on the plate. This technique was learned from print shop supervisor, Alix Hegeler, who Feeney says has been the biggest influence on him.

Feeney thinks of himself as a political artist who is also depicting himself in the picture in a humanistic way: "I use to think I wasn't political, only humanistic. But now I think my art is definitely political. I am reacting to specific images in the media showing the senseless suffering in the world."

Feeney believes the artist must confront the "media blitzing" which makes violence acceptable. About the title of his show, Feeney says "Period can be taken in different ways, an end or a time, something you have to struggle through, as in menstruation; there are uncomfortable feelings coming through my work." I found Bill Feeney to be as accessible as his work and urge others to attend his exhibit.

The second aspect of the show that impressed me was the gallery. What a wonderful concept to have galleries in the residence areas! Too bad that Wheeler must share its space between an art gallery and an academic center. I spoke to gallery coordinator Debbie Pepper, who told me that last year the space functioned primarily as an art gallery, but that this year the room was used mostly as a study hall. Formerly, the gallery had been upstairs on the first floor in Wheeler, but now that space, more desirable and visible as an art gallery, has also been made into a study lounge. Pepper hopes that the gallery can find a more accommodating space in the near future. I hope so too. East Side deserves a good place to see such stimulating art as Period.

The show closes March 8.

Scarlet Knights ride into The Cage

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

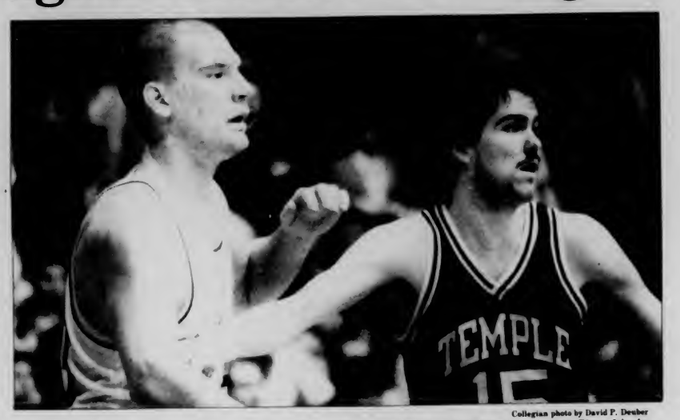
The injuries are behind them, having to face Top 20 teams feeling mean after a loss is past and there's a little payback at stake as well, the University of Massachusetts is ready to win some basketball games.

They better be ready. The Atlantic 10 tournament is in the not-to-distant future and only the top six teams in the league receive first round byes. UMass, at 6-10 in the conference, reside in that seventh spot but have two games to fight for that bye.

Tonight's 7:30 p.m. clash against Rutgers in The Cage would help UMass rise out of that hole. The Scarlet Knights are 7-9, a place ahead of the Minutemen.

"I say it before every game, but each one from now on is important," said coach Ron Gerlufsen. "We've simply got to go out there and beat these two teams (Rutgers and then Duquesne on Saturday) to get into the top six."

The Minutemen, in their worst offensive showing of the year, were crushed 65-46 to number 15 Temple on Monday.



UMass has now lost three in a row and are quickly dropping in the important standings race. They are 11-14 overall, 9-2 at home.

The Knights, 13-12, are fighting for position themselves and bring to The Cage the conference's scoring leader in 6-2 guard John Battle. The all-American candidate is good for at least 22 points a game from his off-guard position.

Rutgers picked up a close 88-83 win over UMass in New Jersey in early January, but as often is the case things are different when the 4,200 are up and going crazy in The Cage.

In Jersey John Hempel impressed the home folks with 27 points against the Knights with Horace Neysmith bagging 19 and Edwin Green adding 16.

"We've got to pay special attention to their guards, especially Battle and his ability to score from the perimeter," said Gerlufsen yesterday. "We'll play a man on them with Carl Smith and Donald Russell switching off on Battle, in a zone we'll play close attention to him as well, he's dangerous."

EYES RIGHT — UMass forward John Hempel is being flanked by Temple's Jim McGlaughin in last Monday night's game. Hempel and his teammates hope to rebound tonight as they host Rutgers University.

UMass, after a terrible 20 of 58 performance from the floor against Temple, will be looking to make the nets sing tonight. "The offense has been slow but we're ready to break out of the slump, the shots have been there," said Gerlufsen.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: 6-10 Eric Fleury, a Albany N.Y. product via France, will be in attendance tonight. The future center is being sought after by UMass as well as Rutgers. "He would be very important to our program," said Gerlufsen. The capacity crowd should make him feel right at home, hopefully. Green needs 14 points to move into third place on the all-time UMass list and 15 to tie the Doc for second. The game will be on WMUA-FM, 91.1.

The final days of the Old Cage are approaching

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

The relic will gasp its last breath at approximately 9:20 p.m. Saturday night. The doors will creak shut, the players will walk across the rickety, surrounding track, and the worn-down floor will be pulled up one final time.

The Curry Hicks Cage, as modern civilization has come to know it, will cease to exist following Saturday night's final 1983-84 Minuteman basketball game against Duquesne. When those doors swing open again for the 1985-86 campaign the memories will remain but the look will definately have changed.

Those memories have been good and bad, great and horrible. The decaying walls of the 55 year old court have seen the glory days of the late sixty's through mid-seventies as well as the depressing years when the teams won as often as the Denver Nuggets hold an opponent under 100 points.

The court has been played on by the likes of Al Skinner, Alex Eldridge, and of course the good doctor Julius Erving. It has felt the awesome reverberations of the jammed packed capacity crowds and also seen less people trudge in for a game than in your local high school gymnasium.

So now the allegedly long overdue renovations will begin that promises to make The Cage a better arena. Of course with the good always comes the bad, and the bad in this situation is the loss of what has become such a big part in the Minuteman basketball resurgence in the past couple seasons, for one year. Barring a minor miracle the work will not be done in time for the 1984-85 campaign, and the teams "home" games will be played somewhere else.

As far as the people around the program are concerned though, the loss will be there but it is far from devastating. "I've seen a lot of arenas," says coach Ron Gerlufsen. But, he adds, "A building is a building. But atmosphere can be created somewhere else. Our fans are the best and hopefully we've established ourselves enough that they follow us wherever we play the games."

Whatever the loss may be everyone agrees that the final outcome will be well worth the temporary inconvenience. "All in all it will be best for us," says head woman's coach Barbara Stevens. Adds Gerlufsen,"The school deserves better and the team deserves better (than the present).

Says Co-captain Edwin Green, who will leave UMass at the same time as the old Cage, "It's a great improvement. I'm glad they're doing it." And he adds, "I wish they had done it earlier."

So it will all end this weekend. The Cage is an amazing place to see a basketball game. Gerlufsen does not exagerate in his analysis of the atmosphere. It is a sight and sound that everyone should witness to grab a memory that can be held onto. The final two chances are tonight and Saturday. Call your friends, invite the family. Simply don't miss it.

Just a few thoughts...

We've just completed week no. 1 for the USFL, with attendance figures down from last year. The next couple of weeks will be crucial for the new league as they must gain an audience to compete with baseball, basketball and hockey playoffs, and the warm weather...Some teams are trying anything to get in. The Los Angeles Express had a WayneNewton concert after the game. They're still trying to figure out which one was more boring...

The NFL is still making news anyway as the Los Angeles Raiders stay in Los Angeles. Next move could be Baltimore. Owner Robert Irsay is planning to move the Colts...How does the Belchertown Colts sound to you? Maybe not...Ex-NFL'ers Joe Cribbs, Brian Sipe, and Cliff Stoudt along with Mike Rozier and Herschel Walker had rough starts in weekend no. 1, but I think the paycheck they will pick up will find a way to console their broken hearts.

My jinx for the NBA is as strong as ever. Two weeks ago I praised the Celts and they lost a few in a row. Last week, it was the Knicks. They have since lost 5 of 6, while the Celtics are back on a tear. Next thing you know, I'll probably vote for Reuben Askew...It has been reported that the NBA is at its best financially. Franchizes are reporting record profits and TV shares are going up, thanks partly to the incredible amount of cable coverage, especially ESPN.

One regret about watching the NBA on ESPN is that you have to sit through Dick Vitale, not the best color commentator around...If he isn't saying how much he "loves" every player known to man, he is rambling on about his old coaching days. He isn't like Al McGuire, who gives insightful comments, he just babbles on.

I also have the pleasure of listening to Vitale for college hoop, but even he isn't going to stop me from enjoying one of the best seasons ever...North Carolina will get back point guard Kenny Smith, who is coming off a broken wrist. They will be tough to beat...We saw N.C. State come out of nowhere to win last year, so who knows what can happen...Still have to put money on Louisville, who have the best backcourt in the country.

Speaking of backcourt, we saw an excellent guard in Temple's Terence Stansbury. He can shoot, dribble, and play good D. Don't be surprised if he makes the NBA, probably in the second round...The Owls totally took UMass out of their game in the first half with their tough zone defense...These last two games are crucial to UMass to escape that first round in the playoffs...Good luck to Edwin Green who needs 15 points to pass Dr. J on the career scoring list....Now, if Edwin can sign for a Coca-Cola commercial.

Swimmers travel to N.E.

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team travels to Springfield today to take part in the New England Championships, a three day competition that will close out the teams 1983-1984 season.

Head coach Russ Yarworth and his assistant Dave Swenson have been letting their swimmers take things a little slower in the past few weeks in order to get the most out of the team in the final competition of their season.

"We've given them more rest than in the past few years," Swenson said. "We've tried to have them take it easy in practice to relax and swim fast with little effort. Hopefully, we'll get a few more kids hitting their taper their peak, this year."

Yarworth will be going with basically the same swimmers he's gone with all year long. Leading the list of the 12 swimmers heading for Springfield is Chris Porter, who has qualified for 4 events: the 800 Free Relay, the 200 Free, the 400 Medley Relay, and the 100 Free.

The 200 Free is Porter's best event, and according to Yarworth could finish possibly first. Other qualifiers include Paul McNeil in the 1650 Freestyle, Chris Clarke in the 200 Butterfly who "always performs well in the New Englands," according to Yarworth.

The 400 Medley could also be a strong UMass event, with Porter, Mark Surette, Neil Kinnon, and Clarke rested and ready.

The Minutemen will be without the services of freshman Rick Bishop. Bishop stood out in the distance events this year until he developed a severe shoulder problem.

"It's preventive medicine," Yarworth said. "if he really hurt it in this meet then he's one of the best in New England."

Yarwortn hopes to finish in the top seven this year. He admits that after the top two contenders of Williams and Southern Connecticut it will be a "good fight" for the rest.

"They've worked hard all year. The Amherst meet was a good indicator that they're ready. We blew them out of the water," Swenson said referring to UMass' 69-44 victory two weeks ago.

"This (the New Englands) is what they've worked for all year. As long as they don't freak out and keep their heads then we should be strong," Yarworth said.

Smith College president resigns

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

After nearly 10 years as the president of the largest women's college in the nation, Smith College President Jill Ker Conway formally announced her resignation yesterday. In a letter released last week to the college's board of trustees, the first female president of the 110-year-old institution cited personal and professional reasons for leaving.

Among them is her desire to spend more time with her husband, John J. Conway, a University of Massachusetts professor and director the Canadian Studies department in the Five College academic program.

Conway's resignation will take effect in June, 1985.

Mrs. Conway was unavailable for comment. A college spokeswoman said Mrs. Conway also wished to finish the second volume of her work on the history of American women, titled The Female Experience in Eighteenth-and-Nineteenth-Century America..

Mrs. Conway came to Smith in 1975, after working as a history professor and vice-president of the University of Toronto. She was best known for her fundraising ventures, thus allowing such improvements as the construction of the college's first gymnasium and indoor track--a $5 million project, according to Director of Public Relations Ann Shanahan.

Ms. Conway also sought to increase the availability of financial aid for Smith students, Shanahan said

"I think a lot of people were very surprised," said Shanahan, a personal friend of Ms. Conway. "I think also there is a great amount of disappointment, for she did a great deal for this school. I wasn't totally surprised because she had once said that she felt a person could only creatively do a job like hers for about 10 years."

Smith students said they were saddened by her departure.

Sophomore sociology major Cassandra Tseckares said, "I was pretty upset. I think she was a good president because she saw as important actually getting out and meeting her students. I think many other students felt that way when they met her."

I'm a little disappointed," said sophomore government and economics student Susan Pentek. "I like the fact that she made closer ties to large corporations, and I liked her decision to cut the size of the freshman class to maintain the quality of the school."

She is a confident, smart woman who had definite goals for this college."

McGovern backed by area Democrats

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Two area Democratic party leaders recently endorsed former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern for the 1984 Democratic Presidential nomination.

Ken Mosakowski, Hampshire County Democratic Committee Chairman, and John Lawlor, Northampton Democratic City Committee Chairman, who sent out a joint letter last week to more than 500 Democratic Party leaders and peace activists in the First Congressional District, said McGovern's campaign platform "represents a real Democratic alternative to the dangerous, regressive policies of the Reagan Administration."

Despite Colorado Sen. Gary Hart's victory in the New Hampshire primary Tuesday, Mosakowski, an Amherst resident, said "it is still too early to tell" how McGovern would place in the March 13 Massachusetts Democratic Presidential primary. He said Wednesday that he hopes McGovern would pick up some, if not all, of the supporters of Californiz Sen. Alan Cranston, who has dropped out of the race. Ruben Askew, former Florida governor, and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina have also quit their candidacies.

Lawlor said McGovern's programs are an "updating of the New Deal, the Fair Deal and the New Frontier" and that his campaign is "an attempt to bring questions of liberalism face to face with the issues of the 1980's and 90's."

In an interview in Boston yesterday, McGovern said he expects to place first or second in the Massachusetts primary. Although an appearance is not now scheduled, Lawlor said McGovern plans to appear at the University of Massachusetts before the primary.

He said he is hopeful McGovern would be successful in his bid for the nomination.

"It's a question of the more votes he gets, the more it will have an effect on the Democratic Party no matter who wins, and that's wide open right now," Lawlor said.

The endorsement letter cited McGovern's commitment to "reduce substantially our nuclear weapons arsenal, terminate all U.S. military operations in Central America, put unemployed Americans back to work, increase federal support for education, revive the construction industry with federally-backed home mortgage loans and reform the present loophole-ridden tax code."

McGovern is the only Democratic candidate who "has pledged publicly to reduce our wasteful, bloated defense budget by 25 percent below the $275 billion requested by the Reagan Administration for Fiscal Year 1984," the letter stated.

Mosakowski praised McGovern's campaign style of not publicly attacking fellow candidates, saying, "It's better to run a positive campaign. McGovern is right. The main target is Reagan. They weren't raising the issues and that's where the man is."

Although McGovern may be perceived as a loser with a nostalgic, Mosakowski said, "Just because he lost in that 1972 election doesn't mean he won't make a great president. We should pick up where we left off in 1972."

Mosakowski coordinated McGovern's 1972 Presidential primary campaign in Massachusetts' First Congressional District, and Lawlor was the first elected public official in Hampshire County to endorse McGovern in 1972.

Supreme Court ruling doesn't affect sports

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

A recent United States Supreme Court decision easing restrictions on sexual discrimination in college funding procedures will not affect local college women's athletic programs, school officials say.

The ruling, delivered earlier this week, says schools found to be discriminating against women in one program will no longer face cuts in all their federal aid.

The new ruling narrows the interpretation of Title IX, a law passed in 1972 to ensure equal treatment and opportunity for women and men. Under the new ruling, colleges can discriminate against women in individual programs as long as the programs do not directly receive federal aid.

Frank McInerney, Athletic Director at the University of Massachusetts, said the new ruling will not affect women's sports at UMass.

"It will have no effect on the department of athletics here because Title IX has never been a prime mover, women's needs has been," he said.

McInerney said when Title IX first came out, it forced some schools to allocate more money for women's programs and create new opportunity for women. He said, however, the law did not drive UMass into providing for and meeting women's needs.

"What pushed us to build programs was more women who needed athletic experience," he said.

Valerie Turtle, the UMass women's swimming coach, she "is not pleased with the decision" and that "things are in pretty good shape" at UMass.

"I don't think it's a good national decision. I think it's hurting women's overall status as seen by society," she said.

Turtle said because "some women are being discriminated against, federal discrimination laws are protecting them and trying to make it better."

Larry Fink, Athletic Director at Smith College in Northampton, said the new decision would probably affect "campuses operated by Neanderthal minds" or colleges that have a less modern view of women's athletics.

Fink said he doubted that "enlightened student groups and administrations" would allow the restricitive bill to affect women's educational and athletic programs.

Two Democratic candidates drop out

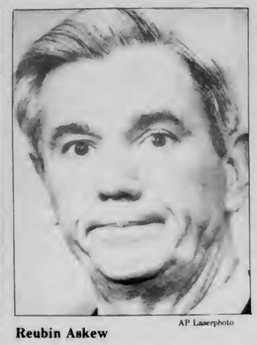
Hollings quits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina yesterday abandoned his two-year quest for the Democratic presidential nomination, saying 'it's plain that my candidacy didn't get through to enough people."

"Well, nothing happened to me on the way to the White House," Hollings told a news conference in a Senate committee hearing room.

Hollings thus became the second Democrat to drop out of the race. Sen. Alan Cranston withdrew Wednesday.

Citing his sixth place finish in the New Hampshire primary Tuesday, Hollings said, "I announce today that I will be stepping aside as an active candidate in this presidential contest."



"It was one of the best educations I've ever had," he added.

"I leave with satisfaction that my message has gotten through to the other candidates."

Askew leaves

MIAMI (AP) — Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew ended his one-year campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination yesterday, citing his poor finishes in New Hampshire and Iowa.

"I tried to be true to myself and my deepest convictions," the 55-year-old Democrat told reporters, his wife, Donna Lou, at his side.

"I believe I succeeded in meeting all my goals, yet I've not succeeded in winning many votes."

Askew is the third Democrat to withdraw from the presidential race.

Sen. Ernest Hollings, also citing his poor showing in New Hampshire, dropped out of contention earlier today. Sen. Alan Cranston, who finished seventh in New Hampshire, abandoned his bid for the White House on Wednesday.

Editors, reporter subpoenaed in rape case

BOSTON (AP) — Executives of two newspapers and a reporter were subpoenaed yesterday after the Boston Herald published an interview from last August with one of six men accused in a barroom rape case.

Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina said Editor Joe Robinowitz and reporter John Impemba of the Herald and Editor James M. Ragsdale of the Standard-Times of New Bedford were called to court Monday morning.

Pina said the three were told to bring with them all unpublished notes about the story.

"I want to see what wound up on the cutting room floor," Pina said.

Trial of the six men in a widely publicized case involving Big Dan's tavern in New Bedford is in the second week of testimony in Bristol Superior Court in Fall River.

New Bedford tavern March 6, 1983.

In the interview, Raposo contended that the woman was a willing participant, and asked to be taken to a pool table where she would be more comfortable.

The story conflicts with the woman's testimony in the trial and with that of a bartender who told the jury this week that she was carried to the pool table, her clothing was stripped off and she was raped.

Raposo was in jail when he wrote to the New Bedford newspaper, asking to be interviewed.

Impemba's discussions with Raposo became the focus of court action after Raposo's former attorney claimed the interview was conducted without his knowledge and could harm his client.

Ragsdale said he was served with the court papers yesterday afternoon and added, "We will resist, as we have in the past, turning over the unpublished information to the court. We have never published a line on it.

Bartender testifies

FALL RIVER (AP) — A woman screamed "leave me alone" as a man did "piggy things" to her on a barroom pool table, a bartender testified yesterday in the case of six men charged with gang rape.

But the second day of testimony by Carlos Machado also raised new contradictions to earlier statements of the woman who told jurors she was attacked and raped by strange men after she went to a Big Dan's bar in New Bedford to buy cigarettes.

Speaking through an interpreter, the bartender said the woman never asked him for change to buy cigarettes, but instead had three drinks, laughed and talked with the men at the bar and even threw her arms aound one of them before the attack.

Machado's own testimony was challenged at the end of the day when he said in answer to a defense attorney's question that he was "not sober" the night of the attack. But the district attorney and the interpreter later said the question was phrased incorrectly and Machado did not intend to say he was drunk.

Piscopo to go

BOSTON (AP) — Live from Boston, Saturday Night Live's popular comic Joe Piscopo confirmed rumors yesterday that he probably will not return to the late-night television show next season.

Appearing on WBZ-TV's "Live on Four" program, Piscopo answered, "Probably not," when asked whether he will return to the show. He denied rumors that he does not get along with the program's crew.

"It's some other foks," he said.

He also said it will be hard to return to the show without his "buddy" Eddie Murphy, who filmed his last segment of Saturday Night Live last week.

Piscopo was in Boston for a performance at a local night-club, The Paradise.

COOGAN DIES - Jackie Coogan, who played Uncle Fester on "The Addams Family," died yesterday of a heart attack. He was 69.

Meese questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) - Edwin Meese, President Reagan's nominee for attorney general, came under sharp questioning yesterday from senators concerned about his commitment to ending racial discrimination and whether he would be the president's or the people's lawyer.

Partisan squabbling marked the first day of the Senate Judiciary Committee's hearing on the nomination of Meese, Reagan's counselor and close friend, to replace Attorney General William French Smith.

Meese pledged to pursue "even-handed But the pledges failed to satisfy Democrats and one Republican, Sen. Charles Mathias of Maryland. They questioned Meese closely on his role in overturning an Internal Revenue Service policy against giving racially discriminatory schools tax exemptions, his personal finances, and his relations with Reagan's political supporters.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., noted the change in IRS policy, Meese's remark that some Americans join food lines because the food is free, and his opposition to government-paid lawyers for the poor.

UMass to hold women's celebration

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Corespondant

Beginning Monday, the University of Massachusetts will honor women throughout the world with the eigth annual celebration of International Women's Event.

Andrea Bates, a member of the Planning Committee, said International Women's Day has been celebrated on March 8 since 1911, when thousands of immigrant and non-immigrant women workers in Manhattan demonstrated to demand better working conditons after a fire killed hundreds in a shirtwaist factory.

From March 5 to March 11, the UMass campus will present panel discussions, workshops, films, slideshows, and cultural events "to reach the University community" in order to expose "the diversity of women's roles," said Kate McGary, coordinator of the event. The week is a "celebration of women and their struggle for a better society," she said.

"At UMass we have so many women from such diverse cultural and racial backgrounds. It's a real opportunity to bring women together," said Kathy Alexander, coordinator of the counselor advocate program at Everywoman's Center.

On Friday, two female artists from New York City will discuss their works in theatre, film, and video. McGary said, "Women have a lot of problems when it comes to careers" and this event will explore the difficulties of women in the working world.

Three Jewish writers will read short fiction and poetry Wednesday, followed by a discussion on Jewish identity and the relationship between Jewish women in America to the Middle East.

On Thursday two women will discuss the political, social, and economic situation of women in Lebanon. On Saturday, a panel will discuss women's struggles in Latin American and Caribbean countries in relation to all forms of oppression and imperialism, McGary said.

A host of cultural events are scheduled throughout the week, including a women's coffeehouse, an educational children's activity and a Third World Theatre presentation called "Paint Your Face" a play about a Native American Family.

A series of films and slideshows will be shown during the week on topics ranging from the history of black, white, and Hispanic women's struggles in America, to the political, economic, and social position of women throughout the world.

"Issues that affect women globally affect each of us," said Alexander. IWE will celebrate and commemmorate women of the past, present, and future. It is for and about "all kinds of women from all areas of society," McGary said.

IWE is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program, Student Government Association, Everywoman's Center, and the Women's Leadership Project.

Childcare services for those with children, and interpreters for the hearing impaired will be available at most of these events.

Hatch thefts cause concern

By ROBIN MANDEL

While stealing food from a University of Massachusetts cafeteria is not a new problem, recent incidents have caused some concern among Hatch employees.

Hatch manager Larry Jeffers and employee Phyllis Kessler recently apprehended two students attempting to smuggle out three trays, each holding between $15 and $18 worth of food for a total value of about $48, Jeffers said. While charges are not being pressed in the incident, during which police were called, Jeffers noted the possible long term losses resulting from such thefts.

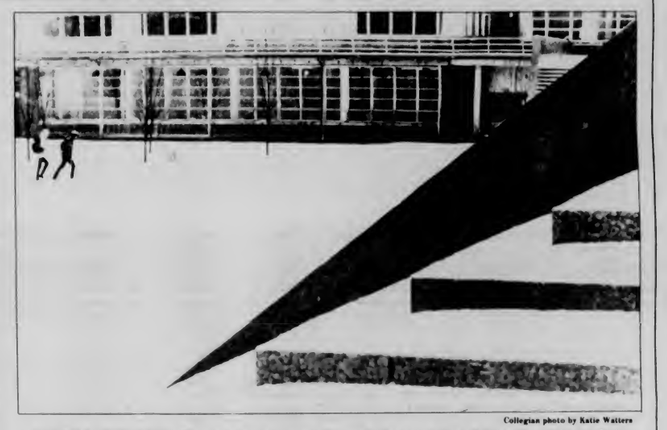
"If you multiply $48 by the number of hours in a day that the Hatch stays open and then by the number of days it remains open and afterwards multiply this result by the number of students who are stealing the food, the total for food stolen is something to definitely begin to worry about," Jeffers said.

"It takes two to perform the theft," he explained. "One student will take a table tray filled with food for four or five of his buddies and then slide it across to another student who will be on the outside of the line and will in turn, take it back to his table of friends.

"It is a shame that the student who steals fails to consider his fellow student. When someone steals, prices will be raised a certain degree to offset our losses," Jeffers said.

Kessler said police took the names, addresses, and identification numbers of the students recently caught, and both students will have their cases brought up in front of the Student Judiciary Board.

Although he wants to alert his employees to the number of thefts taking place, Jeffers said it is almost impossible to do anything more than observe the customers and their actions.



"Even scrutinizing all the customers presents a problem because the thefts occur during our lunchtime hours, which is the busiest time of the day. If we moved things so that they were inaccessible to the customers and they had to request them, it would slow down the service at the time that it needs to be the speediest," Jeffers said.

"In addition," he continued, "employing a security officer to help us with customer observation would probably not balance the profit loss but instead just cause us to raise our prices to compensate the cost of security."

Both Jeffers and a female employee who did not want her name used agree it is not surprising that so much stealing goes on, due to the University's size.

The female student added that this happens because many of the students feel they have the right to take things.

"They feel they have the carte blanche because this is their place to eat; it's their campus hangout," she said.

Gay, bisexual health care surveyed

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A survey being given to gay and bisexual University of Massachusetts students is attempting to find ways to improve the quality of public health care for those people.

"We're trying to determine what sort of things influence or discourage people to seek care," said Fernando Miranda, a UMass public health graduate who is conducting the survey for his masters thesis. Miranda said he began the survey last year because he is "trying to probe into some of the things people have gone through when going to get health care."

"We're trying to learn what things to avoid, what things to emphasize," he said.

He said he decided to conduct his survey on gay and bisexuals because "gays and bisexuals seem to be in the forefront of today's media as far as sexually transmitted diseases."

"I could have chosen females, males, children," he said, "but that (gays and bisexuals) is what population I'm interested in."

Miranda said he is dealing with the issue of gays and bisexuals contracting sexually transmitted diseases, and then avoiding treatment because of negative connotations towards their sexuality. He indicated an emphasis on "getting sexually transmitted diseases treated quickly rather than transferred."

"I want to try to encourage these people to come get care quickly rather than wait," he said. "We want to be more receptive to needs."

The results of the survey, which will be shared with University Health Services, will be tabulated by computer analysis as a group, Miranda said.

The survey is currently available at the Peoples Gay Alliance, or in the office of the public health department.

Washing machine causes fire small

University of Massachusetts Police responded to a report of a fire in Thatcher dormitory Wednesday, which was caused by a burned-out washing machine belt.

Police said a janitor smelled smoke in the basement of the all male Northeast Residential Area building and notified police.

The dormitory was evacuated, the building ventilated, and the Amherst Fire Department and UMass Department of Eviornmental Health and Safety officials were on the scene when the cause was determined, police said.

In other police action, two rugs, valued at $216, were reported missing from the lobby of John Adams tower shortly after 9 a.m. Wednesday. The rugs, purchased in December, were apparently stolen sometime between 4 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. Wednesday, police said. The case is open and there are no suspects.

A student's backpack and its contents, valued at more than $145, was reported stolen from Franklin Dining Commons at 2:48 p.m. Wednesday. According to the report, the complaintant was eating and had gotten up from the table for a short time. Upon return, the backpack, containg textbooks, car keys and reading glasses, was gone. There are no suspects.

Homosexual culture week planned

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

A representative of the Heterosexism Week Planning Committee formally requested a $1000 grant from the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) to help sponsor a week dedicated to fighting homophobia.

Paul Throne, heterosexim committee spokesman and a member of the gay awareness committee has planned the event for the week of March 26 to April 1, which will recognize and celebrate the homosexual culture as well as inform non-homosexuals about lesbian and gay life.

"More than 10 percent of students, faculty, and staff at UMass are lesbian or gay. So it's important that the University meets their needs. And it's just as important that we inform the other 90 percent of the homosexual life," Throne said.

The production, which has an estimated cost of $25,000, will include workshops, a series of films, various speakers, and a coffee house with musicians, poets, and dancers, all to enhance homosexuality.

A slide show examining the history of the lesbian experience from the late 1600s is also planned.

BOG treasurer Jerry Quill said that although the project may have definite beneficial interests to UMass, he would have to "peruse the proposal with a fine tooth comb."

"I didn't get a good look at the statement before the meeting. I have a policy of thorougly investigating a project of this size before dishing out any money," Quill said.

BOG administrator William Harris said that the issue wasn't one that should be considered on the open floor, and that in executive session, the coordinators might be communicative to the pros and cons of the issue.

The committee is also being sponsored by the Area East Operations Office, People's Gay Alliance, Mental Health Services, Dean of Students Office, Counseling Collective, Pioneer Valley People's Gay Alliance, Resident Advisors, and other students, faculty, and staff of UMass.

According to Thorpe, the Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has been meeting with a committee on homosexual issues on campus, and has expressed his support, including a statement of non-discrimination applicable to the campus operation.

"More than 2,500 students at UMass are gay or lesbian. It's about time that the entire university recognizes and accepts this group," Thrope said. The issue was tabled until next week, when the board asked Thorpe to bring a more specific and concise report.

Jackson's dream closer to reality

By KEN JOHNSTON
Collegian Correspondent

Regarding his fourth place finish in the New Hampshire primary Tuesday, Democratic presidential hopeful Rev. Jesse Jackson said that was a "high moment" because he won "in a predominately white state, over a former governor and three senators." Jackson added his win "shows progress of race relations and there is growth taking place."

Jackson, who received 7,991 or 6 percent of the voter support said this showed significance for the "Rainbow Coalition" of Western Massachusetts. "We're very optimistic" commented Sharon Davies, Western Massachusetts Student Coordinator of students for Jackson, and Bill Parks of Amherst College at a gathering Tuesday night in Southwest, University of Massachusetts.

State party officials said yesterday they were convinced Massachusetts would get most of the national attention on March 13, the so-called "super Tuesday" of the political season, when nine states hold primaries or Democratic caucuses.

"Massachusetts has become the real testing ground on Super Tuesday," said Linda Hartke, Executive Director of the Democratic State Committee, who spent the day fielding telephone calls from reporters, campaign aides and others who were suddenly interested in the Bay State primary. "It's the only major industrial state. It's the largest state without a favorite son candidate. And it's the only state where all the candidates have viable and active organizations working on their behalf for months," she said.

As the Western Massachusetts "Rainbow," prepares to capture the eligible voters in its districts, its coordinator William Strickland said yesterday to Jackson supporters at Amherst College "we must work diligently in the remaining twelve and a half day."

A concern the Jackson candidacy will face along with George McGovern as the two remaining Presidential bidders who received less than ten percent, is that they must receive ten percent in two consecutive primaries to receive federal matching funds.

Democratic presidential hopeful, Rev. Jesse Jackson at a hunger hearing last Sunday in Manchester, NH while campaigning for the first presidential state primary of the campaign year. Jackson received six per cent of the voters' support in NH Tuesday ranking fourth over McGovern, Hollings, Cranston and Askew.

Show celebrates old black women

By ILONA STURM
Collegian Staff

Combining dance, theatre and poetry, the experiences and history of Afro-American old women will be presented by the Women's Community Theatre in "Hands in the Mirror" tonight at Hampden Theatre, Southwest at 8:00, University of Massachusetts.

Ingrid Askew, the director of the eight-member all-black cast of dancers and actresses said, "The play speaks for itself. I had a beautiful piece of literature to work with. It's magnificent and I have a great cast."

"It really is a tribute to the old black woman's experience and puts emphasis on her courage, strength and stamina," said cast member Irma Askew.

Women's Community Theatre is the oldest feminist theatre group in the country, producing their first piece in 1975.

"Hands in the Mirror," their largest production to date, was written by Leona Nicholas Welsh from California and choreographed by Patti O'Neil, a dancer and Amherst resident.

The dancers and actresses are involved in drawing out of their own experiences said Cher Vierira, member of the Women's Community Theatre.

Vierira said that the "hands as a focal point," works well in the "dancepoem," since words alone wouldn't have the same impact. Large photographic slides will also be used as a backdrop to enhance the visual effect of the performance, she said.

The show itself involves presentations of several stages of the lives of black women such as: Birthin, Knowing and Caring, Tired Old Woman and Age and Lonliness.

By using both experienced and unexperienced participants in an informal apprentice system, the Women's Community Theatre is dedicated to producing high quality art and politics.

"It's my responsibility as an artist to use my art as a vehicle to teach," said Askew.

"Hands in the Mirror" will be performed on March 3, 8, 9 and 10 at 8 p.m. and March 4 at 2 p.m. in Hampden Theater and at the Zone in Springfield, on March 16,17,23,24 at 8 p.m. and March 18, 25 at 2 p.m.

Checking the record

To the Editor,

I would like to respond to Rudolph and Dooley's letter in yesterday's Collegian, concerning responsible campaigning, as well as to take the challenge of "checking the record."

Not only were Collegian graphics used to make poster roughs, but this was delivered to the printer before funds were allotted to the candidacies. The Student Activities Office policy on Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) includes candidacies.

"Accountability for the funds and property of each RSO is a charge that rests with the duly elected officers. The funds and property 'entrusted' to them belong to the students." Responsibility for a campaign does not differ from responsibility for an office.

Mr. Rudolph was also on the committee to refine the student government constitution. The committee's product and the one Mr. Rudolph typed for senate approval differed. This has been verified by senators and committee members.

Let sleeping dogs lie

To the Editor,

In reference to the Feb. 27 letter to the editor concerning the presence of dogs at the University of Massachusetts, we would like to "attack" the "dogmatic" position held by Ms. Kelly and Ms. Peters. Although the crux of their argument is based on the legitimate complaint that the leash law is literally being broken, there are many observations that will hopefully make the inevitable acceptance of the presence of these dogs less frustrating.

First of all, most of the animals that hang out in the Hatch and especially in the Coffee Shop are a lot more friendly than the "dog-eat-dog" patrons who take root there, as well as more aptly groomed. Hatch and Coffee Shop patrons consistently leave trash, food, and clouds of smoke, as well as the remnants of biting gossip intended to make tongues "wag." The dogs at least help remove some of the garbage.

What about the Hatch employees whom they so adamantly report "refuse to take action when approached?" Funny, all of the employees we have encountered are very willing to enforce the regulation and report that they have never received any complaints concerning this issue. Yielding the option to "let sleeping dogs lie" let us say that this blatant act of journalistic blasphemy is just the kind of "manure" to be expected in your fanatic appeal which seems to be nothing more than zoophobic sputum.

These "doggies in the window" may be worth more than you know. Recent studies show that animals reduce anxiety and feelings of insecurity as well as help maintain healthy blood pressure levels. Many of these canine companions, as they were aptly "tagged," ease the lonliness of students who are far away from home. It may also be of interest to Ms. Kelly and Ms. Peters that pets have been extremely helpful in treating the emotionally disturbed.

Also, if you would like to study, there are many libraries and study areas on campus specifically designed to suit this purpose. Moreover, if you wish to "enjoy a meal" in the Campus Center, you really are, uh, "barking up the wrong tree."

Cartoon missed something

To the Editor,

I am writing to protest your prudish decision to doctor my latest political cartoon, "Amherst Students Genetically Gifted," which appeared in the February 23 issue of the Collegian. Deleting the key works "Amherst College and Sperm Bank" from the plaque on the wall not only rendered the cartoon largely incomprehensible to the cursory reader, it also created an unsightly hole in the drawing's composition. Had I been consulted, I would have preferred to withdraw the cartoon rather than submit to such petty censorship.

C.W. Putney
Hampshire College

Editor's note: The reference to Amherst College as a "Sperm Bank" was deemed inappropriate and unnecessary due to the content of the rest of the cartoon, which adequately expressed the author's point.

We regret this "petty censorship," and would probably have printed the cartoon if we could again.

Success of family planning

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to the article titled "Safety of Rhythm Method Questioned" (February 17) in the Collegian. Because the article contained a number of inaccuracies I felt compelled to write.

In general, the reporter failed to recognize that there exist several distinctly different methods of "natural" family planning. One of these methods, calendar rhythm, has had a poor track record in regard to effectiveness. Other natural methods however, like Sympto-Thermal Natural Family Planning and the Ovulation Method have achieved considerably higher ratings in recent effectiveness research. In fact, when these methods are learned and used properly they are as effective as any method of family planning on the market today, including the pill and IUD. Thus, while the article may have left the impression that all natural methods of family planning are ineffective, this is simply not the case.

The article also stated that "a woman must have a predictable, regular menstrual cycle" in order for natural methods to be effective. In fact, it is only calendar rhythm which is dependent upon "regular" cycles. A woman with irregular menstrual cycles can easily and effectively use Sympto-Thermal NFP or the Ovulation Method.

The article spent virtually no time in discussing the advantages inherent in using natural methods of family planning. To the best of my knowledge, no women have lost their lives or endangered their future fertility using this method. Natural Family Planning is also virtually cost-free and ecological and can be used throughout a woman's reproductive years. Using natural methods will help a woman come to understand how her fertility works and to feel more comfortable and positive about her body.

There are so many good things about Natural Family Planning. I wish that your article had devoted some space to mentioning them.

Gary Hart is on the run

The state of New Hampshire Tuesday renewed the faded spirit of the American Democratic system. In a time of macro-media coverage where pollsters are all too sure of themselves, where the press often influences voters more than candidates do, the people of the eighth smallest state in the nation proved that free choice is still an American right.

A New York Times-CBS News Poll taken after the Iowa caucuses showed that Walter F. Mondale held "the most commanding lead ever recorded this early in a Presidential nomination campaign by a nonincumbent." Mondale claims more money, better organization and higher name recognition than any other candidate. And yet Sen. Gary W. Hart showed that by marketing himself as the leader of the new generation and new ideas, that he is the "only" alternative to frontrunner Mondale and that he is a viable candidate. Hart hit a nerve in New Hampshire–one he hopes to hit again.

John Kenney

Iowa allowed Gary Hart to stand on his feet. New Hampshire let him walk. He must now prove, over the next three weeks, that he can run. He has made this campaign, for the time being, a two man race. But just as quickly as he won New Hampshire, Hart could falter in Massachusetts, Florida, Alabama, New York–or all of them.

The Mondale campaign has been shaken but not felled. His is an organization with substantial strengths and, until recently, few weaknesses. Many voters will continue to see Mondale as a source of experience and stability.

And yet this is the very reason Gary Hart is an attractive candidate. He claims to be different in a pack of all too similar candidates. Hart's strength is drawn from Walter Mondale's perceived boredom. Mondale's loss can be taken as a sign of "protest" vote. His lead was all too safe, his candidacy all but locked up. New Hampshire voters do not appreciate cockiness.

Some people will look at Hart's candidacy as potentially detrimental to the nomination. The longer this fight for the nomination drags out the more of a split it will cause in the party. It is important that the Democratic party nominate a strong candidate to face what will most likely be a well-oiled Reagan machine.

Perhaps it is more appropriate to look at Gary Hart's challenge as more of a test on Mondale and subsequently Hart, himself. This test, if it does in fact continue to escalate in the upcoming primaries, will strengthen the candidates and subsequently the party. This rivalry forces both candidates to continue to establish who they are and what they stand for. It will polish both for the important task ahead.

In the final analysis only one man will be nominated. And the Democratic party must back that nominee in the essential fight against Ronald Reagan.

John Kenney is a Collegian columnist.

Candidates views cloudy

To the Editor,

Although I cannot vote in the United States, I am interested in the outcome of the presidential elections. Being a native of El Salvador and a political science major, the outcome of the elections plays an emotional and progressive part in my life. Thus I feel obligated to express my political feelings toward the presidential elections.

Being content with the President's domestic policy does not make me a full suporter of his administration. His foreign policy plays a major and unfortunate part in the lives of my fellow countrymen. I cannot support the President on his bid for re-election until his foreign policy changes. Knowing that this wish is far from becoming a reality, I pledge my support to the Democratic candidate that has a clearly defined and realistic foreign policy on Central America. For now, I find Sen. Gary Hart to have such a policy.

I wish that more candidates would make their views known to students such as myself. I therefore pledge my support to Sen. Gary Hart, as I trust his word not to be rhetoric.

Trailers
by Andy Gordon

I seem to be offending a great deal of people lately. Letters; phone calls. What the F word (see third paragraph) is the problem? Iss column in fact offensive or are people taking themselves and certain situations far too seriously? My vote is obviously the latter. Point one: John Landis. What, is John Landis sacred? Are there students out there who pray to him every night? I love the guy; he's right up there with Ashby and Lumet on my favorite director list, but I don't consider mild Landis ribs in "extremely poor taste." He's cool, he wouldn't mind. Point two: Lasseter. Can you believe someone didn't like me ragging on Lasseter? Point three: Daryl Hannah, actress and Goddess. Was my description of Hannah as a beautiful woman irrelevant and unimportant? Perhaps, but then again so is all of TRAILERS.

My review of "The Rocky Midnight Experience" last week drew lots of fire as well; most of it from the UMass Music Theatre Guild, who put on the show. I felt I was fair, but anything less than blind, total praise p-ss-s the Guild off. One fellow, David Franklin, wrote a rag almost as long as my article (at the time of this writing it has not yet been printed.) His main allegation was that I did not approach the review as a serious theatre critic. No kidding, pal. I've done that. They're boring to write and they're boring to read. Franklin misquotes and misrepresents sections of the article and even implies untruth (I.E. "Peter Mankin was funny and was not called a f--k-n idiot by audience members.") I agree with part of that statement; Mankin was "funny." But then again, I had a cousin who was "funny" and they put him in an institution, not on a stage. As for the second part, Mankin was called a fu--in idiot by audience members. I know; one of the people was my housemate (who incidentally feels similarly about you, Dave). Another letter, by Guild reactionary John Taylor, implies and presumes all sorts of things I did not intend. I enjoy being told what I was thinking almost as much as reading ungrammatical letters. The Guild has some seriously talented members, whom I try to recognize in my reviews, but these silly little flunkies get on my nerves in a big way.

A third series of controversy has arisen out of my sometime use of the F curse word and the S curse word and any of the other really gross, dirty, filthy, evil words that corrupt our society. There have been no student complaints, but several members of the Collegian board of editors have been taking a bird about it (actually, only one so far as I know). In any case, I get weekly warnings to cease and desist, and am now on something like double secret probation. One more F, I'm told, and TRAILERS is no more. My feeling is that we're all familiar with "curse" words (perhaps several of us have actually spoken one at some point) and are only shocked at seeing them in print because we're not used to doing so. They're only words though, so why shouldn't they be used in context, in a totally subjective section, as ARTS is. The Village Voice uses them. The Boston Phoenix uses them.

Sorry I rambled and didn't talk about movies, but I did want to address the issue. Early next week there will be a clean, "serious" TRAILERS (what the h--k, I need a good clip to send out with my resume anyway). I'll have news about the FOCUS student film competition and how you can enter, as well as looks at Touchstone Films, a new subsidiary of Disney, and Columbia Pictures' new release, Against the Odds (I'll even give away passes to the flick).

Through the magic of filmmaking, Kevin Bacon dances up a storm in Footloose, now showing at the Hampshire 4.

TRAILERS Trivia: Anyone who reads the Collegian quote of the day on page one knew that "I believe there is justice in our hearts" was a line from The Verdict. The first correct answer I received was from Dennis Benson I believe. If Dennis calls or sends us his address I'll throw some neat movie stills in an envelope and get them out in the morning. More movie stuff to the first person who tells me who the original director of Footloose was (note: he was fired and replaced by Herbert Ross.)

Local Best Bets: Star 80 opens today Mariel Hemingway turn out amazing performances, I'm told. Against the Odds, The Right Stuff and Footloose are there as well. The Amherst Cinema has a double bill of Modern Times and Zelig now, and Gorky Park and Under Fire are due early next week. On campus, there's Dirty Harry tonight, and No Nukes on the 7th. Check CC posters for time and place. Oh yeah, the Mountain Farms Mall has Tom Selleck in Lasseter. Don't miss that. Nosiree, Bob.

Definitely don't miss Lasseter. Paul Belval's going every night this week.

Rugby workouts start

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

The ground under the players was a little moist, as some of the heavier ones sank up to their ankles, but spring practice for the University of Massachusetts rugby team opened as scheduled last week.

Team captain Duncan MacKay, who sat out the second half of the fall season and will miss the entire spring season with a shoulder injury, was nonetheless at the helm directing stretching exercises and wind sprints.

"Sure I'm disappointed, but it is going to take a lot more time for my shoulders to heal," said MacKay.

MacKay, a junior, fractured his clavicle and separated both shoulders after a crunching tackle last fall against Harvard.

"Despite the weather setbacks, the training sessions have been very promising. The new team members have been practicing outdoors learning the rules of rugby, while the old players have been working on conditioning by themselves. I hope we can jell as a unit in time for the March 31st season opener against Providence," MacKay said.

The UMass rugby team was founded in 1965 by a group of graduate and undergraduate students. Now, because of tournament rules, the team is made up almost entirely of undergraduates. The ability to draw on such a large student body allows UMass to field as many as five teams, or sides, of fifteen members on any given Saturday afternoon.

In addition to MacKay's injury last fall, UMass's season on the whole was quite disappointing. A 12-12 tie to the University of Vermont and a loss to Boston University knocked the Unicorns out of the Eastern College rugby tournament. With no prospects of winning a championship, interest waned and attendance at practice sessions dwindled each day.

UMass was not used to losing, after winning the rugby tournament in 1981 and 1982, and the low point of the fall season came when 14 players traveled to Norwich University and were crushed by thirty points

"The fall is really behind us, and I look for a successful spring, even though we'll have to face some of the stiffest competition we've seen in a few years," MacKay said.

"I've been working out quite extensively this past intersession on weights and wind, because no positions are guaranteed," John Milkiewicz, a second year forward from Holyoke said.

"We should have one of the biggest A (1st team) side squads ever, our forwards, led by Al Borghi and Todd Chuma all weigh over 215 pounds," MacKay said, "We'll also have Scott Baker and forward George Economo back after they spent the fall playing for Boston teams."

"We hold practices every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday at 4 p.m. at the lower Boyden playing fields and all are welcome to come out and learn the game. The more people we have on our side, the better off we'll be when we take on Army, the number one ranked team in the East, later on this spring," MacKay said.

Rutgers holds off UMass comeback

by PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Donald Russell's 18 foot jumper from the top-of-the-key banged off the front of the rim to spoil a gutsy comeback as the University of Massachusetts dropped a 76-75 decision to Rutgers last night in the Cage.

The Minutemen, now losers of four in a row, rallied from being down by 13, 68-55, with 6:26 left, to take the lead 75-74 on a Johm Hempel bomb from the right corner with only 42 seconds remaining.

John Battle, the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, took the ball through the UMass press, stepped over halfcourt and launched a 30 footer that filled the bottom of the net for 76-75 Rutgers lead with 25 seconds to go.

The Minutemen had trouble setting up a shot and for some reason waited until there were three seconds left before using their final time out. Russell then took the inbounds pass from Carl Smith and missed the open jumper.

I'm disappointed that again we didn't get off to the best of starts," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen, "But I'm proud that the kids came back strong, we've just got to learn you can't spot a good team a lot of points."

UMass, now dipping to 11-15 on the year and losing a chance at a first round A-10 tourney bye with a 6-11 league mark, came out sloppy. With Horace Neysmith and Hempel leading the way UMass committed 14 first half turnovers while shooting a weak 14 out of 32.

Rutgers, behind the strength of their inside game, powered out to a 38-32 halftime lead with the Minutemen running off nine in the last 2:22 to cut what had been a 38-23 Rutgers lead.

The second half saw UMass unable to climb within ten of the Knights until the 11:40 point when a seven point run made it 55-50 Rutgers.

A nine point streak, highlighted by Hempel outside jumpers and two good drives by Russell, who led all scorers with 19, made it 68-64 and the 3,762 in attendance were finally showing some emotion.

A five point run by Edwin Green, a layup, foul shot and two handed slam cut the lead to one, 70-69 and only 3:01 was left.

Rutgers, hurt by foul trouble, slowed the tempo and a Chris Remley tip in gave them a three point cushion that Russell cut into with a jumper and then topped with a pair of free throws for the first UMass lead at 73-72. Zucker calmly swished two free throws with 1:06 left before Hempel, who shot a poor 9 of 22 but was solid in the clutch, found his spot again with a 15 footer from the right corner.

Battle, who had 18 to lead Rutgers, then defied all hoop logic with his 30 foot swish.

For UMass, Hempel finished with 18, Green had 12, Neysmith had 10, and Carl Smith added six points to a season-high 13 assists. Rutgers, now 14-12 and 8-9 in the A-10, had 14 from Remley and 10 from Steve Perry.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Battle has scored in double figures for 21 straight games. The game was the first home non-sellout since intersession.

Season ends

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Heading down to Springfield on Saturday the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will try to increase its record to 9-5 in the last meet before the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships begin.

UMass, which is scoring in the low 250's, will have a tough time with Springfield, which is averaging 245 a meet. The Chief's high score this season is 245.6, scored twice against Navy and Air Force.

Individually, the Minutemen will have their hands full with Springfield seniors Jeff Coehlo and Bob Piehler. Two-time National Champion in still rings, Coehlo, is averaging 9.75 on the event this season. Along with the national title, Coehlo has been champion at the EIGL's in still rings for the past two years and was runner up in the long horse vaulting event in 1983.

Piehler is the top all-around for Springfield and will fight with Bert Mathieson and Willie Stevens for the top all-around spot in Saturday's meet. His high score this season is 54.6. Piehler was All-American in parallel bars in 1982 and in vaulting in 1983, while coming in fourth in the Division II national around. Piehler is ranked third in the all-around this year.

"It could be pretty close," Springfield sports director Robert Marx said. "We keep improving every meet, but UMass will probably be the favorite."

Women's basketball faces WVU in conference tourney

by ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The word in the stands concerning the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team is "wait 'til next year." Things for this year, however, are still not finished yet.

The women are in Pennsylvania tonight to begin the 1983-84 Atlantic 10 Women's Basketball Chamionship.

The top seed in this affair is Rutgers University. The Lady Knights have compiled an impressive 18-8 record including a 7-1 mark in conference play. The preseason polls picked the Knights to win the conference this year and have been proven right.

West Virginia is the second seed in this tournament with the host team, Penn State, finishing up the top three. Penn State are the defending champs, but have had some trouble this season compiling a 15-11 record.

UMass finished seventh in conference play this year, and is not expected to fare much better in the tournament. The Minutewomen finished the season with a respectable 10-16 tally, coupled with their 3-5 showing in conference play.

UMass has several extra incentives for finishing up high in the tournament. The first season being rookie head coach Barbara Stevens and her crew of assistants. Stevens has instilled a winning spirit into the Minutewomen, who, last year had only five victories. Teammate, and captain Wendy Ward should provide the second ingredient for a winning weekend. Ward is finishing her long and prosperous four year career at UMass. She has been as productive as ever this year, consider this...Ward has an 8.5 points per game average, recorded 55 steals and led the team in minutes played (910), assists (94), and free throw percentage (791).

Ward will be joined in the backcourt with UMass' leading scorer, Barbara Hebel who owns a 15.9 points per game average. In the front court, UMass will attack with freshman Karen Fitzgerald at center and Rebecca Kucks and Jerrie Bernier at the forward positions.

Tonight at 9:00 p.m. UMass will tap off against West Virginia. The mountaineers were one of the late season losses for the Minutewomen. UMass lost that contest by a 13 point margin, 77-64.

For coach stevens and the team, they hope that "next year" will begin tonight.

SGA candidates discuss campus, academic issues

By DAVID SINGER and JOHN VINCENT

Candidates for Student Government Association president gave different, but not drastically opposing views Sunday on the role of student government and the university academic image in the first debate of the SGA elections campaign.

Candidates also stated their qualifications for the position in the debate sponsored by the United Areas Council, a Recognized Student Organization with no governance powers.

Debate moderator David McCarthy asked each of the four candidacies--Tim Rudolph and Donna Dooley, Gumby (Paul Gosselin) and Camel (Jim Murphy), Rick Patrick and Jim Keller, and John Michaud--six general questions, followed by questions from the audience.

None of the candidates attacked any of the others, and none seriously challenged the credibility of the others during the about two-hour debate attended by about 50 people.

On the role of student government, all candidates agreed residential issues need attention.

Claiming that "residential issues are more or less pushed aside" by the SGA, Dooley proposed to make dorm telephones more affordable for residents by having several companies compete for the contract. She also said the residential colleges in the Southwest and Orchard Hill residential areas need to be strengthened.

Gosselin said there "shouldn't be a distinction between residential issues and non-residential issues," and Murphy said area governments should gain more control over money that the Dean of Students office uses for residential program.

Patrick said "all issues are residential issues." He and Keller proposed to open up more space for study in the Dining Commons and to get more lights and emergency phones on campus.

Michaud said he was "not too aware of residential issues," but he said that since half the students live on campus, he would give half his time as SGA president to residential issues.

All the candidates agreed UMass has a good academic reputation, but some said the university has a bad image in the press.

Citing a New York Times report last year which ranked UMass in the top 10 schools in the country, Keller said UMass "is developing and has a solid image."

Murphy said "every state school gets trashed in the newspaper," and UMass sometimes suffers in comparison with private schools like Harvard, but he said this does not damage the academic prestige of the school.

Michaud said he doesn't think UMass "needs to increase its prestige too much...we need to get good press."

Dooley also echoed that theme, saying more favorable press releases and student recruitment would help the University's image.

In stating his qualifications for the student government presidency, Patrick cited his work on the academic affairs committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate, and "being a team player" in the senate. Keller said his work with the Campus Center Board of Governors helped strengthen student interests in the Campus Center.

Gosselin and Murphy, who both have extensive experience in the SGA, said they want the SGA to repeat its past successes in fighting for student control over decisions which affect them.

Rudolph said he wants to be more responsive to students than past presidencies, suggesting referendum elections to "find the true pulse of the university."

Michaud said his lack of experience in government helps him to bring the perspective of the normal on-campus student to government.

Student fees to rise $53 next semester

By BRIAN THIBEAULT
Collegian Correspondent

Students attending the University of Massachusetts next fall can expect to pay $53 more for their education as higher student fees are anticipated.

Mandatory student fees, such as the Health, Fine Arts Center, and Housing fees, will increase 3.7 percent overall in fiscal year 1985, said Paul Page, Acting Budget Director for the UMass campus.

According to Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) records, the Health fee will increase $5 next semester, from $176 this year to $186 the fiscal year 1985.

SCERA records also show the Fine Arts Center fee, which for the past three years has been $3 a semester, will increase $2 to a proposed $5 next fall. That's a $4 annual increase and a $10 fee in fiscal year 1985.

The housing fee, which according to SCERA records was proposed to increase $31 next semester, will actually increase $17 next fall, said Robert Welch, Assistant Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. The fee will increase from $1182 to $1216 for unrenovated dorms and from $1242 to $1276 for renovated dorms in fiscal year 1985. That is a $34 increase next year.

The telephone fee will increase $2 per semester, from $50 this year to $54 in fiscal year 1985, Welch said.

The transcript fee, which students must pay for transcript copies, will increase 50 cents from $2.50 to $3 in fiscal year 1985, Welch said.

According to Page, student fees remaining the same next fall are the athletic fee, at $31.50, the Campus Center fee, at $42, the Student Activities fee, at $48, and the Performing Arts fee, at $3.

Welch adds to next semester's list of unchanging fees the I.D. fee, at $4 for new students and $2 for replacement, the Placement fee, at $13, and the New Students Program fee, at $62 for new students, and $35 for transfer students.

In addition, SCERA statistics show the dining commons fee, which increased considerably from 1983 to 1984, will not increase in fiscal year 1985. Page said there's no decision yet concerning tuition, which has yet to go before the trustees and board of regents.

Welch said fee proposals originate with budget managers and program directors and must be approved by the chancellor, the president's office, and the trustees, who are the final authority.

"Fees get proposed at initial level, then reviewed and recommended, altered, or changed," Welch said.

Page attributed inflation as the cause of increasing fees and adds that salary increases, the result of collective bargaining agreements, are also reflected in the budgets.

False fire alarms plague dorms

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A rash of fire alarms at the University of Massachusetts this weekend resulted in only two actual incidents and did no damage other than to rouse students from their sleep.

The Amherst Fire Department reported they responded to 11 alarms at UMass from Friday morning to Sunday evening, but did not have to extinguish any fires.

University spokesman Arthur Clifford said yesterday that the Cashin Dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area was the scene of a paper fire at about 2:00 a.m. Friday.

Residents of the dormitory put out the burning piece of paper, but did not report the fire until the morning, due to its insignificance, Clifford said. He labeled the fire as "not suspicious" and said the incident is not under investigation.

Knowlton, a women's dormitory in the Northeast Residential Area was evacuated at 11:40 a.m. yesterday after a wastebasket fire was put out be residents. The Amherst Fire Department completed a service run to confirm the fire was extinguished.

False alarms were rung in Webster dormitory in the Orchard Hill Residential Area at 7:23 p.m. Friday, on Saturday at MacNamara dorm in Sylvan at 1:22 a.m.; at MacKimmie dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area at 6:30 a.m.; at the Infirmary at 3:13 p.m.; at Pierpont in Southwest at 10:01 p.m.; and at Brett in Central at 10:15 p.m.

On Sunday, Cashin had a false alarm at 12:36 a.m.; and Brooks (3:03 a.m.), Pierpont (4:36 a.m.) and Gorman (1:23 p.m.) all had false alarms pulled.

Gemayel meets with Syrian leaders; cancels Israeli pact

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - A senior member of the Lebanese opposition said yesterday President Amin Gemayel will abrogate the troop withdrawal accord with Israel within "the next few hours" in return for agreement from Lebanon's feuding factions to meet in Geneva March 12.

"We are very, very happy," said Assem Kanso, secretary general of the pro-Syrian Lebanese Baath Party, after he emerged from a meeting in Damascus with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Alim Khaddam.

Gemayel will "announce the cancellation of the May 17 agreement within the next few hours. At the same time, a cease-fire will be announced," said Kanso. "All parties have agreed to attend Lebanese reconciliation talks in Geneva March 12."

Jumblatt issued a statement Saturday that Gemayel must cancel the May 17, 1983, Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal accord by midnight Monday or "there will be no room for any dialogue any more."

Israel radio said Sunday Lebanon told Israel this weekend it will cancel the pact and it wanted to negotiate new security arrangements for Israel's northern border. Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor would not verify that, but did not rule out consideration of a new arrangement.

Beirut radio and local papers said Sunday Syrian President Hafez Assad promised Gemayel in Damascus last week to personally guarantee a cease-fire in Lebanon.

But Gemayel seemed to be having trouble persuading rightist Christian leaders to agree to the cancellation.

The main problem with canceling the pact appeared to be procedural. The pact was endorsed by Parliament and the Cabinet, but not ratified by Gemayel. The government has since resigned and is acting only in a caretaking capacity without power to make major decisions.

Syria backs and supplies both Jumblatt's and Berri's anti-government forces.

It also was widely reported Gemayel told Assad he would cancel the pact with Israel in exchange for Syrian help in halting the fighting and holding a reconciliation conference among the Lebanese factions.

Hart grabs Maine win; Mondale close behind

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - Gary Hart took a small lead Sunday in a see-saw struggle with Walter F. Mondale, a head-to-head duel for supremacy in Maine's Democratic presidential caucuses and momentum in the delegate-rich states to follow.

With 153 of 412 cities and towns reporting their caucus results, Hart had 2,795 votes, or slightly over 50 percent, to 2,502 votes for Mondale, or nearly 45 percent.

But Mondale had been the heavy favorite to win in Maine all along, and Hart's strong showing was the first tangible evidence that his win in New Hampshire would produce dividends in other states as well.

Alledged rape victim badgered by attorneys

FALL RIVER - She had finished telling the prosecution how strangers raped her while others stood and laughed. But, to some observers, her ordeal had just begun.

One defense attorney stood to ask how much she drank that night. Another hammered away at inconsistencies in her earlier statements to police. A third noted she has defrauded the welfare department.

They continued their barrage, chipping away at her story until she finally snapped at one, "Let me ask you a couple hundred questions and see what you remember."

For the past week a national audience has received an education on how those accused of rape are defended in court. Through excerpts on the nightly news and long stretches video on cable television, viewers have seen a woman who accused six men of gang rape in a New Bedford bar called Big Dan's defend herself from an onslaught of defense lawyers.

Some haven't liked what they saw.

"She was as much on trial as the defendants," says Darlene Wheeler, a coordinator for New Bedford's Coalition Against Sexist Violence. "A rape victim has to prove her innocence before they can go about proving the defendants guilt."

But to those familiar with the legal system, the only thing unusual about the case is the publicity surrounding it.

"It's rather routine that the defense challenge the credibility of the victim," says Peter Arenella, a law professor and specialist in criminal procedure at Boston University. "The defendant has a constitutional right to confront his accuser."

Attorneys say the credibility of any witness is always fair game to challenge. But when the issue is rape, the test of credibility can be an unpleasant thing to watch.

For Judith Lindahl, who is defending Victor Raposo, the notoriety of the case makes it even more imperative to provide a strong defense.

"In cases like these where there is such a public outcry, people can be vulnerable to corner cutting," she says. "I feel the same obligation to insure these guys get a fair trial as if my own brother were on trial."

Ms. Lindahl says she doesn't believe there is any difference in questioning a woman who says she has been raped to "testing the credibility of a man who says he has been robbed."

Public schools in slump

BOSTON - Boston's residents have lost confidence in their public schools in the past decade, and both blacks and whites now are highly critical of the school system, according to a study released today.

Floyd Fowler Jr., author of the University of Massachusetts report, said that in 1969 blacks and whites were sharply divided over the quality of public education, with blacks rating the system very low and whites holding a much more positive view.

But, he said, more recent research indicates the schools have suffered "a terrible decade from the point of view of public confidence."

Fowler is senior research fellow at the university's McCormack Institute for Public Affairs, which sponsored the report. The data for his report came from institute studies compiled during the past 10 years and a random telephone survey of 900 people completed in 1982.

Of those surveyed, 22 percent were black, corresponding to the city's racial composition, he said.

Asked to rate Boston high school education for students planning to go on to college, 41 percent of black respondents and 44 percent of the white respondents answered "poor."

Megabucks Lottery still needs a winner

BOSTON - No one chose the six magic, instantmillionaire numbers to win the Massachusetts Megabucks lottery this weekend, so next week's jackpot increases to nearly $12 million, lottery spokesman David Ellis said Sunday.

Lottery officials estimate that about 2 million people bought tickets last week in hopes of winning $5.3 million - the state's largest jackpot since the game was first played in November 1982. The unexpectedly large number of bettors increased the jackpot to $8.3 million by late Saturday evening.

However, a computer check Sunday showed that no bettors circled the numbers 5, 11, 14, 15, 30 and 31 on their Megabucks cards.

That means when officials make a drawing next Saturday at 9:30 p.m., the lucky winner or winners will take home a very cool $10 million to $12 million, Ellis said.

Library expenditures Scheduled for decrease

By STACY WIEDERLIGHT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Library spent an estimated $1.7 million on equisitions during the 1982-83 fiscal year, the largest spending budget since 1967.

Gordon Fretwell, associate director for Public Services, said the library's expenditures fall into two categories.

The library spent $800,000 on journals, periodicals, and other continuing obligations, and the remaining $900,000 was used to purchase books, microfilm, and other pieces of literature.

"The University Library added approximately 60,000 volumes last year," Fretwell said.

As for the upcoming '84-'85 budget, Fretwell said about $1.5 million will be spent. Approximately $935,000 will be spent on continuing obligations, and $565,000 will be used to purchase various books and other reference material.

An extimated $73.48 was spent per student in funding the Library.

There are two main reasons why the library is spending more for continuing obligations, Fretwell said. "The library is constantly adding new journals, plus every year there is a rise in the cost of subscription prices."

Fretwell said no budget money was used to run internal computer banks or to pay the staff. The library pays for equipment and computer services yearly from the Administrative Data Processing Service, which is based in the Whitmore Administration Building. Fretwell said about &35,000 was spent last year on computer services from Whitmore.

This library computer system should not be confused with the new Five College Library Computer. The Five College computer was recently installed on the fourth floor of the tower library.

"It's being tested over the course of a year and a half," Fretwell said. "Library records will be loaded into the computer over this time so it can function."

The library's computer will be an invaluable resource once it is operational, she said. "Hampshire College records will be loaded in first, since they are currently operating on a similar budget. After that, records for the University of Massachusetts' two science libraries will be loaded. Next, all the other colleges' (Amherst College, Mount Holyoke and Smith) records will be transferred. The University of Massachusetts' main library will be loaded last, since its data bank is the largest," noted Fretwell.

Mediators analyze conflicts

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Mediation Project, a program designed to resolve conflicts through an impartial third party, is currently conducting an experiment involving campus dormitory conflicts.

Julie Lam, research assistant for the mediation project, and Terry Kerans, a student intern, ace conducting the experiment, involving 17 resident assistants (RAs), from dormitories in the different campus living areas.

The RAs are earning three credits for keeping a daily journal of all conflicts encountered on their floors. The RA's discuss the problems with Lam.

"Throughout the dorm system there are trained mediators," Lam said, "so we keep hearing that mediators are so important and that the quality of handling problems changes through mediation training."

This is what prompted the experiment, Lam said.

By observing the RAs and how they deal with conflicts Lam said she will be able to tell if mediation training for resident assistants, along with the standard RA training will be useful in the future.

Lam said she stresses three main concerns to the RAs as they record in their journals: what the conflict was, how the RA handled it or if he simply ignored it altogether and what the current status of the conflict is.

Most of the conflicts that Lam said she reads about in the journals involve loud music at 3:00 a.m. or roommate relationship problems. A less common problem, which one RA recently encountered, involved a group of students returning to the floor with a dead animal after a night of partying.

"It's interesting to see the problems that go on in the dorms that are not reflected in official statistics," Lam said.

Many questions, such as "is Southwest actually the wildest place to live on campus?" and "Do co-ed floors or all male floors have the most problems?" will be answered when the experiment is concluded at the end of the semester Lam said.

Keran and Lam said they are thinking of conducting another experiment in the fall involving a different group of RAs that have been trained in moderating before the start of the experiment.

Noted spiritual feminist sees growing men-women gap

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

People must unite their spiritual and political selves in order to improve or change the political, economic and social structures of the world, said Starhawk, a noted spiritualist and feminist therapist.

Starhawk, professor of women's studies at Antioch College in California, told an audience of 200 at Smith College Friday that the gap between men and women, and majority and minority is continuously increasing, and "our commitment to changing (this trend) must grow."

"Nothing happens if you just think about it. It only happens if you put energy behind it," Starhawk said.

She said the basis of all systems in society is "power over" others. Teachers have power over students, bosses over employees, and men over women, and "we must find a model of another kind of power," she said.

Starhawk also said the feminist movement must develop strong national cohesion. "It's important for women to celebrate each other, support each other, and nurture each other," she said.

"I think one of the most political things we can do in this world is survive," she said.

Starhawk, who calls herself a mystic, said magic is "the art of changing consciousness at will--it is the art of empowerment."

She dismissed the negative images associated with the words "witch" and magic," two terms that evoke skepticism because they do not relate to the "power over" model or the "accepted" methods of spiritual and political change.

Starhawk said our culture revolves around four stories. The story of Apocolypse, which said time has only a beginning, middle and end, "shapes jobs, political movements, and sexuality," and it must be turned into a cycle with no end, she said.

"The Good Guys vs. the Bad Guys Story" shows that we always seek "right over wrong and light over dark," without thinking about it, Starhawk said.

The third story, called "The Great Man Reveals The Truth and Gives It to a Chosen Few," describes the obvious male-female division in today's society, she said.

The final story, called "Making It" can also be called "The Story of American Classism," she said. Economic stability, "normal" sexuality, and social respectability are valued today, Starhawk said, but they should not determine success.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Trying, someday to fly

So tell me, Ms. MacKay, tell me your ambitions. What are they, were they, and where are you going?" Gulp. How do I respond? How do I tell him that my greatest ambition in life was to be Superman; at least it was at the worldly age of four.

I used to tie a towel around my neck for a cape and spend hours jumping off the trash cans out back, attempting to fly. My brother caught me at flight practice one day and informed me with his lofty, seven-year-old wisdom, "You're a girl, stupid. Girls can't be Superman. You have to be something else." Huh. So that's why I couldn't take off. I was so crushed by the news that I gave up all superhero ambitions until after puberty. There, at the tender age of fifteen, I experienced the greatest disappointed of my life, more traumatic than the knowledge that I'd never leap tall buildings in a single bound — I discovered the truth about Romeo and Juliet.

Claudia MacKay

We had just finished a section on the great works of Shakespeare. I was sitting in my English class, dreaming of Romeo and myself as a tragic heroine, when I tuned in to the teacher's lecture. "...and the actual ages of the characters Romeo and Juliet were sixteen and fourteen, respectively..." Oh God, I thought, I'm over-the-hill already, on the decline, in absolute decay. Juliet was only fourteen when she lived, loved and died a glorious, passionate death! And me, fifteen already and never-been-kissed, with no opportunity whatsoever of becoming a tragic heroine. From the depths of my passionate depression (I did everything passionately when I was fifteen) I decided I'd have to go out and do something great, find my spotlight, since one didn't seem to be shining on me naturally.

As soon as I was old enough, I stuffed my bubbling enthusiasm into sensible white shoes and red-and-white uniform and volunteered at Winchester Hospital. Let's face it, everyone loves a "candy-striper," right? I was absolutely in my element, delivering flowers to new mothers in the Maternity Ward, reading mail to the elderly patients, playing with the toddlers in the Children's Ward — then reality stepped in. Someone forgot to tell me that "saving the world" has its nastier sides, too. How about delivering bags of plasma, all congealed and melting in your hands? It quickly became obvious that I didn't have the stomach for lab work, so I was given the task of discharges — which turned out to be a job I'll never forget.

She had been water-skiing with her husband, Mrs. Donovan confided to me. "And what a ridiculous sport, now look at me..." On and on she droned, me trying to smile and push her without huffing out loud — she weighed considerably more than I, in addition to her hip-to-toe cast. Smiling mechanically, I ran a mental checklist of the Discharge Routine: elevator here; hold doors; back the chair into the elevator so the wheels don't catch in the space between the floor and the elevator car; smile, nod; watch the vase of flowers, don't spill the water; smile, nod; down to the lobby.

By this time Mrs. Donovan had given up her genial chat and was picking on me mercilessly — I was too slow, too fast, too clumsy, spilling the water, etc. By the time we reached our floor, I was seriously considering homicide. Instead, I gave her wheelchair a tremendous shove, forgetting all about the space between the elevator and the main floor, and, of course, the wheels caught in the crack. I watched in horror as Mrs. Donovan flew in one direction, her roses flew in the other, and the elevator doors shut, whisking the empty wheelchair and myself off to another floor! By the time I got downstairs again, everyone was in an uproar: Mrs. Donovan cursing my soul (to this very day, no doubt) the janitors mopping up the water and the rose-petals, and various administrators clucking their tongues and suggesting I take my good intentions elsewhere...so much for my career as an "Angel of Mercy."

So now I'm in college. And soon, God willing, I'll graduate from college. My ambitions? Have they changed? I still try to be that "Angel of Mercy" but I pass out every time I give blood. I've taken all my science courses, so now I know what is and what should be inside all of those plasma bags (still disgusting, but better I should study it than I should carry it). In all the books I've read, all the poets I've studied, the papers I've written, my entire education boils down to the same, basic ideal: your spot is out there, just seek it out, find yourself. Other people have probed, explored, analyzed, theorized, and moralized the world — why not try to discover your own version, your own vision?

My ambition? I guess I still want to be Superman; I keep spreading my wings, maybe someday I'll fly.

The primaries: Who cares?

Call me un-American, call me apathetic, call me what you will, but frankly I just don't give a dam about the Presidential Primaries. I know I should care about who will lead this nation for the next 4 years, and I do somewhat. But ever since Reagan was elected all I've heard in the media is who is going to challenge him for re-election. Frankly I'm sick of it.

My mind is so full of Mondale did this, Mondale didn't do this. Hart did this but no one knows how. The primaries are not full of issues, just people.

Rita Murphy

What does Gary Hart stand for? Mondale? Any of them? I know what Reagan stands for, and I'm sorry I do. Maybe the same can be said about the other candidates when I finally do discover what they stand for. Or maybe they really don't stand for anything.

Something is wrong when candidates concentrate more on name calling and exposing the other candidates weaknesses than on informing the public about what issues they feel strongly about and how they would, if elected, handle them.

Most candidates say they support a freeze, fine so do I, but no one has said how he would go about instituting one. The candidates talk about high unemployment, high interest rates, low wages, etc — But where are the solutions?

It's March, most of the candidates have been campaigning for a year or more. Mondale himself has been toying with the idea of running ever since Reagan was elected. The others at least considered the possibility of running after Ted Kennedy announced a year and a half ago he would not run. Both Jesse Jackson and George McGovern have somewhat of an excuse because their campaigns got started so late.

Alan Cranston was the first to enter the race and the first to withdraw. He ran on a peace platform, big deal, what candidate would not support peace? Ernest Hollings and Reubin Askew also dropped out last week. The ironic thing about them was that neither their names or what they stood for are widely known. The only thing I remember about them was not what they stood for but what they did not stand for; pro-choice.

Probably the saddest part of all this is the fact that one of these men will be facing Ronald Reagan come November. Reagan has sent Americans into far away lands to kill and be killed. He has forced all people, Americans, Russians, people everywhere, to think about the day after and what if...He has helped to take the word public away from the word education. He has turned his back on the poor, the aged, the handicapped, women, and minorities.

Someone must challenge Reagan, someone must defeat Reagan, but that can only be done if a candidate emerges with clear objectives, a good knowledge of what the problems in America are, and most importantly, how they can be solved.

I do not think I'm in the minority in terms of not knowing what the candidates stand for. Nor do I think I'm one of only a few who are having trouble getting interested in an election which is nearly eight months away. Presidential politics simply does not turn me on. And no candidate makes me want to go to the polls and pledge my support to him.

Four years ago, Ted Kennedy proved voters are too smart to be taken in by a name. They wanted then, and should demand now, a candidate who makes his views known; one who is not afraid to confront both the problems and the solutions.

Awareness week is for all

To the Editor,

The Collegian's article Friday on Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week contained several errors — some typographical, some contextual; some minor and some serious. I am not too concerned that my name was spelled in three different ways (although "Throne" is correct) but I am concerned that the cost for the week's activities was inflated by ten times; the funding still needed is about $2500, not $25,000.

More importantly, the statement that the week is intended to "enhance homosexuality" is at least missing the point. Heterosexism is an oppression that affects everyone on campus, and the week is planned with the intention of attracting all kinds of students to discussions of issues relevant to the gay and lesbian community on campus.

Finally, after reading the article one might assume that the Board of Governors was fairly cold in response to the proposal. This was not my impression at all. Many members expressed to me their interest. What I will bring before the BOG next week are specific program items for the Board to consider.

I feel that the Board was very receptive to the idea, and wants more information in order to decide. I hope that regardless of their decision, this may help to clear up some confusion and misinformation about the week. I invite all members of the University community to attend the discussions, workshops and cultural events of Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week.

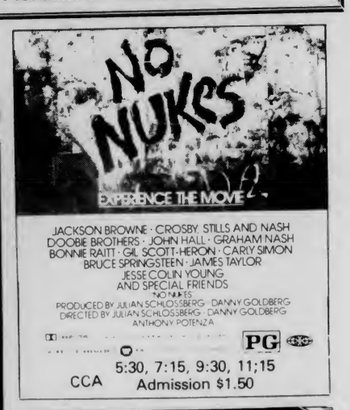
Edwin Green deserved more

To the Editor,

I am not writing to question Minuteman Coach Ron Gerlufson's knowledge of the game of basketball, although many people who attend games do. Instead, I am trying to decide whether he is heartless or merely stupid.

In Saturday night's home finale against Duquesne, Gerlufson pulled the biggest blunder of his very young coaching career. With four seconds left in a game that was assuredly a "blow-out," he decided not to take senior Edwin Green out of the game. After four years of dunking, blocking shots, and pleasing the crowd, Green was denied his moment of glory by the coach. This upset me, and many fans around me, because we had watched Green hustle in an attempt to win this game and many others.

Coincidently, Green surpassed Julius Erving on this very same evening in career points. This may sound extreme, but you can bet that the playing career of "The Doctor" won't end in this manner. Now if the coach simply forgot to remove Green from the game, then that's plain ignorance. If, however, he thought it wasn't necessary, then he ought to spend the off-season recruiting a heart.



Thanks for everything, Edwin, and good luck in the future.

Koko belts the blues

By Jack Bresnahan
Collegian Correspondent

Koko Taylor and her Blues Machine played two capacity shows last Monday night at the Iron Horse, Northampton. Called the current "Queen" of blues singers, Koko demonstrated that she is very worthy of that title.

To say that Koko has a very powerful voice is an understatement. She can make the hair on your arms stand on end. Evidently she's always sung that way. Originally a gospel singer, Koko was discovered by Willie Dixon in the early 60's.

Eventually she crossed over into blues singing and that has become her life. Her husband "Pop" Taylor is her personal manager as well as the band's business and road manager. No road crew with this band. The group travels light since they are in a new town every night. Her band loads and unloads their own equipment.

Koko's musicians have had a lot of experience. I recognized the rhythm guitarist--he was formerly with Buddy Guy's band. Apparently he was stealing some of the thunder from Mr. Guy and decided that it was best for him to move on. He's got a lot more room to move with Koko. And her lead guitarist played with John Lee Hooker as recently as last year when The Hook played at the Student Union Ballroom.

I attended the 10:00 show which lasted an hour and fifteen minutes. The first show lasted for 2 hours and Koko said that the first show was much rowdier than the second and that the crowd didn't want to leave. In the small confines of this coffee shop, you better forget about boogying and be prepared to tap your feet and observe the show. Even Koko couldn't move around as much as she normally does and she seemed to miss the sea of bodies on the non-existent dance floor. Only waitresses, bartenders, and doormen have any room to dance in this place. It almost makes one wish that the Hanger was still open.

Regardless of the physical constraints of the joint, Koko's music was most satisfying.

She started off with "Something Strange Going On In My House," a song directed towards an unfaithful man who claimed that the noise his woman heard late last night was only the cat. In her next one, "Blow Top Blues," she had some bad news for her man. She did "If Walls Could Talk," from their latest album--"When you claimed you been visiting a friend/Aren't you lucky walls don't talk." Next came Willie Dixon's "Spoonful," which everyone's fighting for. And then came a song "I'm A Woman," which sounds like Muddy's "Mannish Boy," except the lyrics were changed to be more suited to Koko Taylor who said, "I ain't ever had enough, I could make love to a crocodile." She sings: "Goin down over yonder/Back over by the sun/Gonna do something to ya/Ain't never been done." Ooh wee indeed! After that came "Hey, Bartender," Floyd Dickson's song popularized by the Blues Bros. The only improvement to it might have been Elwood on the harmonica.

Koko wound up the show with a terrific rendition of "Wang Dang Doodle," a premier blues favorite. She gave her all and was exhausted when I spoke with her after the show. Yet she was very kind and willing to speak to me for quite a while. After commenting on the show, she told me about her five-year-old grandson who's learning to play blues guitar. She is very proud of him. She,"Pops," and I spoke for so long that yours truly missed the last bus from Northampton and had to hitchhike back. In spite of that unexpected turn of events, I felt satisfied and was glad that I went to the show.

By the way, I finally made it home. After a half hour of being passed by countless cars, students and moonlighters, a van finally stopped for me. It had Illinois license plates. It was Koko Taylor with "Pops" and most of her band. Thanks, you' guys.

Koko Taylor, the "Queen" of blues singers.

A spectacle on display

By Charles Francis Carroll
Collegian Staff

What do I know about landscape architecture? Not much. What do I know about Spectacle Island? A great deal, evidently more than any of the architects who submitted proposals to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the National Endowment of the Arts to rehabilitate the island.

I'm referring to the current show at the Student Union Gallery of a design competition held last year to stimulate ideas for converting a Boston Harbor island into a state park. The island, now known as Spectacle Island, was formerly the dumping ground for Boston's refuse. Barges once carried tons of trash out there weekly and then horses pulled it up the hill on sleds. I still have a spur I found in the old concrete horse barn which has a two-inch spike used to encourage those poor steeds. It was not the most pleasant place.

Several decades ago the dumping ceased, and the island has remained more or less untouched. Within a short time it was reclaimed, not by people, but by birds, many of which are relatively rare. They use the island as a rookery for breeding. It is an unusually rich birding area.

We would visit the island as teenagers and even as young men and women. It was our Treasure Island. While the others would go beachcombing and digging in the manmade cliffs (or heaps) for old bottles and other souvenirs, I would venture into the wilderness to view the wide assortment of waterfowl at close range in their mating and nesting cycle.

I was sometimes stopped short in my tracks, face-to-face with a considerable snowy owl. That was all right, though; like Friar Tuck and Robin Hood, we became fast friends.

The island was an idyllic respite away from the barrens of urban renewal, something real and rewarding.

I suppose that the intention of the bureaucrats is to open up this natura wonderland to the public. I suspect however, that when this happens, the birds will leave in due time. It is nature's way.

The first place design won ($10,000.00 because it would make the island an ex tension of the Boston waterfront. All the winners seemed to have a Post-modernist or Neo-classical perspective, as if the Athens of America would finally have its Acropolis. In addition to the five winners there is a fairly large supporting cast o "Commendations," all of which offer similar approach, with a few exceptions including a Futurist Spectacle.

But one design on display is true to the island as I know it. It is entitle "Redemption Island." It didn't wi anything other than at least one person' recognition. Designed by Hans A. Egli an Takeshi Kikuchi, the plan bears out bot sides of the Island's recent history, nature and unnatural.

I said this wasn't chosen, but the design that were chosen won't be used anyway. Instead the powers that be have their own ideas for the island. Most Bostonians are not aware of this. Even though publi review was to play a major role in th selection of a design, this is the first an only exhibition of the works since last June

I always fear for the worst when there isn such a review. Even though the actual pla is not displayed, the exhibit at the Studen Union Gallery is important in its own wa because it demonstrates how inconsiderat we can be towards ourselves, our con stituents, and our environment.

The Right Stuff soars

James Taylor
Collegian Correspondent

The Right Stuff is a film that raises many questions, using test pilots and the space program as its cover. It examines issues from man's fight to succeed to the evaporation of our values in the creation of new ones.

Writer-director Philip Kaufman (The White Dawn, Invasion of the Body Snatchers) has always been an expert at showing contrasts of society. This film is both pro-technological and anti-technological, anti-left and anti-right, sometimes simultaneously.

The Right Stuff opens with the death of a test pilot, which is not the last. With the death of the past, we are confronted with Chuck Yeager (Sam Shepard), a pilot with all the right stuff, who proceeds to break the sound barrier. As time rolls on and more records are broken and set, the Russians manage to get a man into space. This immediately leads the Americans embarking on a space program.

The government gets a group of the best armed forces pilots together, after first considering daredevils and gymnasts. This group includes Alan Shepard, John Glenn, Deke Slayton, and Wally Schina. Yeager refuses, afraid the this new step will take attention away from other programs. The pilots go through a rigorous training program, which is wonderfully satired.

Kaufman's satire of bureaucrats and scientists is well done. You can also read that as cooked well done; the humor goes to an extreme during the testing program scenes and it becomes annoying.

Ths actors were cast perfectly for their parts. They includes Sam Shepard, Ed Harris, Dennis Quaid, Scott Glenn, Fred Ward, Kim Stanley, and Barbara Hershey. Watching Harris smile is hilarious in itself. Bill Conti's musical score serves well and is one of his best. Caleb Deschanel's cinematography reflects the moods of the scenes and characters.

There hasn't been a more inspiring scene in a 1983 motion picture than Chuck Yeager walking from his plane's wreakage.

Kaufman captures the moods and motivations of the pilots and their families very well. You can feel their envies hostilities, and enjoyments.

The Right Stuff is one of the bes American films of the year. ('Rear Window doesn't count and 'Star '80' seems to hav been forgotten). It's a shame that Swedish film is up for best picture in thos damn Academy Awards when there are few good American films left over. An anyway, who did more for European film than 'ohn Ford?

The Right Stuff has been nominated fo eight Academy Awards including Bes Picture, Best Cinematography, and Bes Editing.

The Right Stuff has all the right stu when it comes to good filmmaking in today time. It's not a film to be forgotten.

Minutemen lose fifth in a row, 74-64

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

A familiar scenario was played out again in the regular season finale at the Curry Hicks Cage for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team Saturday night.

The Minutemen, for the fourth game in a row, self-destructed in the first half and dug themselves into a hole they just could not pull themselves out of.

Against Duquesne, Massachusetts had a chance to finish sixth (if they won the game and a coin flip after the game with the Dukes). But after shooting 34 percent in the first half (10-29), Duquesne was on its way to a 74-64 triumph over the Minutemen, a win that left UMass Coach Ron Gerlufsen wondering.

"I'm as puzzled as the rest of the team," a frustrated Gerlufsen said after the game. "We have to try and take a very evaluative look at ourselves. We have to try and put the pieces back together."

It may be too late for that. With the loss, Massachusetts finished eighth with a 6-12 Atlantic 10 mark. That means they will face ninth seeded Rhode Island Wednesday at 9 p.m. at West Virginia. The Rams have given UMass a lot of problems this year.

And if the Minutemen can break out of their slump and top the Rams, undefeated Temple, 18-0 in conference play, is next.

"We are going to have to do some real soul searching," Gerlufsen said. "I think we have lost our intensity to finish the play-off. We get the ball where we want it, but then we self-destruct on the easy shots."

Just like the West Virginia, Temple and Rutgers games, UMass, now 11-16, fell behind in the first half with horrendous shooting. The Minutemen did everything but put the ball in the hoop.

UMass last led at 5-4 off of a Green alley-oop slam from the Carl Smith feed. The Dukes proceeded to outscore UMass, 15-4 and never trailed again.

Duqesne, 10-17,8-10, scored one point in the last 5:10 of the first half, but UMass could only muster up hoops by Green, Donald Russell and Horace Neysmith to narrow the halftime lead to 33-25.

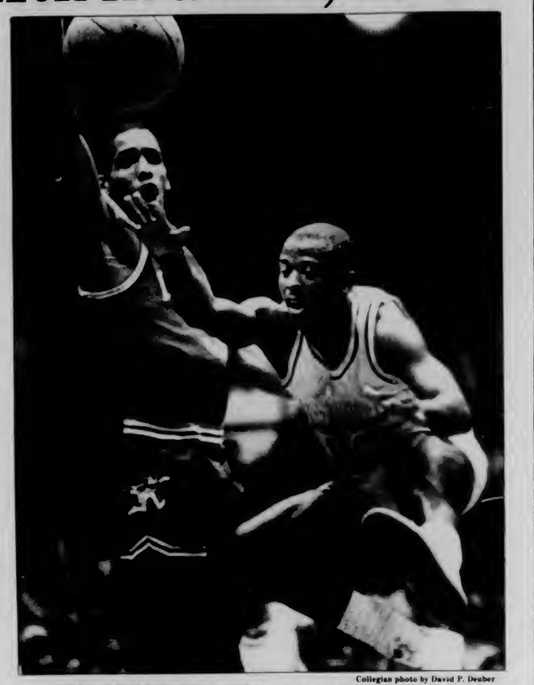
"By no means did we play a great game," Duqesne head coach Jim Satalin said. "UMass shot poorly inside. We've noticed this trend the last few games and tried to push them outside."

"Basically they have a three guard offense," he said. "All you have to do is stop Neysmith and Green inside."

Russell scored six of UMass' first eight in the second half, four from the outside, but UMass couldn't close the gap.

But the Minutemen did make a run at the Dukes. UMass had some success inside (eight points) as they outscored the Dukes 14-4 to pull within one, 55-54 with 5:20 to go off a Russell 20-footer.

But Duquesne responded with a 9-2 spurt of their own and UMass never got any closer than six the rest of the way.



Despite UMass' fifth loss in a row, there were some things to cheer about. Green passed the legendary Julius Erving for second lace on the all-time scoring list. Green has 1379 career points.

Neysmith became the second Minuteman to score 1,000 points this season (Russell being the first) and now has 1008. And Carl Smith tied his season high with 13 assists.

Neysmith led UMass scorers with 19 followed by Russell with 16. John Hempel hit for 13, a great majority from the outside, and Green hit for 12 points.

Greg Harrison led the Dukes with 20 while Rick Suder had 17 points.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS - UMass outrebounded the Dukes 41-27. Senior Craig Smith was held scoreless in his last home game for UMass. Green, Craig Smith and Kurt Funk were honored in pre-game ceremonies.

Edwin Green's Cage farewell is bittersweet

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

The farewell party officially got underway with a standing ovation in the pre-game ceremony at 7:30 p.m.. It officially ended in frustration two hours later with a regular season ending loss.

Later, as the main guest of honor, Edwin Green, sat across from his locker following a good-bye to The Cage and the UMass crowds, that frustration was evident. The standing ovations had been nice, and passing The Doctor in points was terrific, but a win would have been better.

"I wouldn't say it's been good," said Green quietly when asked if the four years had been good to him. "I've tried to make it good, and I've accomplished some of the things I wanted to."

One accomplishment that Green hadn't expected four years ago was becoming the second all-time scorer in Minutemen history, which he did at the 11:30 mark of the first half. It produced the fourth standing ovation of the evening for Green and for awhile everything was celebration-like at the Cage.

"I never took it into consideration," reflected Green, incredulous at the thought. "I didn't think about it til this season. I wanted to get it at home."

The night had begun festive enough, with the 6'7" center shaking his fist in the air and waving as the capacity crowd went wild. The mood became wilder when Green gave them what they wanted with an alley-oop two-hand slam off a pretty Carl Smith lead, three minutes into the game.

From the beginning, the noise level was rising everytime Green touched the ball and for a while it seemed that everything he did would bring the crowd to its feet. And he gave them things to cheer about. There would be the slam, there would be the points mark, there would be another slam, and there would be blocked shots. The crowd loved each and everyone.

But what there wouldn't be was a win, and in that lay the frustration. Four years of frustration and one more time when the team must look inside and pull it together if they are to have any chance at an Atlantic Ten upset tourney run. Green has been there through three coaches, and controversies about his own play as well as his coaches strategies. Yet he came out on top and despite criticism after his sophomore year, left with an exciting anf solid career while becoming the ultimate fan favorite.

"This team's been through a lot of different changes," Green would say. "I felt that we really became a team my junior and senior years."

His third and final college coach, Ron Gerlufsen would add to that. "Edwin Green and Craig Smith (who also said good-bye) are two people that I admire. They are great individuals, they have class, they care for others, on and off the court, and they have sacrificed. They've been with three different coaches and they've been successful. I'm just proud to have coached them."

So now the home season is over and Green won't play again in front of the fans who screamed their praise. Of course though, his memories will remain with him and through all that frustration there has been good.

"Naturally, we've had more bad times than good," he says, the mood beginning to lighten. "But I'll remember the good." Later, he smiles broadly. "And I'll always remember the good."

So will we Edwin. So will we.

Men gymnasts score highest total of season

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

In a full team effort, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team scored a season high 258.95 points at Springfield on Saturday in the final meet of the year before the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships (EIGL's). The Minutemen easily shot down the Indians, which scored 245.15 points.

"I'd like to do it in the EIGL's. That would be even better," UMass Coach Roy Johnson commented on the high score. "The bad thing is that Springfield didn't give us a better meet. The meet was pretty much over after pommel horse. Pommels is no longer our weakest event thanks to Mark Quevillon and Ken Dougherty."

The Minutemen won the pommel horse event with their top score of the season, 42.35-35.10 for Springfield while sweeping the top four spots. Dougherty mastered the event as he scored a 9.0 for the top spot.

Bert Mathieson placed second with an 8.0 performance while Quevillon (8.55) and tri-captain Willie Stevens (8.1) captured the third and fourth places respectively.

Behind the Indian's Bob Piehler (9.4) in the floor exercises, Joe Demarco placed second with a 9.15 performance. Phil Gorgone had another good showing as he came in third with a 9.0.

"Phil has been a good performer for us this year. He had another good performance," Johnson said.

Springfield's co-captain and two-time National Champion in still rings Jeff Coehlo gave the audience his best performance of the year in the event. Coehlo, who has been averaging 9.75 on the event, scored a 9.8 with a spectacular routine filled with strength moves. He performed a strength combination which included a shoot to an inverted cross lowering down to a maltese cross. Coehlo ended his routine with a difficult full twisting double somersault dismount.

Mathieson placed second in the rings event for UMass with a smooth 9.1 routine. Demarco tied for fourth place with Piehler, each with an 8.85.

Coehlo came back in the vaulting event to score a 9.3 for first place. Tri-captain Jim Corbett placed second with a 9.15.

Mathieson captured the parallel bars event with a 9.15 performance, while Tony Sbarra went out with a bang with a 9.35 routine on the high bar.

Despite the high score and a final 9-5 record, Johnson was disappointed with a season that had looked more promising at the beginning of December.

"One-third of our routines had a major break and that's five-tenths off each and there's five points right there," Johnson said. "This year should have been better. Last year we hit a 261. Maybe they're saving it for the championships." The EIGL's are March 9th and 10th at Temple University in Pennsylvania.

Jackson Still in the Race Massacusetts Next

by Marilyn G. Bou
Segun Eubanks

Jesse Jackson finished in fourth place in the New Hampshire primary. The unexpected turnout of Hart proved that while many people are either basking over the victory of Gary Hart or the loss of Walter Mondale many are losing sight of the impressive standing made by the Rev. Jesse Jackson. In being victorious over such Democratic hopefuls George McGovern, Reuben Askew, Allan Cranston, Etc. Jackson hasd shown his ever growing liklihood at becoming the next Democratic National candidate for President. While Hart's winning in New Hampshire has definitly dealt a devasting blow to Mondale and his campaign it has again proven the unpredictability of the primary process. Hart has demonstrated to us all how feasible it is for a longshot to come from behind and conquer. With this thought in mind one can easily understand the massive attempts by Jackson supporters across the state to re-create this turnover scenario in Jackson's favor in the remaining primaries. With the upcoming "Super Tuesday" primaries, efforts are underway to educate all registered voters on the sensitive issues which will determine their future.

Next Tuesday, March 13th, is the Massachusetts Democratic primaries. As has historically been the case, the results of the Massachusetts primary has had enormous effects on the campaigns of candidates. This means that we, as student, have a real opportunity to effect the outcome of the democratic rate for the presidency. Here at UMass the registration campaign has been enormously successful: registering over 3,000 new voters. UMass students have potential voting power more than ever before.

PHYLISS HYMAN, ROY AYERS: More Than a Concert

by Segun Eubanks

When I returned from the Phyliss Hyman, Roy Ayers concert Friday night, a friend asked me, "How was the concert?" I just smiled and said, "You had to be there!" That is why it is so difficult to describe to those who did not make it, what turned out to be one of the best Black musical entertainment performances to hit the valley in years.

Phyllis Hyman and Roy Ayers performed March 2, 1984 at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College compliments of the Black Students Alliances at Smith. What I expected to be just another concert, turned out to be two excellent performances which consisted of comedy, theater, commercials, poetry, message, audience participation, and of course dynamite music.

Roy Ayers opened the show, and gave the audience what he called, "a total music perspective." He played jazz, soul, R+B and funk, many times in combination all added to good sound. He even played a country/western tune. Ayers' said, "there's always a message in my music. Part of this message is referred to in title of his latest album, "Lots of love", which he sold himself at the concert. "That's right, I'll sell my own album. Just five bucks! You won't find it cheaper anywhere else!"

By the way, many people may not be aware that aside from being an excellent musician, composer, and singer Roy Ayers is also quite a comedian. The audience spent almost as much time laughing as tapping their feet and clapping their hands to the music. Ayers' jokes, skits, and down-to-earth nature, made it easy for him to recieve a very enthusiatic response from the audience. Besides, as Roy put it, "I don't like dull, tired crowds!"

The instrument which Roy Ayers plays is called a Deagan Vibraharp or the "Vibes", and he plays it beautifully. The Roy Ayers' band was also extremely talented as Ayers had no qualms about mentioning, "my band is bad!" Particularly outstanding were drummer Dukejue Perdue, who could do more with his feet than many drummers can do with their hands, and Saundra Matthews, whose voice range and jazz style can be compared to only one other female vocalist - Phyliss Hyman.

After his performance, Ayers went to the lobby to sign autographs. As he said to one fan, "I like to be close to the people."

What is often the case at concerts is that when the opening group is really good the main group is very dissappointing. However, Phyliss Hyman killed this theory with a startling display of showmanship and talent. Phyliss stole the show with just three musicians,(although very talented) and no backgroup singers. Like Roy Ayers, Hyman spent a lot of time talking to the audience. She was so confident and relaxed on stage that there were times when I felt she was only talking to me. One of my friends put it very well when she said "Phyliss was raw, even brazen yet she was very much a lady."

Hyman's strong jazz influence and style came through in all of her ballets, even the more up tempo R+B numvers. She used the "scating" style of singing often, something done very rarely in popular music and done well even more rarely. At one point, Hyman even whistled part of a song and sounded like a finely tuned instrument.

Phyliss Hyman talked to the audience about how she began her career, her experiences in the Broadway production "Sophisicated Ladies," her love life, and even the commercial jingles she sings for televison. Like Roy Ayers, she was very funny and proved to be not only a brilliant singer and song writer but a very capable entertainer.

Anyway, like I said, "You had to be there." Ayers and Hyman complimented each other so well with Ayers bringing the audience to their feet and Hynman mellowing them out and bringing it home. Both artists even took the time iout to acknowledge outstanding author James Baldwin, who recieved a standing ovation (as did the two featured performers).

The only negative aspect I found was when Phyliss Hyman began singing her commercial jingles and it became slighty borin g. This was very easy to overlook as the performances of these two great artists, their music, talent, creativity, and message made this concert one of the most memorable and successful shows the valley has or will ever see.

AFRICA: The Struggle for Food

Against a backdrop of drought and starvation, leaders from the nine-nation Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC- pronounced SAH' DEK), meeting in Lusaka early this month, obtained renewed commitments for regional assistance from major donors.

Attending the annual consultative session of the four-year-old organization, along with the member states, were 26 governments and 23 international organizations that are being asked to help offset the costs of southern Africa's five-year drought, the worst to hit the region in half a century.

Reports were heard from all five working sectors (agriculture, transport and communication, industry, manpower, energy) of SADCC, which was established to promote regional cooperation and reduce dependence on white-ruled South Africa. But the emphasis was on agriculture and food, including systems for produce distribution. A staff report estimated direct costs from the lack of rain at nearly $1 billion, a figure that does not include the losses of agriculturally-dependent commercial and industrial enterprises.

SADCC is seeking about $550 million for various projects, the largest of which are in the transport sector. Some of these, including rehabilitation of the rail line between Malawi, Zambia, and Mozambique, are already under construction.

Along with emergency food aid, SADCC members have launched studies on food programs that can bring long-term gains to the region. One became the center of controversy at the Lusaka meeting because of a stipulation by the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) that its funds not be used in any way that would benefit Angola, Mozambifque, or Tanzania.

Various restrictions have been imposed by both Congress and the administration on bilateral assistance to Angola, whose government the U.S. has never recognized, Mozambique, with whom the State Department has only recently improved ties, and Tanzania, which AID considers in arrears on loans.

But SADCC, during a lengthy closed-door debate, rejected any exlusionary clause and pressured USAID to compromise. As a result, the project at issue- research on drought resistant sorghum/millet to aid the region's poorest peasant farmers-may receive about $14 million of the required $17 million from the U.S. and the remainder from Canada or other donors. Zimbabwe Agriculture Minister Denis Norman is expected to visit Washington to iron out the details.

Almost all outside funding for SADCC has come from Western governments or organizations, although China has contributed to a Botswana railway project and continues its support for the Tanzania/Zambia line. Criticism of the Western role has been voiced by the Economic Commission for Africa, a UN-related agency headquartered in Addis Ababa.

As conference chairman, Botswana Vice President P.S. Mmusi, and host, Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, both made clear, the charges have irritated SADCC's members.

"SADCC is a product of the political will and perceived economic needs of all or members," Mmusi declared. "The myth of northern domination has been propagated even by an organization of which we ourselves are members and whose very reasons for existence is to support our development efforts, not to obstruct them."

Kaunda also denied the domination allegation and added that the ties to the West did not offer the prospect of a share in teh West's economic recovery. "We cannot even be sure the crumbs will fall on us," he told the delegates.

Among SADCC members, all but Malawi are on the UN Food and Agricultural Organization's (FAO) list of the 24 worst-afflicted African states. A total $3.3 million is needed by those countries, FAO estimates, if large-scale human suffering and death is to be avoided. Approximately $1.4 million has already been delivered or pledged, with $700,00 of the remainder required by next month.

In human terms, the Catholic Relief Service which earlier this year asked its field representatives to estimate the impact of worsening conditions on children, reports that without the emergency deliverires, 40,000 will die in the coming months in Mozambique, 30,000 in Lesotho, 15,000 in Ghana, and a similar number in most of the rest of the 24.

Last week, eight members of Congress called for a quick U.S. response to the crisis. Sen. John Danforth (R-MO), who made a recent tour of several affected African countries, warned that unless both Houses act with unaccustomed speed "people will die by the hundreds of thousands."

A joint press conference on Feb. 21 was hosted by Sen. Rudy Boschwitz (R-MN), sponsor of a $150 million supplemental appropiation bill, and Rep. Ted Weiss (D-NY), whose parallel proposal is for $350 million.

Voicing a view shared by a number of interested members, Rep. William Gray (D-PA) said the administaration's $90 million emergency food aid request is "simply not enough" to deal with the scale of the famine problem in Africa.

In Congressional testimony and other public statements, administration officials have described the U.S. share as "generous" compared with other donors.

Paulo Friere Speaks on Social Transformation and Education

by Segun Eubanks

Brazilian educator and author Paulo Friere spoke last Monday at Herter Hall.

World Renown Brazilian educator and author Dr. Paulo Friere, distingished guest of the University of Massachusetts school of Education, highlighted his two week visit with a kenynote address in a panel discussion on eduction and social transformation, on February 27,in fron of a standing room only audience at Herter Hall.

The Panel consisted of some of the foremost educators of social transformation in the five-college area and was mediated by UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who described Dr. Friere as "an educator of liberation and leader of literary campaigns the world over." Each panelist discussed his/her work and how it related to social change, then posed a question (s) to Dr. Friere for further discussion.

David Magnani, from the Citizen's Involvement training project at UMass, spoke of his involvement in a parent/child daycare program that created an "educational community." According to Magnani, learning is a means of being involved in the creation of knowledge. This and many other Friere principles are "in conflict with the American educational system." said Magnani, "Structures educate not people." One of the problems Magnani faces as an educator of social transformation is that "many organications deisgned for positive change have a strong tendency to assimilate back" into the societal structure, thus becoming ineffective. Mr. Magnani's question to Dr. Friere was, "How does a progressive organization maintain effective long term assimilation?"

Professor Johnella Butler, from the Afro-American studies department at Smith College focused her presentation on the importance of cultural identity especially at predominantly white-institution such as Smith, "definite structured educational setting." Butler talked about her work with the Bridge Program at Smith, a program for Third World freshpersons to help them to adjust and excel to the Smith College environment. "As a teacher struggling towards cultural pluralism, I feel the resposnity of making students critical thinkers." said Butler. The workshops of the Bridge program and the Afro-American studies courses are tools which raise cultural awareness and help minority students to "think critically about who they are and what they can do." Professor Butler also pointed that since the Bridge program has been in operation Third World students have become more assertive on campus.

Butler then pointed out some problems she has encountered in her attempts to teach students critical thinking and to raise cultural awareness. Many students who reach a certain awareness get frustrated with the eduction system, which in many ways has alienated students from reality, according to Butler. Many of Butler's students respond in total disbelief when confronted with certain realities such as racism or clasism which "flies in the face of what they have believed all their lives." Finally many white students encounter serious guilt and responsibility said Butler. Her question was how do educators of social transformation deal with the frustration, disbelief, and guilt that so many students must deal with when faced with certain realities.

Juan Aulestia, Director of a adult educational literacy program called Casa Latina in Northampton, addressed the issues of illiteracy and the political implications of the American educational system. Aulestia began by stating "Those of us in Latin America who believed in social transformation in a revolutionary sense, love and respect companero Paulo very much."

"The educational system in the U.S. is a process ofreproduction and a reflection of the dominant culture," continued Aulestia, "designed for moral, cultural, and political domination." Aulestia talked about illiteracy in America as a product of the educational system. Over 65 million Americans are functionally illiterate. "A vast majority being non-white." Aulestia said. He compared the illiteracy rate of Mel King, Boston Political Leader.

Melvin H. King, who last November became the first black candidate in history to appear on the final ballot in a Boston mayoralty election, will give a lecture titled, "The Rainbow Connection in American Politics: From Rosa Parks to Today" at Smith College on Tuesday, March 6, at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall auditorium. King's talk, this year's Leanna Brown '56 Lecture of the Department of Government, is free and open to the public.

King will also give a lecture on "The Significance of the Jesse Jackson Campaign for National Black Politics" Thursday, March 8th at 8:00 p.m. at Hampshire College in Franklin Patterson main Lecture Hall.

King is now adjunct professor of urban studies and director of the Community Fellows Program at the Massachusetts Institute for Technology. He joined MIT in 1971 as associate director of the fellows program that he helped to create and as a lecturer in urban studies. He assumed his current positions in 1976. Latinos in the U.S. to those in Latin America stating that the U.S. has "systematically excluded" people of color from education.

Aulestia stated the people of coloar are fighting for three basic freedoms: freedom from ignorance, freedom from exploitation, and freedom from inequality. Social transformation just for education is a naive concept according to Aulestia "we must change to context of society." he said "and re-educate the educators." His question was simply, "Is there any hope for America?"

The first thing Paulo Friere did when he began his presentation was to "break down the scheme of the panel. "We must be disruptive and in constant change" said Friere. With that he invited educator and author Ira Shaw who was in the audience to join the panel and give his insights. Referring to the assimilation question, Shaw spoke of change organizaitons being "powerfully unsettling yet always disintegrating around you." He said that assimilation is inevitable therefore organizations must always be looking on to the next step. "Each episode takes us to new problems and there must always be means of disruptive evaluation." said Shaw

Shaw spoke of change organizations being "powerfully unsettling yeat always disintegrating around you." He said that assimilation is inevitable therefore organizations must always be looking on to the next step. "Each episode takes us to new problems and there must always be means of disruptive evaluation." said Shaw.

Friere continued his presentation stating that educationis a human process and we are taking part in a permanent process of learning. "In ther beginning education was an act of reading reality. As time went on eduction became a political process and event. "said Friere systematic education has the task to reproduce the dominate ideology. To do this education must hide fundamental aspects of reality, said Friere, "The mystification of reality and ideology without science are aspcts of an education that goes toward those who have power."

In order to combat this Friere said educators must, "Invite students not to accept anything but to challenge everything. Not to be sure of your own sanity." Today's education, according to Friere, offers security and comes back to his torical amnesia.

On the question of hope for America, Friere said, "America is a fatalistic society. "But he stressed that the future dpends on the American people, who must go beyond Fatalism and "get history into your hands." Friere continued, "There is no hope without tommorrow. Hope gives you a push in the bac k...you must have a different future. Myths prevent hope and profect a false future."

Friere closed by noting that culture is necessary for revoltion. "Through culture comes liberation. He added. He ended the two and half hour discussion, with perhaps the most important message of the evening: "It is through practice which I created my responsibility not through speech."

Nummo News urges you to use that power in the most effective way possible. We believe that a vote for Jesse Jackson and a pledge to help his campaign will be a statement to government that we will no longer stand for the petty twidle-de, twidle-dum politics that we have been sublected to for so long. We do not believe that Jesse Jackson is the "minorities" candidate. instead he and the Rainbow Coalition represent the interests of a majority of American citizens. So we urge you to take a serious look at this campaign. Pay attention to the issues not the theatrical media-hype that has been associated with the Jackson campaign. If you do this you will see that Jesse Jackson is indeed, The People's Candidate.

"Hands In The Mirror"

by Janice Lowe

On March 2, at 8:00 pm, Women's Community theatre presented the premier of "Hands in the Mirror" by Leona Nicholas Welch. "Hands in the Mirror" is a dance and theatre piece that celebrates the lives of old black women. Directed and choreographed by Ingrid Askew and Pati O'Neal respectively the piece interweaves dance and poetry to share and explores experiences that are unique to Black women.

"Hands in the Mirror" is divided into seven stages in the lives of women, "Knowing and Caring," "Birthin," "Tired Old Women," "Cookin Pot." "Sunday Mornin," "Prayerful Exuberance," and "Wisdom, Age and Loneliness." Enlarged black and white slides of women serve as a backdrop to the dancers and actors as they work to create a tribute to the women who have nurtured them.

The piece began with a prologue and brief slide show. "Hands in the Mirror," said narrator Joyce Blanton, "is a dance poem dedicated to all Black women everywhere."Indeed the strength and spiritually of the Black woman was tangible and began to warm the audience as soon as the first slide was shown. One photograph that stood out in particular was of a quietly strong woman with snowy white hair. She was sitting on a couch covered with a crocheted afghan. Her face was tilted up and she looked as if she were talking to her saviour or thinking about the children and grandchildren she hadn't seen for awhile.

The first section of the piece, "Knowing and Caring," was narrated by Joyce Blanton and choreographed by Patti O'Neal. While the poetry told the story of a girl who had come home feeling depressed after an evening out with a young man, Patti O'Neal, dressed in a party dress, and holding high-heeled shoes in her hand danced the part of the sad girl trying half-heartedly to hide her tears from her grandmother. "she sknew what I was feeling," said the narrator, "Hail Mary, Hail Mary, Hail Mary... ten for me, ten for her arthritis and ten for the people she knew who were worse off than the both of us."

The next section was entitled "Birthin." Along with Lillian Coleman who was the narrator, dancers Ilene Barnes and C. Dale Goodson effectively evoked the pain, fear and ultimate exaltation of giving birth. The image of C. Dale Goodson appeared on a screen in silhouette as she artistically exagerrated the contractions of a woman in labor. Dancing to "Juba Juba" by Yusef Lateef, Ilene Barne's movements were broad and angry possibly in an effort to remind us that giving birth is painful, risky, and nothing short of miraculous. Her body seemed to be saying, "respect me for my labor." The image of the dancer in silhouette who seemed to be dressed in African clothing, reminded us that the cries of women in labor are ancient, universal and echo throughout the world every second of every day. "Tired Old Woman" was the title of the third section. Dancing to "Hard Blues" by Julius Hemphill, Joyce Blanton who did the narration and dancer Zanthia Conway painted a potrait of a lonely defeated woman who found solace and a sense of purpose in shopping for herself. Shuffling her feet in time to a disquieting blues, Conway's dancing conjured up images of dirty sidewalks, crowded buses and the neighborhood stores of a city.

Next to "Sunday Mo'in" ,"Cookin Pot" was the most energetic of the sections. Leona Welch's poem romantcized the preparation of meals as a child would. In the poem, cooking was described in musical terms. Grandma's movements in the kitchen were likened to those of an orchestral conductor. Robyne Blocker, the young girl who danced "Cookin Pot" really communicated that sense of wonder a child feels as she watches magic being made in a kitchen. Children in the audience were visibly mesmerized by Robyne's spirited performance. In contrast to "Sunday Mo'in" which captured the emotional fervor of the traditional Black church, was Irma Askew's captivating interpretation of the poem "Prayerful Exuberance." Askew captured the spiritof a woman who is always joyful in her tears because her faith is strong. "My boy is home," she said, One foot gone ain't too much to fuss about." "Widsom, Age, and Loneliness" was perhaps the most moving of sections simply because of th e weight of the theme. Too often, loneliness goes hand-in-hand with old age. Ilene Barnes did the narration for this section as Patti O'Neal danced the role of an old woman who felt bitterness at being alone after a life of service to others. "Is this the price I pay," said the narrator, "for having worked hard," "...for having buried two sons?"

"Hands in the Mirror" is a moving tribute to the strength and dignity of old Black women, who are the rocks on which we lean, the backbones of families and the keepers of tradition.

"Hands in the Mirror" can be seen at Hampden Theatre, UMass on March 8, 9, and 10th at 8:00pm. The piece can also be seen at the Zone in Springfield on March 16, 17, 23, and 24th at 8:00 pm and March 18, and 25th at 2:00 pm. Tickets will be sold at Hampden Theatre and at the door

Holder Mesmorizes

by Janice Lowe

On Monday, February 27, before a full house at Bowker auditorium, Geoffrey Holder proved himself to be a truly uncommon man. Although familiar to most of us as the bald-pated exotic from the 7-up commercials, Holder is a dancer, choreographer, actor, writer, composer, designer, gourmet cook, and proud Trinidadian. Holder is also known for his delightfully wicked laugh which he let loose upon request.

Pressed in a white shirtless suit that showed off his magnificent chest and "honey-brown" skin, Holder capivated the audience with a potpourri of dancing, humor, acting, and fatherly advice.

Holder is amazingly graceful for a big man. He transformed himself into the stateliest of birds and assumed various postures of womanhood. He became a six-year old girl, an aging prostitute, and a bewigged stripper as easily as one would change clothes.

Holder's discourse was filled with such pearls of wisdom as "earn your sleep," "fellows should learn to kiss thier fathers," "remember that your parents and grandparents were once young," and girls should "fluff up" while fellows should "be cool".

One student, thoroughly impressed with Holder's performance, said, "Geoffrey Holder is a real man. He believes that men should be women." "More marriages would work," said Holder, "if everyone thought that way."

Geoffrey Holder delighted the crowd at Bowker Aud. last Monday.

February is known to many people as as Black History Month. However, NUMMO NEWS believes that every month is Black History Month and we must always be in the process of learning of our history. It is in the tradition of this, that we present a series of articles on some of our Black men and women who make our history rich and beautiful.

Cater Goodwin Woodson, one of many unknown black educators, is credited to the founding of Black History Month. An eminent Black Historian, Woodson was one of the first pioneers in studying the history of the Black race. His efforts contributed to a new era of historyical research and study, as a result he is one of the major factors our history has not gove into oblivion.

Born in Virginia in 1875, Dr. Woodson was one of nine children who were the offspring of ex-slaves. When Woodson was seventeen, he moved with his family to Huntington, West Virginia. With a very limited educational background, he worked in the coal-mines of West Virginia for several years. In 1895, Woodson entered Douglas High School in a very short time he mastered common school subjects (largely from self-instruction) and graduated. He became a teacher in the public school system for two years after his graduation, and later became principal of his high-school alma-mata. A very ambitious man, Woodson continued his education at Berea College in Kentucky and spent several summers at the University of Chicago. In 1907, he recieved his bachelor's degree from the latter. During this time (1903-1906) Woodson was a supervisor of schools in the Phillipine Islands.-because of this he was very familiar with the spanish language. Following this experience, he spent a year traveling through Asia and Europe, spending one school semester at Sorbonne, where he picked up fluency in french.

After Home-coming he returned to the University of Chicago and was awarded the M.A. in 1908.-the next year Woodson began working on his doctorate at Harvard

He recieved his PH.D from Harvard in 1912, and has the distinction of being the second black to ever recieve the degree in history from that institution.

In 1915, Woodson created the ASNLH, now Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, which has given tremendous impetus to black scholarship. The Journal of Negro History remains a beacon among black academia and the Negro History Bulletin is testimony to Woodson's commitment to the masses as well. Without peer, it stands out as Carter G. Woodson's noble legacy for black people. Yet there are those who would argue that the sucess of Negro History Week, which under the Carter administration was extended into Black History Month, was Woodson's greatest legacy to black people.

Through the popularity of February is widely established in elementary and secondary schools, as a time for observances of Black history, few educators out side of the South are familiar with its orginator, Dr. Woodson.

In 1926, the ASNLH took over an annual celebration by the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity designed to laud the literary achievements of blacks, and expanded it into a celebration of black history.

The Negro History Week Celebration and related activities of the ASNLH were collectively, organized attempts by Dr. Woodson to improve the quality of life of Africans in the United States.

In retrospect, his implicit faith in the power of ideas to change behavior and in facts to remove the stain of racism seem simplistic and idealistic; yet, it was to this notion that he poised his prolific pen.

Carter G. Woodson, 1875-1950, educator, author, Black historian, and leader of the advacement of Black History Month.

Woodson's most compelling arguments are contained in Miseducation of the Negro. Woodson wrote:

"To educate the Negro we must find out exactly what his background is, what he is today, what his possibilities are, and how to begin with him as he is and make him a better individual of the kind he is. Instead of cramming the Negro's mind with what others have shown they can do, we should develop his latent powers that he may perform a part of which others are not capable."

This success he brought to the national level with Negro History Week. The legacy of his own life-a testimony to patience and perserverance is one that few have snatched. He spent fourteen years earning three college degrees,working full-time all but two of them. With this, he never forgot where he came from as Romero cites, "He was a man who could write on so august a body as the U.S. Supreme Court and turn with equal ability to the subject of the lowly (sic) Negro washerwoman."

Woodson died during the night at his Washington D,C, office-home on April 5, 1950. Through relegated to a footnote in the annals of U.S. historiography, Carter G. Woodson lives on in the fruit of his work.

DREAMS

We all have dreams
to help us struggle through life

DREAMS that make us feel
"Content" and very much "for Real"

To dream is a natural form of thought:

So when we
we release our true inner visions
In hopes that one day
they'll be more than just inhibitions

DREAMS can lift us up to a plateau of Superiority
but;
After we awaken ourselves,
we must go in a world of inequality

And to over-power the worries of society that sometimes make us sour

We must live, feel and Bare the pain and struggle that all brothers and sisters share

And we must strive to bring our dreams alive

For if we don't "live" as well as "dream"

Our purpose will surely die.

Chancellor condemns Anti-Semitic actions

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Individuals responsible for three recent acts of blatant anti-Semitism on the University of Massachusetts campus will face discipline to include suspension or expulsion from the school when caught, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said yesterday in a statement from Boston.

Two weeks ago, a female Orchard Hill dormitory resident said she was sleeping in her room between 9 a.m. and noon when someone poured red liquid under her door and put a note in the puddle. It said, "death to all Jews."

A male Orchard Hill resident said he underwent a similar experience about the same time, when red liquid was put under his door and pictures on his door were scraped off while he was asleep.

A third student reported a harassment incident to Marcia Black, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) Jewish Awareness trainer, which occurred on the Campus Center Concourse Feb. 15. Black said the non-Jewish student was working at the United Jewish Appeal table when a man repeatedly uttered anti-Semitic slurs.

The man left and returned a few minutes later with five other men, and all six began to verbally harass the student until people in the vicinity began to take notice, Black said.

Duffey said measures are "being taken to identify the individuals responsible for these acts. These incidents of anti-Semitism are abhorent and will not be tolerated on this campus."

Associate Dean of Students Robert Brooks said "an attack on any minority or individual is an affront to all" and "clearly overt acts of anti-Semitism" like these serve only to create a climate of fear.

"It is a real problem that requires a tremendous amount of education and sensitivity," Brooks said. "The feeling on campus is 'there is no problem,' but here are three frightening, clear cut cases."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel praised the "strong resolve" of the administration to deal with the incidents, but noted the need for "the continuation and strengthening of the ongoing effort to deal with educating" the community on Jewish awareness.

"It (the incidents) reminds us that we really have to deal with anti-Semitism in an ongoing way," Perlmutter said. "I'm very concerned that these are serious incidents in the space of a short amount of time."

Perlmutter said that while incidents of anti-Semitism come and go on campus, there may be a certain undertone not always acted upon and the community must continue to work hard to combat these attitudes.

The male student said he was "cautious about confronting people with the incidents because I don't want it to explode into anything."

But the student said he is worried. "I don't mind disagreement when it comes to political views or someone's actions, but when people harass you because of religious beliefs, I get angry."

In response to the recently reported acts, the Student Government Association (SGA) has re-established a Jewish Caucus, and SCERA is conducting support and informational workshops. The Undergraduate Student Senate also passed a resolution last week condemning all acts of anti-Semitism.

Town meeting seats open

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Students may still wage write-in campaigns for nine uncontested Town Meeting member seats in the Amherst April 10 election.

Five of the uncontested seats are located in Precinct 3, which encompasses Sylvan, Northeast and Central Residential Areas. The five seats are for three year terms. Town Clerk Estelle Matusko said yesterday that students, who are registered voters, may still write in the candidates of their choice on the ballot.

The deadline for registering to vote in the town election is 10 p.m. March 21.

Matusko said the elections are decided by the majority of the votes casted. It is still possible for unannounced candidates to win seats in the Town Meeting even if a person has not filed nomination papers, she said.

Other uncontested seats include: a seat for a one year term in Precinct 1; a seat for a two year term in Precinct 5; a seat for a three year term in Precinct 6 and a one year seat in Precinct 7. Persons who wish to run a write-in campaign must live in the precinct they wish to represent.

The University of Massachusetts is located in Precincts 3 and 4. Matusko said the number of uncontested seats in precincts containing UMass dormitories is not unusual and has been a persistant pattern since 1971.

"Though we have many of those thousand at the university (registered to vote), they are most interested in the presidential primary election and are not usually cognizant of local elections," Matusko said.

Joel Weissman, director of the Student Center for Educational Research and [illegible], said he will be working to reverse the pattern of uncontested seats in Town Meeting by organizing information sessions about Amherst, issues in the upcoming election and town government following the March 21 registration deadline.

"We'll tell students how they can get involved and what their options are," Weissman said.

Kurt A. Norwood, a candidate for a Town Meeting member seat, said many students are reluctant to run for Town Meeting because they "don't feel that they are part of the community, which they are."

"Many (students) come out of an atmosphere of having lived in a town for many years but students became part of the community by moving in the dorms," Norwood said.

Hegeler accuses senator of harassment in poster fight

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A Southwest Residential Area senator has been accused of harrassment by a former Student Government Association (SGA) presidential candidate who claims he placed her old campaign posters up around campus.

Fran Hegeler, who ran with Siobhan Powers for the SGA presidency last year, said that she caught Senator Bill Collins and Erik Eriksson, a friend of Collins, placing her old campaign posters on Herter Hall Sunday at 12:30 a.m.

"I was coming back from studying when I saw Erik and Bill taping posters on to the windows of Herter, Erik tried to hide the posters behind his back when I saw them. I talked to Erik about why he did it and he told me that Bill (Collins) thought it would be a good idea," said Hegeler.

"Erik told me that they placed the posters around campus because I betrayed them with my new political views. Bill wouldn't talk to me, he ran away shortly after I came up to them, but I did have words with both of them and saw the posters in their possession," Hegeler said.

Collins said yesterday "whoever put up the posters has a great sense of humor, a sense of humor that should be injected into the Senate."

When asked directly if he had placed the posters up Collins evaded the question by saying at first "what posters?" and then later saying "whoever put up the posters, be it a single person or a group of people, is a creative genius and has a sharp comic mind."

Collins, according to SGA treasurer Eric Nitzsche did put up the posters. "Bill told me he did it because it was funny," Nitzsche said.

Eriksson said he had no contact with Hegeler Sunday night. "I didn't even see her at all," said Eriksson, who fell silent after being told by Collins to "say nothing, tell him 'no comment' let's go."

U.S. condemns Iraq for using chemical warfare

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States yesterday condemned Iraq for using lethal chemical weapons in its war with Iran, State Department spokesman John Hughes said.

"The United States strongly condemns the prohibited use of chemical weapons wherever it occurs," Hughes said. "There can be no justification for their use by any country."

He said U.S. officials had concluded from "available evidence" - such as independent news reports and "non-Iranian" sources - that Iraq had used the weapons.

He did not elaborate on what evidence the United States has and refused to say who officials thought had supplied the weapons to Iraq.

The Iraqi use of the weapons makes more urgent the need to negotiate an international treaty banning production and stockpiling of chemical weapons, Hughes said.

The United States has blamed the Soviet Union for the use of chemical weapons in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia and has called on the Soviets to negotiate a new global treaty banning the substances.

Vote may be close on prayer in schools

WASHINGTON (AP) - Backers of a proposed constitutional amendment to permit voluntary prayer in public schools, claiming Senate support for the measure is at an all-time high, are predicting a close vote in the Republican-run chamber.

The Senate began debate on the amendment yesterday, with Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., leading the charge. "It's the best opportunity to pass this amendment that we've had" in more than a decade, Baker said.

But a top Senate GOP official, who did not wish to be identified by name, said it was still not certain that backers could muster the needed two-thirds vote of the Senate - or 67 votes - to approve the measure.

A long Senate debate was anticipated, although it was not clear whether a threatened filibuster by liberals would materialize.

Court to hear CIA case

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court yesterday agreed to decide whether the Central Intelligence Agency may be forced in some cases to reveal its intelligence sources.

The justices will hear the government's appeal from a ruling that could force the CIA to disclose the names of researchers who took part in a program involving brainwashing and experimental drugs.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here ruled last June 10 that the CIA may not refuse automatically to disclose the names of researchers involved in MKULTRA - the code name for the program.

Some individuals were unwittingly administered LSD and other drugs in the research program during the 1950s and 1960s, and at least two people died because of the experiments.

DA probes infant's death

BOSTON - An 11-month-old boy died yesterday morning after drinking hospital-prepared formula loaded with three tablespoons of salt, and investigators said they did not know how the bottle had been contaminated.

The infant, Damon Robinson of Springfield, had been brought to Children's Hospital a week ago because he weighed only 12 pounds and had not been growing, according to Nancy Collins, a spokeswoman for the hospital.

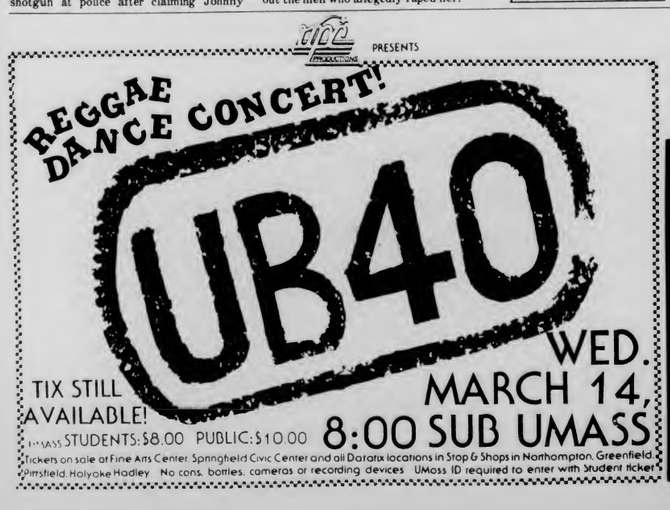
Damon was fed the tainted formula Saturday morning, and then had seizures, said his mother, Janice Robinson, 19. He was put on a respirator so he could breathe and lingered in critical condition until his death from salt intoxication at 5:15 a.m. yesterday, Collins said.

Hospital officials do not know how the sodium chloride, or table salt, got into the formula for the routine feeding, and they have called in the Suffolk County district attorney's office to investigate.

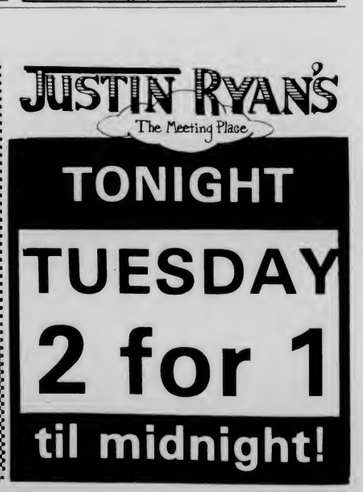
Victim testifies in gang rape trial

FALL RIVER, Mass. - An angry woman told police she wanted to "identify the bastards" who raped her on a barroom pool table, but failed to point out two of six defendants when she returned to the bar later that night, a policeman testified yesterday.

Meanwhile, documents released by the court showed that two defendants told police they held the woman while another man raped her on a pool table.



And a separate police report filed with the court recounted an October 1983 incident in which the bartender pointed an unloaded shotgun at police after claiming Johnny Carson told him "the devil was going to get him."



New Bedford police officer, Adrian Medeiros, testified he went into Big Dan's tavern in the early morning hours of March 7, 1983, with a woman who told police she had been raped and jeered by a crowd of men in the bar.

Medeiros testified the woman told police "I want to point out those bastards," but when they returned to the bar, she pointed out three men who she said were in the bar when she was attacked. She did not point out the men who allegedly raped her.

Female reports auto abduction led to injuries

By BOR BURGESS
Collegian Staff

A local female college student was still hospitalized yesterday with head injuries following an alleged abduction early Saturday morning, Amherst Police said.

Police said the woman reported she was with two men when she was apparently forced into a light colored vehicle, driven some distance, and released by the male driver. Her companions did not pursue the vehicle but have since issued formal statements, police said.

Police said a second vehicle picked up the woman after her release and drove her to her dormitory. Police said they hope this driver will also come forth with a statement.

The case is under investigation and police are urging anyone with information concerning the incident to call 253-2511.

In addition, Amherst Police answered 134 calls over the weekend, including 24 disturbances. They made four arrests.

Police said they are looking into a suspicious fire that occured Saturday at Brittany Manor. A mattress that had been taken from a storage area was set on fire outside the apartment complex.

Police reported two incidents of vandalism at Justin Ryan's Saturday night involving smashed car windows and broken antennas.

A long, black wool Perry-Ellis dress coat was reported stolen Friday night from a party at Townhouse apartments, which was held Feb. 18. The coat is valued at more than $400, according to police.

A Cambridge man was arrested on Amity Street about 2:55 a.m. Sunday and charged with driving while intoxicated (DWI), possession of a Class B substance (marijuana), failure to stop for a red light, and having no license in his possession.

A 22 year-old Greenfield resident was arrested Saturday at about 2:30 a.m. after he was seen driving outside marked lanes on Montague Road. He was charged with DWI.

A High Street man was arrested about 12:20 a.m. Saturday on North Pleasant Street and charged with drunk driving after he was stopped for speeding.

When men and women live together

By MELISSA K. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

As recently as 1967, college students living with a member of the opposite sex could be refused a degree, according to a psychology professor at the University of Massachusetts.

"It used to be that people were afraid to admit they cohabitated," UMass psychology professor George Levinger said. "Today cohabitation is widespread and publicly acknowledged."

undergraduate college students in the United States had lived with a member of the opposite sex. The U.S. Census Bureau reported 1,560,000 unmarried-couple households in 1980, three times the number reported in 1970.

Bruce Tsiknas, office manager of the UMass Off-Campus Housing Office said no figures are available on cohabitation at UMass because "there is no registration anyone has to go through as a tenant."

"We just don't keep data on whether anyone is married or not," he said. "No bureaucracy in the world has caught up with the reality of unmarried men and women living together."

Judging from national averages and the increasing incidence of cohabitation on college campuses, however, Tsiknas said it is probable that many of the estimated 13,000 UMass off-campus students find cohabitation a viable alternative.

"Living with guys is much more relaxed," Jane Silveira, a UMass senior political science major, said. "they're just less uptight about things like keeping the apartment clean, or if others are making too much noise."

She said living with men "also means seeing them more as friends rather than simply male."

Tim Brennan, a senior communications studies major who lives with three women, said, "Now I have good food, better than I could cook for myself."

He admitted that he and his apartment-mates do share the cooking and cleaning. He said sharing housework is a common problem whether or not roommates are of different sexes.

As for parental objections, all of the men interviewed said their parents approved of cohabitation, however, the women's answers varied.

Some women said their parents liked the added protection of male roommates. Others said their parents did not like it but had accepted it. One woman said her parents "don't mind as long as he's not my boyfriend."

According to Levinger, these differences in parental behavior towards their daughter living with a man stem from the fact that "our society has always sheltered women more than men."

"People also tend to think women are more vulnerable than men to being hurt," Levinger said.

It is a real bank'

Credit Union offers loans

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students have the opportunity to invest their money in the Student Federal Credit Union, an institution run for and by students.

The Credit Union, located in the Student Union Building, offers savings accounts, checking accounts, certificates of deposit, food stamps, and loans ranging from $300 to $8,000.

"Interest rates (on loans) are traditionally lower," loan officer and vice chair of marketing. "(It is) generally easier for a student to get a loan with us rather than other banks."

The credit union is the largest student-run credit union in the nation, said Jim McGeary, co-manager at the credit union.

"It is a real bank," said Sonai Kerllenevich, 20, the other co-manager, noting that student employees deal directly with banks.

The Credit Union began in 1975 as a business student's project, she said.

The credit union is a completely student-run volunteer organization. Anyone who would like to work in the business can fill out an application, and most students begin with limited or no experience, Kerllenevich said.

"We have a pretty good personnal department," she said. "Students generally are tellers for a semester, then move up."

In the student credit union, there are two managers who work 40 hours a week and receive six credits. Membership on the board of directors is a year long, elected position, and anyone who has an account in the credit union can vote.

There are also five committees which operate within the credit union which students can be appointed to. The heads of the committees each receive three credits.

Kerllenevich said the union's finances are regulated by both internal and federal audits. McGeary said the bank has an excellent security system, though account mix-up's "do happen on occasion," said Kerllenevich.

"Because we are a volunteer organization and student-run, we have a large turnover of student help. We are willing to help straighten it out."

"It's fun, an awesome experience, you meet lots of people," said McGeary.

Center trains students

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Correspondent

The Psychological Services Center at the University of Massachusetts provides a counseling center to the community and trains psychology students to be effective therapists.

The center, started in 1963, provides a practicum within the psychology department for clinical graduate students. It now operates with 35 graduate students supervised by the clinical division of the psychology department.

Linda Scott, a fourth year doctoral candidate in clinical psychology, said the center works with all kinds of problems and is available to the entire community. Students only comprise only 15 percent of the clientele, she said. Counseling is offered in areas ranging from couples and family therapy to individual and group therapy. In addition, diagnostic testing is administered in cooperation with the Communication Skills Department, Amherst Public Schools and learning disabilities programs.

Referrals come from all parts of the community, but the largest number comes from family, friends and self-referral, Scott said. The University Mental Health Services also recommends patients to the center.

"We offer the long-term therapy that the Student Mental Health Services doesn't have. We can complement what the Student Mental Health Services has to offer," Scott said. Length of therapy can be "anywhere from five sessions to two years depending on individual needs."

The center also sponsors an outreach family therapy program, the Learning Intervention Family Team (LIFT).

The LIFT program is unique in this area and receives referrals from the courts, community schools and the Massachusetts Department of Social Services and Mental Health.

There is also a cooperative program with the Baystate Medical Center's Pediatric Department. Diagnostic psychological evaluations are referred to the program there by Pediatrics. These evaluations are free, Scott said.

The National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) provided the initial funding for the Center, along with University support in the form of office space and supplies. The Center started charging their patients in 1974 when NIMH began to cut down their grants.

The fee is based on a sliding fee scale, determined by the client's income, number of dependents and the number of people involved in therapy, Scott said.

The Southwest Writing Center has begun its sixth year of aiding undergraduate students with writing.

Located on the first floor of Pierpont dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area, the center will be open Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. through the last week of classes.

"We offer one-on-one tutoring by trained undergraduate students for any kind of writing problems or questions," Don Benjamin, an assistant and publicist for the center, said.

"The program is strictly anonymous, no one will know who we're helping, and we'll help students with rough drafts, rewrites, understanding writing assignments or any other writing question they have," Benjamin said.

The Center is funded by the Southwest Residential College and the University Writing Program and is staffed by two supervisors and six undergraduate students.

The tutors are trained by the University Writing Program and earn three credits each semester as an English practicum.

"The tutoring is free of charge and we help students on a drop-in basis. A student doesn't have to make an appointment with us to get help," Benjamin said.

"Last semester we helped about 150 students," he said. "We usually are busiest during midterms and the end of the semester, but we're opening now because we know that people already have writing assignments that they may need help with."

Students help disabled

By GLORIA ROSADO
Collegian Correspondent

Students can gain credit for volunteer services through the human development department at the University of Massachusetts by participating in the Boltwood Project.

The Boltwood Project is a student run volunteer organization. It has recreation and leisure programs for the developmentally disabled residents of Belchertown State School in Belchertown," said Chris Diaz, Boltwood coordinator and a UMass zoology major.

This semester the program attracted 300 people but only 180 were accepted, due to a lack of supervisors, Diaz said.

"Next semester we hope to expand enrollment so we can service local community homes as well as the state school," said Diaz.

The project is running 17 different programs this semester, including several community trips, a special olympics and other recreational activities. "Basically, we do what anybody else does for leisure, like go out for dinner, for example," Diaz said.

Diaz said the Boltwood Project is also offering five seminars in the developmental fields of disabilities, institutionalization, and various other related topics. The seminars, held on Sunday nights throughout the semester, last one to two hours and will be announced in the Collegian classified ads section, Diaz said, adding that credit for seminar participation is also available through the Human Developmental Program.

The Boltwood Project originated at Amherst College with Boltwood House service fraternity.

"Fraternity brothers in conjunction with the state school organized a volunteer service to offer help to those residents in the state school. The volunteer service gradually moved to UMass because of the greater number of volunteers it was able to attract from the larger campus," Diaz said.

"That isn't true," Hegeler contended, "Erik walked me back to my dormitory (MacKimmie in Southwest) because I was alone. I saw them both, Bill and Erik. It's a damn lie what he's saying."

Hegeler is now the campaign manager for the Keller/Patrick SGA presidential effort and said that the placing of the posters was an attempt to portray her as having betrayed her former campaign worker, Dave McCarthy, Southwest Area Government co-president.

"Dave (McCarthy) had a stack of posters left over," said Hegeler, "He is roommates with Rodman Snelling who is the campaign manager of Rudolph/Dooley, somehow Collins and Eriksson got the posters."

McCarthy denied that he had the posters, "I threw them away a long time ago and Rodman, although my friend, is not my roommate, I assure you that he (Snelling) had nothing to do with the placing of the posters, I don't know who did. Collins, if he did, may have gotten them from a trash room or something."

According to Hegeler the posters were ripped down by Nitzsche, herself and Senator Peter DeLiso, who collected a six inch stack of the signs from 1 to 3:30 a.m. yesterday.

"I think the whole thing's pretty funny," said Powers, who will graduate in June and is not involved with the SGA.

Nitzsche said Collins' actions demonstrated "low moral ethics and simply bad taste." He said the Senate will consider a motion on Wednesday expressing dissatisfaction with Collins. "It was a direct attempt to harass Fran," Nitzsche said.

"They're my posters and I should've been consulted if they were to be put up," noted Hegeler. "What purpose did this mindless act fill? It was meaningless."

Police report fires, assault, possession

University of Massachusetts police reported that at 12:36 a.m. Sunday a fire was discovered in a basement trash can by student security personnel in Cashin dormitory. The fire was extinguished before the Amherst Fire Department arrived at the scene, but the building was evacuated for about 10 minutes, said UMass spokesperson Jeanne Hopkins Stover.

The fire was previously reported as being a false alarm.

Police responded to a fire alarm in Cance dormitory at 5:08 a.m. yesterday. Police said a student woke up to find her room full of smoke after she had fallen asleep and dropped a burning cigarette on the rug.

In other action, a 19-year-old Arlington man was arrested outside of Coolidge dormitory and charged with possession of alcohol while under age, possession of an altered license and possession of a class B substance (cocaine), police said.

DISHPAN HANDS — Student employees make up a majority of the Dining Common work force.

By LYNNE BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

Scraping dishes, serving food, and sweeping floors are jobs for more than 1,500 students at the University of Massachusetss dining commons.

For most students, the D.C. is a place to eat, but for some students employed by University Food Services it is a source of money and a place to make new friends.

Although Assistant Director of Operations, Richard Rossi said most students prefer serving food, students interviewed preferred the dishroom. The dishroom is where 90 percent of all new employees begin their career with the D.C., Rossi said.

Debbie Warsaw, a College of Arts and Science major from Hingham, said she dislikes "getting all gross" and "the obnoxious people who stick butter on their trays." But she likes the "relaxed atmosphere" and the people she worked with in the dishroom.

The majority of dishroom workers would not change their position if offered a position on the serving line because, like Glenn Penna, is a HRTA major from Brockton, they say the work in the dishroom is easy. But Rossi said all work in the food services is challenging.

"Food service is a tough business," he said.

Although all students interviewed agree the best thing about their job is "definitely the pay check," meeting new people ran a close second.

Susan MacNamara, a CASIAC major from Weston, said "the cleanliness surprised me," and is one of the job's better characteristics.

Among the student employees dislikes were the "messes people leave on the tables" and the fact that it is a "mindless job" with monotonous activities.

Students at the D.C. are directed by a student supervisor, and Rossi said "students getting orders from students" is a good system. "Students settle in quite dependably," he said.

Most students appear content with their job. Rossi says this may account for a small turnover of workers in the dining commons. The biggest problem is work study students running out of money allotted to them from the government, Rossie said.

A look at the new populism

THE ESTABLISHMENT vs THE PEOPLE
By Richard A. Viguerie
Regnery-Gateway
262 pages, $12.95

By STEVEN P. BARRETT
Collegian Staff

Is the United States ready for a new surge in populist-style political activity? Yes, according to conservative-populist publisher, direct mail fundraising expert and author Richard Viguerie.

Viguerie's brand of populism is unique and interesting. He calls for a non-elitist, conservative populist revolt to shake the foundations of society. But in order to understand what Viguerie means by non-elitist, we must have an understanding of what he means by the "establishment elite:"

"By the establishment elite, I mean the class of persons with unusual access to the political process whether gained through enormous power or social status or through an old-boy network. It is characterized by the belief that people in general are not smart enough to manage their own affairs, therefore, that the government should select intelligent, qualified persons to run society—preferably so it seems, those bearing advanced degrees and other special credentials from eastern establishment institutions."

Viguerie carefully and expertly criticized "Big" government, business, banks, unions, education, law and the media. Since this paper serves an academic audience, I will concentrate on the subject of "big education."

The author sharply contends that throwing more money into the coffers of the educational establishments will not increase students' performance. (The recent findings about SAT scores in New Hampshire, a state which spends the lowest amount for education, bears him out.) The liberal National Education Association (NEA) came under attack: "The National Education Association concerns itself mainly with its own selfish interests and influencing national politics. State legislators who are otherwise staunch conservatives quake in their boots at the prospect of antagonizing the NEA."

In all fairness to the local NEA affiliation, University Staff Association (USA/MTA), its record hardly resembles selfishness. But Viguerie is, in my opinion, correct in his assessment of the national and statewide influence of the NEA upon local education. The NEA's state affiliate the liberal Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) has the state legislature in its firm grasp. Woe to any conservative politician who dares to cross his sword with this interest group. Ed King, the conservative-populist former governor, certainly felt the wrath of the MTA in 1982.

Viguerie also touched base at UMass/Amherst by expressing sentiments conservatives have long felt perhaps with some justification: "Whether a college is public or private, its faculty may be dominated by the radical left. For example, the Chairman of the economics department at the American University is a Marxist, as if half the economics faculty of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The explosion of 'women's studies' courses would be laughable but for the use of such classes to promote radical politics."

There are parts in the book where the author appears to delve into moralizing too much, but Viguerie's basic interest and message is in my opinion good. On the whole, The Establishment vs. The People is a much better book than his first major publication, The New Right: We're Ready to Lead. The Establishment... is well-documented, clearly written, and superbly illustrated through the use of a whole chapter of cartoons which display common frustrations felt by many people, including non-populists.

Many liberals and some conservatives who believe that a closed-knit and select group of "experts" should have greater say over our lives will find this book unappealing.

But the present-day Hamiltonians (or, as they would say at Amherst College, the "genetically gifted") will have a hard time defending their views against Viguerie's sound Jeffersonian logic. Pick this book up: it's a refresher course on what American socioeconomic and political values can and I believe should be.

A need to brake barriers

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to the editorial by Don Lipper, entitled "The Guilt of a Non-Rapist". In it Mr. Lipper related his feelings of frustration concerning rape. I find Mr. Lipper's editorial to be highly commendable---both for his sensitivity on the issue of rape and for stepping forward to communicate his opinion.

However, I feel that the way in which he ends his editorial paints a more dismal picture of humankind than what actually exists. In his last paragraph, Mr. Lipper states that he feels ashamed of his sex and unable to look any woman in the eye. The tone of this paragraph suggests that humanity will forever be divided--- men on one side, women on the other--- and nothing will bring us together. I have more faith in humanity than to believe that.

Mr. Lipper made an observation about "that thing in the dark"---men---that women fear. Women have to fear all men initially because the rapist is an unknown man. This does not mean that we fear and suspect the men that we have grown to trust, love, or care for.

I appreciate Mr. Lipper's empathy toward women and rape, however, I feel that he is selling himself short. Most women are not angry with all men. We are angry with rape and rapists. There is always the fear of rape which makes us defensive. I do not feel that the "heavy burden of a barrier" will "forever separate" men and women. I think there is more hope than that. I do feel that if more men were as enlightened on the topic of rape as Mr. Lipper obviously is, that barrier could weld itself a lot closer.

"Rocky" review — on the rocks?

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to the review of THE ROCKY MIDNIGHT EXPERIENCE by Andy Gordon, which was published in the arts section Feb. 25. I feel that this article was not only badly written but also contained many inaccuracies concerning the show, and the people who worked on it.

Many times Mr. Gordon referred to what he called the "lack of professionalism" in relation to the actions of the group. An example of this would be our pre-show warm-up, which he suggested be either backstage or downstairs. What Mr. Gordon did not realize is that our backstage consisted of a six by fifteen foot space and that one purpose of the warm-up is to acquaint the cast with the stage so that they do not hurt themselves during the performance.

As far as professionalism goes I seriously wonder about your own Mr. Gordon. Anyone who shows up "cocked" at a performance which they are planning to critique can't be considered very professional either. Mr. Gordon also expected to see an exact replication of THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW. If we were going to do that we would have said so. Even though he complained about not being able to throw things (which is incredibly moronic anyway since your throwing things at live actors, not a screen) and that certain props weren't the same as the movie, he still expected the cast to have different interpretations of their characters, (I wonder if Mr. Gordon was still "cocked" when he wrote his article).

Even though there were some good things that Mr. Gordon did say about the show, there were a number of remarks that were just not acceptable and I feel that the Collegian editors should pay more attention to what is going into their paper so that the reporting in it can be seen as seriously written articles, and not a bunch of half-assed reporting.

Porn and violence link argued

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to a Feb. 29 article entitled Porn and Violence Linked. The article stated there was "statistical proof" of such a correlation, yet no concrete evidence was given. The article began with a description of Hustler pictorial entitled "Dirty Pool," in which a cocktail waitress is raped on a pool table while other patrons look on. It then mentions the infamous New Bedford incident of similar nature. The obvious implication is that the men involved in the New Bedford rape were influenced by the Hustler pictorial, yet it is later mentioned that "there is no direct proof the six men accused of gang-raping the New Bedford were influenced by Hustler..."

If there is no direct proof, then this "evidence" cannot be used to support the claim being made here. We don't know if the accused even saw the pictorial, so how can it be implied that they were at all influenced by it? Obviously it cannot be so implied.

Also, the article mentions that "studies indicate connections between rape and violence and pornography..." The only study later explained involves two groups of UCLA males. One group was shown erotic films containing violent content, the other group was shown erotic films without. However, no specific data on the results of this experiment is given in the article, only an ambiguous claim that "people are getting messages that violence is okay and women are available for mens' "use". What were the results of this experiment? Did the men who viewed violent pornography later go out and violate every woman in sight, as this article implies they would? I tend to doubt it. Contrary to popular feminist opinion, most men, especially those in college, have at least some degree of rationality and morality.

I am in no way attempting to understate the issue at hand. Violence against women is both an unfortunate and deplorable reality, both here on campus and in society. However, this article labels pornography as a cause of this violence, but provides no valid proof to substantiate this claim. If such proof exists, I, for one, would like to see it. If not, I would appreciate not seeing such insubstantial articles in the future.

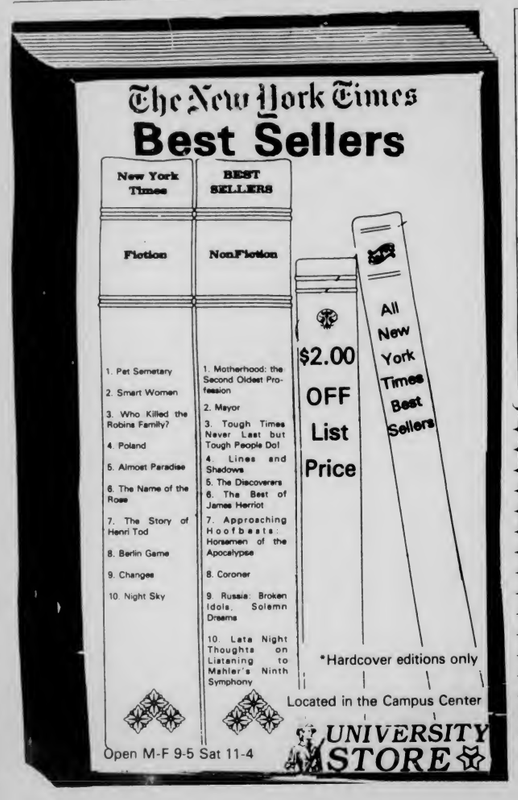
Sensitivity and fairness

To the Editor,

I continue to be amazed by the seemingly inexaustable ability of some people at UMass to take offense at the most trivial matter.

Take, for example, the case of a Mr. Carlyle, who, in last Monday's Collegian urged the removal from the campus center of a painting that has been there for over 20 years.



Apparently Mr. Carlyle has deemed said painting offensive and thus feels justified in ordering the Trustees to get it out of there, right now and no nonsense.

For further amusement consider the case of a one Elsworth Young. While shopping in Sears, Mr. Young managed to attract the suspicion of some security guards and upon leaving was asked to submit to a brief search. Mr. Young didn't quite agree with this and therefore reasons that Sears now owes him $225,000.

As someone with over two years of experience in retail management I know how serious a problem shoplifting can become. If a store has to worry about someone suing them every time they think they are being robbed, they won't have much of a store left. If, by some flouting of the justice system, Mr. Young wins his farce I shall promptly quit my job and act suspicious, thus insuring my financial future.

I'm quite sure that Carlyle, Young & Co. have already tried and convicted me of being an insensitive racist or some such. Unfortunately the fact remains that too many people have been using the sad racial situation in this country to create special interest groups that get a bit out of the realm of logic in making demands. Don't get me wrong, there is a very real problem faced by minorities in this country. It's just a shame that some people have to give such a bad name to those trying to really do something about it.

Disobedience: a way out

If the American public, Congress, and the foreign policy establishment were to adopt the Kissinger Commission's recommendations for short-term aid and long-term U.S. involvement in Central America, our country's political integrity, already dangerously undermined by our military support for corrupt regimes, would suffer a further blow it can ill afford to pay.

The Kissinger Report is the product of an all-male, elitist view of the region, a view lacking grassroots experience and contacts there. The Report shows a disproportionate concern for the Soviet Union and almost no awareness of the indigenous struggles of Central Americans for peace and justice, not in the shadow or under the aegis of Cuba. The Report fails to disclose the fact that the biggest "outside interference" comes from the U.S., which pays 40 percent of the Salvadoran budget, directs where it can the war against the insurgents, deploys contras against Nicaragua, and creates a huge military build-up and base in Honduras.

Contrary to the Kissinger Report, it is the governments of El Salvador and Guatemala — not Nicaragua — that have murdered tens of thousands of their citizens with no one brought to justice. Yet the Report characterized them as democratic and the insurgents as Communist proxis of the Soviet Union. Glaring but representative omissions in the Kissinger Report include no mention of Augusto Sandino (who is to Nicaragua what Lincoln is the United States) and no awareness of the activist role of the church in the region.

Frances Crowe

What alternative analysis and policy for Central America would represent the hopes of the 90 percent of the people there who are poor and suffering, and would offer a solid basis for peace and genuine development? As American citizens we need to promote proposals that the U.S. move away from a military approach and toward one centered on negotiations. In a recent analysis of Central American policy, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace suggests that the best vehicle for negotiations is the Contadora group — Mexico, Venezuela, Columbia, and Panama — who need American support and not condescending dismissal as delivered by the Kissinger Report. Other proposals for regional stabilization and development are being promoted by groups like PACCA, (Policy Alternatives for the Caribbean and Central America).

In order to support alternatives to militarism, express our concern for and solidarity with the people of Central America, and protest current government policy there, we are urging area residents to join us in a bus trip to Washington, D.C. as part of Central America Week (March 18-25). The bus will leave Northampton March 19th before midnight and arrive in Washington the morning of the 20th. We will have briefings on Capitol Hill, attend a major rally on this National Day of Advocacy on Central America, and as a delegation meet with our representatives and senators that afternoon. We will leave Washington at 5 o'clock to return to Northampton.

The cost of the bus trip is $30.00, and there is scholarship help for those with limited incomes. For further information call American Friends Service Committee, 584-8975.

Anger over "irradiation of food"

To the Editor,

Recently the New York Times had the following headline: "Irradiation of Food Proposed to Replace Pesticides". The article related that "The Food and Drug Administration proposed today (Feb. 14) to allow widespread use of radiation to kill insects in fruits and vegetables and to prevent the spoiling of food."

If any of you feel as I do, that this proposal is unprecedented in its callous regard for the ultimate consumers of this food, ourselves, then please join me in writing to the Food and Drug Administration and expressing your disapproval. The article ended with the address of the Food and Drug Administration and the line "The agency must take account of public comments when it issues final rules, which would have the force of law."

Please, write: Food and Drug Administration

Student input is important

Elections for Student Government president are next Monday and Tuesday, and tonight UMass students have the opportunity to hear all the candidates participate in a debate and define their positions on important issues.

The debate will be held at 8 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center, and will be broadcast by WMUA 91.1 FM, and filmed by Union Video. The candidates will be asked questions by a panel of Collegian staff members and by other candidates. It is extremely important that students take the time and listen to what the different candidates are saying. As the moderator of a recent debate between the candidates said, there is a clear choice in this election. There are differing opinions on almost every issue, and it is up to students to find out who is saying what, and support those who offer the most in terms of student leadership and representation.

The debate is most important because with such a short election time (3 weeks) and a limit of $250 campaign funding for each party, many of the candidates' stances on important issues will not be adequately heard. But they will be heard tonight.

As it is every year, the Student Senate is at a crucial time, with the election of the office of President, Speaker, and Treasurer, to name a few, coming in a short time span. The people that we elect will be the voices of student concerns for the next year, AND the winner must be elected as a representative of students, not as the candidates that have the most attractive posters and catchy slogans.

So take the time and effort, and listen to the debate on WMUA, 91.1 FM, at 8 p.m. Or better yet, come and watch the debate yourself, and maybe even ask a question that you haven't heard answered by the candidates yet.

Disillusioned with Zero

Today, I learned two really valuable lessons. I had to see my Academic Dean about some bureaucratic slush and his receptionist (let us call her Zero for efficiency, shall we) was on the phone. She was speaking quite informally with the person on the other end. When I walked in she said into the phone, and I quote, "Well, I have to get back to doing nothing." Granted, I am taking this sorely out of context, yet the continuum of its interpretations is not very broad. I held my smile firmly in place (I did have to get a signature) and she went back to her conversation. Finally, she asked the person on the other end to hold on and without looking at my cute little form in triplicate, told me, "Take that to Room 102," and thus, she proceeded to laugh. Now, mind you, this was not nervous giggling — my ears heard sadistic, "I blew her away, didn't I" laughter. And, yet, mostly out of shock at such blatant abuse, I did not falter and proceeded to Room 102 where I was told to wait till 1:00 p.m. when Allah himself, the Dean, would arrive. A pain to wait, but Receptionist no. 2 was nice (maybe just in comparison?) and we all gotta eat.

Well, as I waited, I got a chance to think and this is when my first lesson of the experience was learned. As I paced, I worked on understanding the psychology of Zero's attitude and resulting behavior. My conclusions: Zero is bored. So, why doesn't her lack of motivation create a need for her termination? — because, her attitude and behavior is perfect for the bureaucracy's efficiency and continued "success" — and I know I finished my business as quickly as possible and was ready to drop every course and move to Nebraska. And, you see, if I had, or less extremely, become so angry as to detach myself from the system there would be "one less egg to fry," so to speak.

Paula R. Jewell

So, with one lesson learned, let us move to Lesson no. 2...To pick up where I left off, I was just about to enter Allah's Kingdom. And this I did. I entered the kingdom and never has such a wave of intimidation vacuumed my reasoning ability so thoroughly. I sat down and shakily handed my triplicate to "Him." He looked across the desk, down at me. I only remember images of massive facial flesh, big dark eyes, big teeth, a big portrait of someone important, and a desk the size of the Fine Arts Center. I sat there stunned and did not realize that he was signing my form without even clearing his throat. You see, it did not matter. Lesson Two: intimidate and you can do all. He could have told me to transfer to Siberia State and I would have asked 'how soon?'!

Only after I had left did I fully realize what had happened. Then, I got really angry. This is it. I have had it. Does anyone on this campus really care about my human concerns? No, because, let's face it, it is much more efficient to be understood as a series of characters. Whether it be a name or number — who cares? It is all the same to them. I am simply a "student." You know, when you screw up, they do not even care why...maybe your fiance said "Aloha," or you have a mental block about sciences, or your grandmother has warts...they do not have time to care, because you, 9999999 are simply a 0000000 if you can't cut it in Chemistry or Accounting or whatever. But, you know, I could almost understand why this despicable condition exists — I could almost accept it, but for two reasons I cannot: 1) it is so extreme, and 2) the people who don't care do not even have the guts to admit it! They are just cold and abusive and wait for those of us who have "bad attitudes" and "weak constitutions" to bite it, and never breathe a word of "weeder course" to anyone!!

Is observing a person's reaction to scalding water the only way to tell if he/she is properly able to handle the kitchen? Whatever happened to discussion, or evaluation, or "challenge and support?" School is not supposed to be unending consideration of the potency of one hundred aspirin by students. Gee, I wonder why the incidence of sexual violence, drug abuse and suicide has shown a marked increase "here at the University?"

I have written this letter because I would like the "administration," the faculty and any staff people to realize that we, the students, are here out of choice. We chose to get an education and to further enhance our development here. And when we come to you, we come in need. This university is here for individuals who are students. If it weren't for us, you wouldn't be here, and besides, how do you feel when you go home and review the day? Granted, not every professional on campus is guilty of the above mentioned, but if you do not feel very satisfied or have trouble sleeping, maybe you are bored or are here for the wrong reasons and need to disrupt the bureaucracy.

FALL 1983 DEAN'S LIST

The following undergraduate students have qualified for the Dean's List, Fall Semester 1983. They have earned a semester average of at least 3.5 with twelve or more graded credits. Since fewer than 15% of the University's undergraduates have met these standards, these Dean's List students richly deserve our esteem and best wishes.

Joseph Duffey, Chancellor

Press Releases

The Office of Public Information will prepare and issue a press release to your hometown newspaper regarding your academic achievement. This will automatically be done for in-state residents. Out-of-state students are advised to contact that Office for further information. Please also contact that Office if you do not wish a release to be issued. The Office is in Munson Hall, 545-0444.

Parent's Day

A special program for the parents of Fall 1983 Dean's List students will be held on Saturday, April 7, 1984, on campus. There will be an all day series of academic and cultural programs providing them with an opportunity to sample the University's educational offerings and diversity. An awards luncheon is included. Invitations, with details, will be sent to Dean's List students' parents at your permanent home addresses. (In the event an additional parent invitation should be mailed, please contact the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore, or call 545-2684.)

The Dean's List is published by the Dean of Students Office and is based on grades received, corrected, and recorded by February 22, 1984. If your name is not listed and you believe you qualified based on the stated criteria, please contact this Office.

University of Masachusetts at Amherst
Motto Contest
$100 prize
Deadline: April 13, 1984

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is sponsoring a Motto Contest. The purpose of this contest is to create either an English motto, eventually to be turned into Latin, or a Latin motto, that reflects the educational mission of the Amherst campus. Contestants are encouraged, though not required, to research this motto. For example, the speeches of current or former Presidents or Chancellors of the University or annual reports, may be consulted.

All entries become sole property of the University and entry constitutes permission to the University to use winning motto as it deems appropriate.

CONTEST RULES:
1. Entry may be in English or Latin. If English, the motto must lend itself to translation into Latin.
2. Mottos are limited to no more than five words.
3. Entrants must be affiliated with the University of Massachusetts at Amherst as: students, faculty, employees, alumni.
4. Members of the screening committee, and their families, are excluded from entering.
5. One entry per person.
6. A prize of $100, for the best entry, will be announced April 29, 1984.
7. In case of duplicate entries, the prize will be shared.
8. Entries will be submitted by mail and must be postmarked no later than April 13, 1984.

Entry blanks are available in the Classics office, 528 Herter Hall and should be returned by mail to:

Women gymnasts defeat Rutgers

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — The problems with sports such as figure skating, diving, boxing (when a knockout does not occur), body building, and gymnastics is that no matter how hard the athletes train or how well they perform, who wins and who loses is decided by judges.

Unfortunately, the opinions of judges are highly subjective and often erratic, as illustrated by the fourth place finish of ice dancing pair Blumberg-Seibert in the recent Olympics and by the low scores this past Saturday as the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team bested Rutgers, 165.05-156.45.

The victory was expected, but the low score was a shock to the Minutewomen (10-6) and hurts their chances to make the ECAC Championship and the NCAA East Regional.

The 165.05 team total snapped a string of four 170 plus meets for the Minutewomen. UMass had not scored so low since the Maryland meet of January 28, where a travel-weary squad, minus senior all-around Robin Low, could only manage a 164.60.

"The judges refused to look at any of our inquiries (protests). The low scores really had an effect mentally on everyone," said UMass Assistant Coach Elizabeth Marino.

UMass sent inquiries to the judges on the scores of the vaults of Chris Cloutier (an 8.0 for a handspring on-full twist off), Elizabeth Janney (an 8.2 for a half twist on-twist and a half off), and Lisa Griffin (an 8.2 for a full twist on-full twist off). Cloutier and Janney usually score at least a half point higher while Griffin usually scores seven tenths higher. The judges ignored the inquiries.

In the uneven parallel bars event, Pancoast did a clean set and finished first (9.55). Her teammate, Tricia Harrity was second with an 8.25 while Minutewoman Cloutier tied Staudt and Holly Neiniz of Rutgers for third at 7.95. At the halfway point, UMass led Rutgers 81.60-79.20.

The balance beam event saw Harrity get a 9.05 (a stupendous achievement considering the judges) and first place. Pancoast tied Durand of Rutgers for second with an 8.15. Minutewomen Low and Janney tied at 8.05 for third.

In the floor exercise event, the Minutewomen swept the top three spots. Low, as usual, finished first with a 9.5.

UMass' Tricia Harrity on the uneven parallel bars earlier this season. Harrity won the all-around this past Saturday at Rutgers.

Griffin came in second with an 8.65, an unusually low score for her. Harrity was third at 8.6. The UMass team total for the event was 42.60. Rutgers total was 39.45.

The Minutewomen also swept the top three spots in the all-around—Harrity (39.90), Low (33.75), and Pancoast (33.30).

UMass now travels to Providence, R.I. for the Atlantic 10 Championship.

"We needed this meet (Rutgers) for a good qualifying score (for the ECAC Championships and the NCAA East Regional). The Atlantic 10 Championship is our last chance," Marino said.

Minutewomen finish season with loss to WVU

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team wrapped up their season this weekend as they lost a tough one in the first round of the Atlantic Ten Championships to West Virginia University, 73-65 at Penn State.

"I felt as though we really played well. We did all the things we needed to do. We made their forwards and big kids handle the ball the majority of the time," said Coach Barbara Stevens.

Barbara Hebel, who was named to the Atlantic Ten All-Conference second team, played a very good game in scoring 20 points. But both she and Karen Fitzgerald, two of UMass' most effective players received their fourth personal fouls early in the second half and saw limited actions for the rest of the game.

Fitzgerald scored 14 points (6-11 from the floor) and pulled down 11 rebounds in just 28 minutes of play, because of her foul trouble. Wendy Ward also played a good game in her final game as a Minutewoman as she contributed 12 points, six assists and four steals.

"With West Virginia keying on Hebel, Wendy being able to contribute that much for us helped," said Stevens.

Karen Damminger played six minutes in the second half, but was limited because of injuries. Rebecca Kucks added eight points, five rebounds and four assists, and Jerrie Bernier had seven points, six rebounds and four assists. Mary Marquedant played a good game coming off the bench and scored four points.

"It was a matter of us not having enough scoring power. They had more scoring off their bench. It was a very good, close game all the way through. The people in the stands commented on how much better they felt we had played compared to last year," added Stevens.

The hoopwomen shot very well from the free throw line, hitting on 17 of 19 for 90 percent. Unfortunately, they only shot 39 percent from the field, which was still higher than West Virginia's (34 percent), thanks to some good defense. The two guards played man-to-man on their high scoring guards while the forwards made a triangle up front.

UMass tried to make Olivia Bradley, WVU's leading scorer and an A-T All-Conference first team starter, shoot from the foul line. They forced her to shoot 4-15 from the field, but she hit 11-16 from the foul line and ended up with 19 points and 15 rebounds. Alexis Basil, who was named to the A-T all-rookie team scored 16 points, but Georgeann, an A-T second team starter at center was held to only six points and five rebounds.

West Virginia lost their next game in the tournament to Penn State, while Rhode Island upset Rutgers, but lost to Penn State, who was tough at home in the championship game, 94-64, and received an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

The Minutewomen finished seventh in the conference with a final 10-17 mark, but Coach Stevens was not disappointed with her team's finish.

"I think it was a good year for us. We accomplished a lot of things that we set out to do. I know for 40 minutes, no matter who they play, they will play their hardest. We are re-establishing ourselves as a team, not a walk-over. I feel proud of the kids. Everyone went out with a good feeling and felt good about this year. It ended on a good note," concluded Stevens.

Swimmers set team records at New Englands

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team struggled to an eighth place finish (out of thirty) in the New England swimming championships, a three day event that ended on Saturday.

The Minutemen tallied 154 points, far behind Williams College, the team that won the competition with 527.5 points. Of the winners, UMass Coach Russ Yarworth said, "They were impressive. They had up to four swimmers in the finals of each race. Their depth is tremendous."

Of his own team's performance Yarworth reflected, "We swam great on Thursday, poor on Friday, and well on Saturday."

On Thursday, Paul McNeil contributed to the team's strongest day of performance with an 11th place finish in the 1650-yard free-style. Phil Surette swam to a ninth place finish and a University of Massachusetts record time in the 400 Individual Medley. In the 500 Free Mark Surette took sixth and also established a new UMass record.

Throughout Friday and Saturday, Minutemen performances varied. In the 100-yard Breaststroke, Neil Kinnon established another UMass record with his fine effort. Mark Surette did the same as he rewrote the UMass record for the 100-yard Backstroke with his sixth place finish. In the 400 Medley Relay the UMass foursome of Mark Surette, Neil Kinnon, Chris Clarke, and Chris Porter placed one second out of first place and ended up 4th.

Chris Clarke placed tenth and 11th in the 100 and 200 Butterfly respectively. Chris Porter finished in 11th place, a fact that frustrated Yarworth.

"I'm disappointed for him, not in him. He has a history of not doing well in the big meets. He was very tight, very nervous. He didn't come close to the time he had against Amherst (the meet in which Porter set new records in the 100 and 200 Free)," he said.

But Yarworth was satisfied with Mike Hoover's 11th place finish in the 200 Breast. This performance netted Hoover, a freshman, his first UMass record. "It was one of the best swims of the day," stated Yarworth.

Although they did not finish high in the standings, many Minutemen swimmers established personal bests for the season. In all, 33 swimmers gave their best efforts of the year.

In the diving competition, UMass did not place in the 1 meter diving, however, John Macurdy placed seventh in the 3 meters earning the Minutemen a crucial twelve points. With those twelve points missing, UMass would have finished ninth in the competition behind UNH.

Yarworth said he was displeased with the team's efforts in the 200's. He also felt that his team took the meet too seriously. "I think athletes perform well when relaxed. If you get too serious then you get too big a let down. This creates tension and athletes don't do well when they are tense."

Of the season, which saw the Minutemen finish 6-4 in dual meet competition, Yarworth said, "I'm proud of these kids, the way they are improving. So many of the swimmers are pleased with what they're doing too. They've set goals with themselves and not against other people. And they've had fun. They've kept in mind that swimming is secondary to school."

With Yarworth, along with many other coaches, the ending of one season merely brings on the next. "We'll be doing some spring swimming and conditioning and trying to get everyone's head in the right direction," he stated.

Smith, Hampshire protest with sit-ins

Smith students against planned dorm changes

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—About 20 Smith College students staged a day long sit-in at the college president's office yesterday to protest what they feel is a lack of student in put in a decision to alter the structure of a dormitory they say is a haven for lesbians and feminists.

Students also marched outside the building with picket signs, reading "lesbians and straights together" and "we are Smith women, not Smith daughters."

The January decision to convert Hover House, one of two cooperative dormitories among 34 traditional halls, was two years in coming, said Smith College spokeswoman Ann Shanahan. Administrators are anticipating a lack of 45 spaces in the residence halls next fall, and Hover residents were warned they must maintain full occupancy of their house to remain a cooperative, she said.

The 16 bed house now has only two openings, but its turnover is high and it is a "very fluid situation," Shanahan said.

But students contend the administration had other motives besides vacancy concerns in their action.

Robin Lloyd, 21, a senior Hover resident and former student coordinator responsible for running the house, called the dormitory a "safe place" where lesbian as well as straight feminists and activists "can get away from the stringent social scene of the traditional small houses."

"As a group, we're threatening, and they (administrators) want to have the students spread out so they can keep track of them" she said. "It's a very controlled campus."

Linda McRoy, another senior, said students met Monday with college President Jill Conway, who told them the decision was irrevocable, but that other types of alternate housing at the school where almost all students are required to live on campus throughout their four years, could be discussed next year.

"We did feel it was a lesbian issue and she (Conway) continually denied that," McRoy said. "To support a women's college you have to support lesbians, it goes hand in hand. The population (of homosexuals at Smith) is the same percentage as at any college in the country, but because we're a women's college, people consider it more threatening here."

Shanahan denied the allegation that the action was taken to disperse lesbians on the campus.

"Smith in its entire 109 year history has bent over backward to accommodate everybody's lifestyle and we will continue to do that," she said. "These issues arise and people have different perceptions of what's happening. (But) there are some decisions that have to be made in the course of administrating a college that don't necessarily require a lot of student input."

Traditional academics opposed at Hampshire

More than 300 Hampshire College students staged a sit-in yesterday outside a closed faculty meeting, protesting what they claim is a lack of student input in decisions concerning a possible tightening of the school's academic requirements.

Sit-in organizers opposed the faculty's seizure of authority to vote on proposals establishing minimum academic standards at Hampshire, a private college with non-traditional graduation requirements. Such authority normally rests with the combined student/faculty senate.

About 100 of the demonstrators later entered the closed meeting, which was immediately adjourned. At a subsequent open "community meeting" attended by most faculty and protestors, a faculty committee was established to work on new academic proposals to be presented at another general meeting next week.

A Student senator, Michael Current, said that "although they have the constitutional authority to do this, it's unprecedented (in the school's 14 year history) for the administration to disenfranchise the student body."

Current said he thought the administration, in an attempt to obtain faculty approval of a petition disempowering the senate, misled faculty into believing that stricter academic guidelines were necessary to meet U.S. Department of Education conditions for financial aid.

But a number of students claimed to have heard acting college President Penina Glazer say that the Reagan Administration would accept "anything we give them" in terms of minimum standards.

"If they'll take anything, why do they want to start out giving the maximum standards?" asked student Vines.

Glazer would neither confirm nor deny that she had made such a remark, but said she did not think teachers had been misled by the petition: "I think the faculty can read."

Some student leaders suggested a "ploy" Glazer's administration to "traditionalize" Hampshire, to move away from the informal, individualized, "alternative" academic atmosphere that has been the school's hallmark since it opened in 1970.

Student senator Julianna Smith cited a report she said was prepared by an administration-hired consultant and leaked to the student body from a previous closed faculty meeting by a faculty member. The report recommended more conventional course and major requirements, particular-

Proposal would increase tuition

By ANNE McCORY
Collegian Staff

A proposed policy which could increase tuition at the University of Massachusetts by as much as 15 percent next semester will go before the state Board of Regents of Higher Education next week, following a planning committee vote yesterday to recommend the proposal.

The meeting drew student representatives from public colleges across the state, whose comments focused on the "need to examine and come up with alternatives to the policy," said student senate Public Policy Committee chair Fran Pheeney, one of the students representing UMass.

While Pheeney said she "attacked" the proposal in her comments to the regents, she said the committee was "open and receptive to changes, and changes will be made" in the policy before it is passed by the full board.

Pheeney said Public Policy reviewed financial aid and other records in preparation for the meeting, and noted that tuition has already increased 95 percent in the past three years, while federal financial aid benefits have shifted from grants to loan and work study programs.

Pheeney said she also challenged the issue of equal access tohgher education, which she said higher tuition could jeopardize for minority and underpriviliged students

At their meeting last month, the regents continued discussion on a proposal to equate the percentage of actual tuition cost students pay at the various public colleges and universities in the state. Regents Chancellor John Duff said then that schools would face an overall 12 to 15 percent increase.

At UMass, the current percentage of tuition paid is 27 percent, and under the new policy that figure would rise to 33 percent. But Pheeney said, the regents were "willing to listen to" views on this aspect of the proposal and are now "working around the 33 percent figure."

Mondale campaigners change Mass. strategy

BOSTON—Walter Mondale's campaigners want voters in Massachusetts to know more about the candidate. The other candidate, that is — Gary Hart.

Facing recent polls that move Mondale from front-runner to runner-up in the Massachusetts primary, Mondale's strategists hope to end his slide here by encouraging people to examine Hart's voting record.

"We really think Massachusetts voters have to focus on the issues," said Edward Pliner, statewide coordinator for Mondale in Massachusetts. "That's the only way we can turn this thing around."

Pliner spoke Tuesday after a new poll showed Hart with a 45-21 percent lead going into the final week of campaigning for the March 13 primary. Other polls show Hart's support cuts across traditional liberal and conservative lines. Pliner said that shows voters still don't know where Hart stands on the issues.

"Right now Gary Hart is on a roll," Pliner conceded. "People don't know anything about him except that he looks good on TV, he seems a bit trendy, says 'new ideas' and 'the future' a lot and says Walter Mondale is for old ideas."

Among Pliner's targets: Hart's support for a $10 a barrel tax on imported oil, his vote against a windfall profits tax on oil and what Pliner called late-arriving support for the nuclear freeze.

Hart's workers concede that Mondale, aided by strong labor support and endorsements from most top Massachusetts political leaders, has a stronger campaign organization.

Massachusetts also should be a natural state for Mondale, with its urban industrial base and strong union ties.

But polls indicate that union members are far less susceptible to voting instructions from labor leaders than in the past.

Hart wins majority in beauty contest primary

MONTPELIER, VT. (AP) - Sen. Gary Hart, fueling a campaign that caught fire a week ago, won a lopsided victory Tuesday night in Vermont's Democratic presidential primary. Walter Mondale looked South and said of the beauty-contest balloting: "I assume Vermont will hurt."

A CBS News poll indicated he drew support from voters under 30 years old by an 8-1 margin. He also was outdrawing Mondale among elderly voters by 2-1 and he won the union vote.

No delegates were at stake - prompting the "beauty contest" description - but Mondale had wanted to stem the Hart surge.

"New Hampshire, Maine has hurt. I assume Vermont will hurt," Mondale said. He said he would now focus only on the South, adding, "We were really not contesting Vermont. We spent little or no money there...this was one we just couldn't afford to be in."

"If I were in the White House tonight, I would be very concerned about the Hart candidacy. He represents a far more significant threat to the president than does Walter Mondale," said Oliver Henkel, the winner's campaign manager.

The win - Hart's third in seven days - gave him a clean sweep of northern New England and great momentum going into delegate-rich elections March 13 in Massachusetts and the South.

With 59 percent of Vermont's 264 precincts reporting, Hart had 21,994 votes, or 71 percent, to Mondale's 6,015 votes and about 20 percent. The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who had 2,720 for 9 percent, awaited the final returns with interest - without 10 percent of the vote he stood to lose federal matching funds in 30 days.

States to assist poor

WASHINGTON AP — The House passed a bill yesterday that would give states an extra $200 million to help the poor pay winter heating bills that rose sharply because of abnormally cold weather in many states.

"It's not an exaggeration to say this program is a matter of life and death to many low income families in this nation, especially those with high heating bills," said Rep. Richard L. Ottinger (D-NY).

The bill, passed on a voice vote and sent to the Senate, would increase to $2.075 billion the amount of federal money available this winter to help the poor and the needy elderly pay for heating their homes and apartments.

Presidential hopefuls discuss issues in debate

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The candidates for the University of Massachusetts' Student Government Association (SGA) presidency fielded questions on racism, the allocation of student funds, the need to address issues outside of campus, and the UMass administration last night at the Campus Center in the second debate of the campaign.

The three candidacies, decreased by one due to the withdrawal of John Michaud as a contender, took questions from a panel of three Collegian staff members, Bill Stepchew of WMUA radio station, and a crowd of about 30 people.

The duo of Gumby Gosselin and Camel Murphy used many of the questions to raise their own questions regarding the ability of their opponents.

"Neither of these groups have said much of anything," said Murphy, "They haven't addressed any issues, our candidacy is to make these issues get addressed."

Tim Rudolph and Donna Dooley said they would get better lighting on campus, cut student fee increases and work against discrimination. On the issue of what is a student issue, they differed sharply from the other candidates saying they would only work on issues directly involved with UMass and would ignore what they termed "international" issues.

Jim Keller and Rick Patrick, along with Murphy and Gosselin, said they would discuss such international issues on the floor of the Senate because they involve students and student issues.

All of the candidates said they would work against discrimination, pornography on campus, the rise in student tuition and fees, and that they would work for all the students.

The sharpest disagreement came on the issue of what exactly student issues were. Keller said that all issues "are student and should be discussed and a statement be made."

Gosselin said that "students can be a very major force and you can draw a boundary around the campus or the town and close your mind to these issues."

Rudolph said that "you can make all the resolutions you want...they will do no good." This drew a look of disgust from Gosselin.

On the issue of President Ronald Reagan and his policies, both Keller/Patrick and Gosselin/Murphy said they were against Reagan but Rudolph evaded the question saying the right to vote "is a sacred thing and I don't have to say who I will vote for."

A question from the crowd asked who their least favorite administrator was at UMass. Chancellor Joseph Duffey was by far the winner of this poll, drawing two votes from Gosselin and Murphy.

STUDENTS WITH SOLUTIONS—UMass Student Government presidential hopefuls discussed a variety of issues at debate in the Campus Center last night.

"Joe Duffey wants to turn this place into a B.U. (Boston University), cost and all," said Murphy, who also said Housing Director Joseph Zannini is not his favorite because he "will jerk you around every which way and not look you in the eye while doing it." The two other pairs of candidates would not answer the question, tactfully saying they could see no point in it.

There was no clear winner of the debate. Only Gosselin and Murphy used the forum to attack the other people running. Both Rudlph/Dooley and Keller/Patrick gave examples of the issues they stood for and against while Gumby and Camel said the fact they are running brings out the issues.

MILLION DOLLAR MAN—Mitch Carrier at UMass: "I don't feel handicapped, I prefer to think of myself as disabled."

UMass student wins $1 million in suit

By BARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student has accepted a $1 million settlement from the company that manufactured the football helmet he was wearing when injured and subsequently paralyzed during a 1977 high school football game.

Mitch Carrier, 23, a junior education major, sued the manufacturer, Becton-Dickinson Co. of New Jersey, claiming they did not adequately warn users of the helmet's limitations.

Initially paralyzed from the neck down, Carrier has regained some use of his hands and arms since the accident and now uses a wheelchair.

Carrier, a Beverly High School sophomore football player at the time of the injury, suffered a blow to the head during a Thanksgiving Day Game against Salem. The blow broke a vertebrae in his neck.

"When I was in the hospital in the beginning, my family and friends were very supportive and helped me a lot," Carrier said, noting that his friends later set up benefits for a trust fund in his name.

"College isn't any different for me than other people," he said, though he noted the handicapped accessibiltiy of the campus was one reason he chose to attend UMass.

But, "I don't feel handicapped, I prefer to think of myself as disabled."

A self-described "jock," Carrier said "the injury was a tough adjustment for me. I also played basketball in high school, and sometimes I wonder how far I would have gone."

Carrier said he plans to use his proceeds from the settlement to become more active again.

"This summer, Im going to look for a house near Beverly with a pool and weight room to continue my physical therapy," he said, "and I'd like to try camping with a special wheelchair, called a tricycle, that can move through rough terrain."

Carrier said he has received an initial cash settlement from the company and will be allocated the balance of the sum through structured payments over the course of his life.

"The settlement was a lot of work for my lawyers, who were great," he said. "They received less than they should have, but they are happy to see me financially secure."

Carrier, who will graduate from UMass next year, said he hopes to continue his involvement with sports as part of his career.

"I still watch basketball and football on television and some of my friends are still playing, so I go to a lot of games. Maybe I can coach someday," he said.

UMass first in country to open students for Hart office

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts claim for themselves the title of opening the first students for Gary Hart headquarters in the nation, and yesterday, State Sen. Gerard D'Amico D-Worcester, stopped by to congratulate them.

"We've been at it a lot longer than most," said Dave Nelson, co-organizer for the student organization. "We're technically the first of the kind in the country."

The UMass Students for Gary Hart was established more than a year ago, and workers have been organizing ever since.

Now that Sen. Hart (D-Colo.) has proved himself to be a visible candidate for the democratic nomination against former Vice President Walter Mondale, "they should be congratulated for having the gift of prophecy," D'Amico said.

Because of Hart's recent victories, Hart for President Campaign offices are popping up in many places, with openings in Springfield and Worcester scheduled for this week.

"We can't keep up with all the store front openings—they're catching like a prairie fire," D'Amico said.

On campus, the response to the recent Hart phenomenon has been the same, with students volunteering in droves.

"They're coming in unbelievable numbers, with at least 30 to 50 really showing promise," Nelson said.

"It's a campaign built on enormous momentum—the domino theory, and we're hoping that Vermont and Wyoming primaries come in good. This will give us the thrust we'll need for a good showing in Massachusetts on Super Tuesday," D'Amico said.

A democratic state representative from Worcester, and Co-chair of the Joint Committee on Education, D'Amico has spent a good part of the last three days in Hart's company. "When you've eaten a few meals with someone, you really get to know what they're like," D'Amico said.

D'Amico said Hart's sincerity and dedication were some of his more attractive features.

"Thousands of young people are coming forward to get involved and stay involved. It's a lot like the Kennedy (era), which is why I go into politics," he said. "Students then made an enormous contribution."

D'Amico asked the Hart for President student organizers what the candidate's victories have meant to them.

"It reaffirmed our peoples' belief in the political process. It shows that money and organization, don't rule," Nelson said.

And that was yesterday afternoon, before Hart beat Mondale by a convincing 71 percent to 20 percent in Vermont.

Effects of hormone DES are discussed

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Problems associated with the use of Diethylstilbestrol (DES), a synthetic estrogen hormone prescribed from 1941 to 1971 for women with histories of miscarriage, were addressed by Judy Norsigian of the Boston Women's Healthbook Collective last night at the University of Massachusetts.

According to Norsigian, approximately three to six million women took DES, as prescribed by a health practitioner, and that this has been "connected to fairly serious health problems" among their offspring.

"The drug companies who dispensed DES knew it was carcinogenic from experiments done with animals. They knew it would not be safe for use in women," Norsigian said.

Norsigian spoke in a lecture sponsored by The Working Women's Program and the Resource and Referral Program, both of The Everywomen's Center at UMass, titled, "Reproductive Health Issues and Women's Health Concern." Norsigian said physicians typically get their knowledge about drugs from pamphlets and literature produced by the drug companies and "are not the best educated source of information about drugs."

"The use of DES raises all kinds of questions about the drugs we take, and how the Food and Drug Administration protects us," she said.

DES daughters, women whose mothers took the drug during pregnancy, have been found to experience a high rate of miscarriage, premature babies and in one of 1000, have developed a rare form of vaginal cancer called clear cell adenocarcinoma.

According to Norsigian, this form of cancer is "very lethal", and affects many DES daughters who are in their teens and early twenties.

"Of those who survive, many have survived by losing all their reproductive organs, as well as many of the pelvic structures themselves," she said.

Norsigian also said DES sons have special problems, including testicular abnormalities and testicular cancer, although none of these problems are "serious" at this time.

Women continue the battle for equal pay

By MELISSA K. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Although working women's wages have increased considerably since the 1800s women must continue to push for equal pay, a former researcher of the Pioneer Valley Institute said yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Speaking at a slideshow entitled "Women: Yesterday and Today," Betty Hatch said the average daily pay for women was one dollar in the early 1800s compared to an average of five dollars and fifty cents an hour today.

Although low pay was a concern, "it was the horrendous working conditions which were the complaint of most women and what led them to organize," Hatch said.

Working long hours for half the pay of men was "bad enough", said Hatch, but women "were also subject to illnesses such as cholera, dysentery, and lung diseases from toxic fumes."

She said many women lost their babies due to poor working conditions and in 1840, 426 women died after contracting some of these factory diseases.

According to Hatch, the inventions of the telephone and the typewriter helped women move out of the factories into clerical positions in offices, which, at that time, was male territory.

She said the move towards "equality", better working conditions, and women's involvement in the suffragette movement was slow.

"In an 1860 women's suffragette march in Boston, all of the spectators were men, Hatch said. "Women were intimidated, but the work spread and by the 1920s," when women won the right to vote "things started to change."

However, Hatch said, this change is not complete. "Today women have better working conditions and shorter hours, but we still have yet to get equal pay." Hatch said one of the main reasons women worked during the 19th century was "to make money for later doweries for marriage."

The slideshow was part of the UMass International Women's Event, a week long celebration lasting through March 11th.

ticularly in the areas of computers and sciences, so as to improve Hampshire's academic reputation, Smith said.

Dean of Students Sue Alexander, who did not participate in the meeting, said she felt the faculty was evading the real problem by seeking to traditionalize the curriculum rather than to improve on what already exists. "We should be looking at what we are," she said.

Students lobby in D.C.

Students from the five-college area are in Washington, D.C. today to take part in a student lobbying effort with the Massachusetts delegation for a bilateral Nuclear Freeze.

The University of Massachusetts Peacemakers, a Registered Student Organization, organized the day-long trip for about 40 students who are scheduled to participate in workshops on voter registration, lobbying techniques, and arms control issues. They will return late tonight.

Peacemakers coordinator David Shakespeare said lobbying with the Massachusetts delegation, to include Rep. Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) and Sen. Paul Tsongas (D-Mass.) is important "to show our support for the risks they are taking by advocating a nuclear freeze."

From 700 to 1000 students from universities and colleges on the east coast are expected to be in Washington for the lobbying day, organized by a Washington-based organization, United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

"Joke" campaign is not amusing

Much of the past week's Collegian has been devoted to the Undergrad Student Senate and whether a particular senator's behavior warrants disciplinary action.

Frankly, who cares? Most of us "average students" don't have the slightest notion of what goes on with the Collegian and student government and couldn't care less. The Collegian space presently filled with this bilge might be better utilized by highlighting student's accomplishments with prescribed academic disciplines.

But since student politics will not likely go away in the near future, I would like to put forth for student leadership a few issues that have been thus far neglected.

David Vegan

Academics:
The Student Government Association should be working to increase course flexibility by advocating for more night classes. At some colleges, classes run twenty-four hours a day. Course flexibility would not only give more students the opportunity to work during the day, but it would relieve present oversubscription in popular courses.

Telecommunications:
First, the SGA should be at the forefront of making all UMass/Amherst students computer proficient.

Possibly financed through the Housing Fee, a personal computer could be furnished for every on-campus student. Apple, Digital, and IBM would be glad to put together an attractive package and use it as an educational write off. Also, the Public policy team should be working to repeal the archaic state law that bans cable television on a state campus. Ccable T.V. has become so common, that this law could be easily overturned.

Quality of life:
The problem of increasing social awareness is not being adequately addressed. The present workshops and teach-ins on this campus are so boring that few people outside of the radicals can stomach tem. A more logical approach to reach the more mainstream student would be to run a 5-minute trailer before all CCA and Mahar movies on an aspect of social awareness. SCERA could work in conjunction with the Union Video Project to produce "trailers" on racism, sexism, etc., and they could run them before a captive audience of average UMies.

In closing, I submit that the Collegian doesn't know what its readership wants. This SGA drive about shoving matches and censoring senators interests approximately 2 percent of the student body. Unless the Collegian becomes more readable their days as the only student newspaper may be numbered.

Women's week is commemorated

In 1909, five hundred shirtwaist factories in New York City employed up to 30,000 workers, the majority of whom were immigrant women. The work was seasonal and conditions were poor. Employees paid for their needles and a fee for electricity; they paid for any damaged work and were fined if they were late; they were often charged for the boxes they sat on and for coat lockers.

Andrea Bates

In October 1909 workers met to discuss the possibility of a strike; the union estimated that only 3,000 workers would participate; instead, 20,000 workers showed up. As a result, 500 shops went out on strike and women bore the brunt of the picket line duty. Two young picketers were thrown to the ground and beaten by hired thugs. After this incident all the factories on the block went on sympathetic strike.

When the strike ended, it became apparent that women had proven themselves. They had assumed the heaviest picket line duty and had voluntarily acceptd the lowest strike benefits; they suffered most of the arrests and workhouse sentences—and all through the ordeal their strength and support never waivered.

However, workers at the Triangle Shirtwaist Company returned to work without a union agreement in February 1910, following the uprising of the 20,000. For them the strike had been lost, largely because the company hired scabs. Therefore, two of their key demands—open unlocked doors from the Triangle factory on the seventh, eighth, and ninth floors of the Asch Building to the street and fire escapes that worked—were never discussed with the firm. In March of 1911 a muffled explosion brought the optimistic and hopeful spirit generated by the uprising of the 20,000 to an abrupt tragic close. A fire broke out in the Triangle Shirtwaist Company Building. The doors to the fire escapes were all locked and hundreds of women plunged to their deaths in an attempt to escape the flames.

As a result, a demonstration was held on New York's lower east side. Joined by women active in the suffrage movement, immigrant working women raised demands for better living and working conditions, an end to child labor, and the right to vote. On March 8, 1908 International Women's Day became official.

International Women's Day was founded to honor the memory of the working women's role in this struggle; and it is on this basis that we should continue to commemorate the role of women in our history. We should look to them for inspiration in the sturgles that we face today.

Each year since 1977, a group of dedicated women has worked to insure that International Women's day is commemorated on the UMass Campus. This year a whole week of diverse events has been planned, ranging from panel discussions on Jewish Women writers, Latin and Caribbean women, Emerging Women Artists; to a martial arts demonstration and a variety of films. It is truly a broad and exciting spectrum of activities.

These events are important for all women to attend; not ony to cultivate and celebrate our strengths and talents and to share in our diversity, but to remember the struggles of our ancestral sisters and to foster within ourselves their same spirit of unity.

Andrea Bates is a member of the planning committee for International Women's events.

Review seen as homophobic

To the Editor,

I am writing this piece in good faith, hoping what I have to say will help Collegian writers and editors to learn something about how their homophobic and racist presumptions hurt readers and contribute to a less than healthy climate for the thousands of lesbian and gay students, staff and employees at the University.

Last week a Collegian record review praised a recent Eddie Murphy album, especially a cut titled "Faggots Revisited." The reviewer felt that this selection, as well as one which taunted Michael Jackson for not being "the most masculine fellow" represented Eddie Murphy "at his best." The "Faggots Revisited" piece was explained by the reviewer: "Murphy complains of having a nightmare where he goes to Hollywood and discovers Mr. T is gay. Mr. T says to him, 'Hey Boy, you look pretty good in them jeans' ".

Every gay person I have spoken to who knows of this material is outraged by it. As a gay person (white) I don't think it is funny to have gay male relationships of any color described as a joke or as a "nightmare". I cannot speak for gay people of color, but those I know share this feeling, and why shouldn't they? It is an implicitly racist presumption to assume that lesbian and gay people of color either do not exist or wouldn't be offended by the remark.

In any event, there should be no space in the Collegian for the purveying of such insulting language and stereotyping. Surely if a comedian used other epithets referring to people of color or Jews or the disabled or women there would be quick criticism from many quarters. Have the staff of the Collegian so soon forgotten the events of just two years ago when a black gay student was forced to leave the University after receiving death threats from the racist group "Utopia?"

If the editors and writers of the Collegian cannot see that the free bandying about of anti-gay epithets or the continual display of denigrating stereotypes is not harmful to all of us regardless of race or sexual orientation, then we are all in trouble.

To conclude, I should say that when I personally delivered this criticism to the Collegian I was told that if I didn't like what appeared in the paper I could write a response. This "remedy" will not undo the harm that has been done, furthermore it relieves the Collegian of any responsibility to respond to criticisms levied against it. Freedom of the press is meaningless without responsibility and accountability.

Let's See Action
Voting at UMass

In mid February the National Student Conference on Voter Registration was held at Harvard University to coordinate strategies on the nation. As this conference was hailed as the largest national student gathering in over 10 years, it fostered a rebirth of spirit and optimism among its organizers and participants in the potential power of "our" generation.

As has been well documented in the past however, student involvement in the political process even on this campus has a poor showing. For example, I was recently informed that only 20 percent of the students on this campus are expected to vote in the SGA presidential elections on March 12 and 13! The national statistics on eligible 18-24 year old voters are even more apalling. Consider that of the 47 million currently unregistered voters in the U.S., 14 million are between the ages of 18-24.

In 1980, 16 million eligible 18-24 year-olds did not vote. Lastly only 27 percent of all eligible voters in the U.S. voted in the 1980 presidential election. Imagine the potential political power our generation could have (75 million Americans were born in the 'Baby Boom" era of 1946-1964) if we could mobilize more people to simply register and vote!

It is as a result of this political apathy and potential power our generation shares that UMass Big Vote '84 was formed. In February, the campaign registered 3,200 new voters here on campus. MassPIRG as a part of the Big Vote coalition of several RSO groups here on campus is working specifically on a post card voter registration bill which would make it easier for many disenfranchised potential voters to register to vote.

Since only 63 percent of the eligible voters in Massachusetts alone are registered it is our aim to register the other 1.3 million. Let's not forget that Massachusetts elected a president in the 1980 national elections by less than 3,000! MassPIRG is also working to publicize polling places for the March 13 primary, help transport voters to the polling places, issue pamphlets on voter registration and political candidates, and investigate having a polling place here on campus for the national election in November.

Mel King ties in Rainbow connection

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON - The movement that began when Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on the Montgomery bus is changing the shape of American politics, said Melvin H. King at Smith College last night when he spoke on "The Rainbow Connection on American Politics: From Rosa Park to the Present."

"She made a statement that we all should make. She said, 'I am somebody.' Self definition leads to self liberation," King said.

The former state representative from neighborhoods in the Greater Boston area, King was the first black candidate to appear on the final ballot in Boston's mayoral race. He has been a professor of Urban Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology since 1971.

King explained that unity leads to power. He said Martin Luther King, Jr. came to his death when he brought poor people who were black and white together and got them carrying signs that said, "I am somebody."

"The status quo was that they played one against the other," he said.

Rosa Parks catalysed the Civil Rights movement, and the Civil Rights movement started woman's rights movement, the lesbian and gay liberation movement and peace movement, King said.

"The techniques of boycott and disruption learned in Montgomery were used to end the war in Vietnam," King said.

King said the impact of the Civil Rights Movement was strongly felt in the Boston mayoral race.

"All of the candidates came before the Civil Rights group that was holding a forum of civil rights issues. They all wanted that endorsement. The concern for that vote revealed its height when one white candidate admonished another white candidate for the racism in his campaign pamphlet--yes, in Boston," King said.

King said his Rainbow Coalition of Blacks, latinos. Puerto Ricans and whites opened up politics in Boston.

"To wear a Rainbow button meant more than support for Mel King, it proclaimed a vision for the city," he said.

The Rainbow Coalition, King said, also forced the elected mayor to live up to his promise to confront issues like racism.

King said those who are willing to unite for change hold the future in their hands.

Mel H. King addresses political issues at a press conference at the Jackson campaign headquarters in Amherst early yesterday. King later spoke at Smith about the Rainbow Connection in American Politics.

"We should understand that we can make it only if the groups are willing to come together. Black people are essential to the women's liberation movement. The Equal Rights Amendment will not be passed in this country until black people get registered and vote out the people who have frustrated the passage of the ERA in South Carolina, North Carolina, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi," he said.

King will be speaking on the "The Significance of Jesse Jackson for National Black Politics" at 8 p.m. this Thursday at Hampshire College.

Announcements

The minority and student population in Massachusetts now faces a crisis situation. The approximately 2,000 or so registered voters, many of whom are minority students have not yet been contacted in preparation for the "Super Tuesday" Massachusetts State Primary, March 13.

The Students for Jackson, Afri-Am and the Office of Third World Affairs, in collaboration with the "UMass Big Vote'84," is calling a mandatory emergency meeting for all Third World students and other interested students, university faculty and staff today at 6 p.m. in the Office of Third World Affairs, room 308 Student Union Building.

We are asking for your help in our endeavor to "Get out the vote" and help create a change in the American political system. You came out to support us when Jesse came to speak at UMass in February; we need you now, more than before.

Others have struggled and lost their lives to make sure that we have the freedom to choose our destiny by expressing our opinion through the vote. Do not let their efforts die in vain. We now have the power to determine our destiny, we now have a choice.

COME TO THIS EMERGENCY MEETING AND ONCE AND FOR ALL LET AMERICA KNOW THAT YOU'RE MAD AND YOU'RE NOT GOING TO TAKE IT ANY MORE. EVERY GENERATION HAS AN OPPORTUNITY TO SERVE ITS PRESENT AGE--OUR TIME HAS COME.

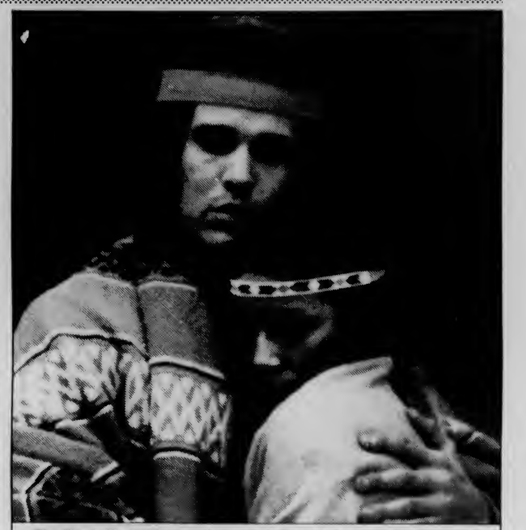
Skeleton Crew rocks

SKELETON CREW (Featuring Fred Frith and Tom Cora)
Sunday, Feb. 26
Iron Horse, Northampton



By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Last Sunday at the Iron Horse, Fred Frith and Tom Cora proved that they are two of the hardest working men in show business and, as is the American way, they are rewarded by presenting a performance worthy of their efforts.

Booked on the public's knowledge of Frith, both Frith and Cora proved to be first rate musicians, capable of ideas beyond the average imagination and also capable of presenting them. Sgt. Pepper may have been a good album, but the Beatles couldn't perform it, even if they wanted too, yet a really industrious group like the Talking Heads added musicians to their touring band and were able to convey the ideas that they wanted to get across.

But Frith and Cora didn't need to add musicians. They each played three to five instruments, sometimes two or three at a time. Frith played guitars and drums, playing the bass drum with his foot while playing the guitar and singing Cora played the cello, electric bass and the bass drum, the cymbol and some other percussion instruments. They both had tape recorders which were used to play tapes of Reagan, a preacher talking about Rock Music and it's effects, and others which were used as rhythmic background along with a synthesizer turned rhythm machine. The speeches and voices were used effectively because they are emotional tools that literally strike a familiar chord in one's mind in a way that has the same effect as movie music does. It brings out strong emotions and sets the mood very quickly.

Frith, who is considered one of the fathers of rock avante-garde, has written a number of songs which he and Cora performed, spanning a broad range of topics and music styles including the finale which started out sounding like heavy metal and ended up sounding Turkish. Some of the songs were actually soft and lyrical, a contrast to the past couple of years where he has been performing in off the cuff duets that weren't always that coherent or interesting. But these new songs are really good. Alot of the time Skeleton Crew would change the beat from measure to measure and the building effect which most groups make last five or ten minutes is played through in one or two. Cora in the meantime manages to completely transform his cello from what he learned from a student of Pablo Casals to a machine which would leave most guitarists wondering how he got that sound out of his Les Paul.

The Third World Theater Series and the American Indian Community House/Native Americans in the Arts will present Craig Kee Strete's Paint Your Face on a Drowning in a River on Saturday, March 10 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are available in the Fine Arts Center box office.

Bowie in his glory

ZIGGY STARDUST, THE MOTION PICTURE
David Bowie
(RCA Records)
By NEAL O'SHEA
Collegian Staff

Glitter. Outrageously oppressive guitar. Lude stage behavior. It's David Bowie, in his last performance in the role of Ziggy Stardust long before the tepid days of Let's Dance.

The music is the main attraction here, since the film is a lukewarm "rock-umentary". If you forget the visuals, the music shines through; it's as good as Bowie could ever deliver.

"Hang on To Yourself" is an appropriate starting point that sets precidents for all four sides of the album. There's lots of individual ingenuity from the bank, especially from guitarist Mick Ronson. His slightly controlled riffs offset beautifully those slick background vocals that are the trademark of the Bowie sound.

Following are great versions of "Ziggy Stardust" and "Watch That Man" that have that same vitality as Live at the Tower Theater, Philadelphia and Stages, two previous live Bowie discs.

Side two shows that our ever changing singer knows how to pick a good lineup. "Space Oddity" is every bit as good as the studio version, which is no mean trick considering the effects on the original. "My Death" is so wonderfully morbid that it's difficult to believe that it's from the same guy that did "Shake It."

The real proof of this pudding is side three which is almost worth the price of the whole album. "Cracked Actor" rocks with an intensity matching The Who's Live at Leeds. This is definitely the time to rotate the volume knob to the right. The offbeat vocals, crying guitar, and vaudevillian piano make "Time" one of the best songs in the bunch. "It's 9:25/Oh God/I'm still alive." What more could one ask for, except "Width of a Circle"? The band jams for a good while on this number, once again proving their worth.

Side four is the "hit" side, with "Changes", "Suffragette City" and "Rock and Roll Suicide." Bowie also does covers of "Let's Spend The Night Together," and "White Light, White Heat." (Lou Reed did it first and did it better, but Bowie's version is good at ridiculouly loud volumes.) As far as movie soundtracks go, this is a great album.

When you judge it as a David Bowie album only, not as a soundtrack, it's not bad at all. One question though; What took so long?

"A person is of more value than a world"

Amy is fourteen, feels isolated and confused, has run away once more from home . . . Miguel, a truant feels he has to fight to make his mark in life . . . Mrs. Wilson, a single parent of three small children, feels she has no one she can turn to . . .

Hoopsters hope to break out of slump

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The day of reckoning is tonight at 9 p.m on the court of the West Virginia Mountaineers in Morganstown, West Virginia.

At 9 p.m. the sports world will know if the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team can break out of their late season slump that threatens to put an ugly cap on the 1983-84 season for the Minutemen.

If the Minutemen can topple the University of Rhode Island, who had a 1-14 record on the road this season, in their Atlantic 10 preliminary round game, they will face top-seeded and undefeated (18-0 Atlantic 10) Temple in the quarter -final- Thursday.

Springtime is not the time of year to be in a slump.

Coach Ron Gerlufsen's club after running out to a 11-11 record has lost five in a row, three at home and the last four games have been foretold in the first half.

In the recent games against West Virginia, Temple, Rutgers and Duquesne, UMass has come out and played horrible in the first half, running up big deficits. UMass, in the second half, played better but they haven't pulled off the wins.

And now they face Rhode Island, who UMass beat by two, 77-75 at home and lost to in Kingston by a 76-69 score.

The Kingston win was one of the five URI had in the conference this year. The Rams posted a 62-21, 5-13 record.

Coach English, who is on the way out, will hit UMass with Todd Bozeman and Chris Compton, URI's top two scorers. Marc Upshaw, who has scored over 1,300 points for the Rams, provides ample firepower off the bench. Upshaw has been plagued with knee problems this season.

Stat-wise, URI hardly ranks anywhere, yet, they have played very well against UMass.

Horace Neysmith, third at the conference in rebounding , and the rest of the Minutemen will have to get their inside game working and sink the hoops.

John Hempel and Donald Russell have been hitting from the outside but it hasn't been enough.

The team feels that if they can get off to a good start and not fall way behind too quickly, they will have a chance of beating Rhode Island and if it comes to that, Temple.

The game can be heard on WMUA-FM, 91.1. Pregame show starts at 8:45 p.m.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS — UMass is now 11-16 and finished with a 6-12 Atlantic 10 mark, The 11-16 mark is UMass' best since the Minutemen went 15-12 in 1977-78 under Jack Leaman. Before the Duquesne game, UMass hadn't lost more than four in a row all year. URI is seeded ninth, UMass is seeded eighth.

Wendy Ward - Pointing the way for four years

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

When one hears the name of Wendy Ward, one would usually associate that name with the women's basketball team at the University of Massachusetts, where she has been the starting point guard for the past three and a half seasons.

But to really know Wendy, a lot more information and insight are needed into this all-around person, whose skills are definitely not limited to the basketball court.

Wendy is a 21-year-old senior Microbiology major from Brooklyn, New York, who is currently applying to some of the top medical schools in the East, and who hopes to be a physician someday.

Although a bit short for a basketball player at 5 feet 4 inches (she has been that height since the age of 12), she was never at a disadvantage. She first played the sport in 6th grade on a Youth League team. She followed mainly basketball, but also football and baseball, and admired Walt Frazier of the New York Knicks because he was a smooth, quick guard.

"I could always jump high, and that made me a little taller, plus the experience of playing with the guys in the neighborhood helped," said Ward.

She continued to play basketball at St. Edmunds High School for four years and also played the outfield for the softball team for two years. With basketball, she did about everything from defensive forward to guard and back. In her senior year she did it all by averaging 24 points, nine assists and four steals per game.

She came to UMass mainly for academic reasons, for the strong science program here. She was recruited by Boston University. She was given the name of UMass Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski before coming here.

"In the beginning, I didn't play much. I started the last half of my freshman season and have been the point guard here ever since. It was hard to adjust to not shooting much, since scoring came so easily. But in my freshman year, we had the biggest team in the East, and our strategy was to work the ball inside to the big person. So I didn't take the opportunity to shoot," added Wendy.

The strategy seemed to work pretty well, as the team had a 14-13 mark and gained a berth in the AIAW's. In the Northeast regionals, UMass lost to Dartmouth in overtime.

Wendy has achieved several things in her years at UMass. She is the first black woman to play for four years and become captain (for two years). Last season, she was second in the Atlantic Ten in steals with 78, eighth in assists with 87 and 18th in scoring with a 9.9 average. This season she has 94 assists, a personal high at UMass, and an 8.5 scoring average while starting all 26 games.

Her biggest thrill in a UMass uniform took place this season, when the underdog Minutewomen hosted the number one team in the Atlantic 10 last year, Penn State. Down by 16 at halftime, they rallied to win by four, with Wendy compiling eight points, eight steals and six assists.
